The Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act, P.L. 107-173, enacted May 14, 2002: This act tightened our border and visa policies by requiring the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the State Department, the FBI and Central Intelligence Agency to share information in order to identify individuals who may pose a terrorist threat to our country. In addition, the act: one, requires the State Department to issue visas and other travel documents which include biometric identifiers—i.e. fingerprints, retinal scan; two, mandates the INS to implement an entry-exit tracking system; three, requires the INS to install biometric scanners at all United States entry points; and four, provides greater access to law enforcement databases for INS and intelligence agencies. The act also increases funding for additional INS inspectors.

Secure Transportation for America Act, P.L. 107-71, enacted November 11, 2001: This act improved airport security for all United States travelers by adopting new and more stringent requirements for hiring of airport screeners to eliminate potential security risks; required airlines to install stronger cockpit doors to protect against possible forced entry into the cockpit and implemented the air marshal program to increase the presence of air marshals on all flights.

The Public Health Safety and Bioterrorism Response Act, P.L. 107-188, enacted June 12, 2002: This act provides $1 billion to State and local governments to improve planning and preparedness, $450 million to the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) to upgrade their capacities to deal with public health threats, and $1 billion to expand our current national stockpiles of medicines and vaccines. In addition, the act provides $200 million to protect our food supply and livestock and our drinking water from terrorist contamination.

rorist Bombings, a United Nations treaty that seeks to suppress terrorist bombings and the financing of terrorism, and enhances our ability to extradite individuals responsible for terrorist bombings.

While we have accomplished much, there is still much to do. Since September 11th, we all recognize that we live in a different and more dangerous world. We must unite in our continuing support for our country's war against terrorism; we live with an ongoing and serious threat to our society. We must remain vigilant in protecting our way of life and meeting the challenges ahead.

I want to take a moment and offer my prayers and condolences for those families and friends who lost loved ones on September 11th. Today we all join together, hand-in-hand, heart-in-heart, tear-in-tear, to share as a country all of the pain of September 11th. We recognize your terrible loss, we offer you our support and we give you our love. We will never forget the terrible tragedy of September 11th. We will do all we can in our prayers and in our deeds to make sure that such an attack never occurs again.

It is a new era in America and I ask for your prayers and support as we face many difficult challenges ahead. We do so with a steely resolve to never, ever let this horrible event ever occur again.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, in the year since last September 11th, there has been much debate on the Senate floor on how to stop terrorists; and there will be plenty of time in the coming months to debate what we do insofar as organizing homeland security, and how we deal with Iraq and the fanatics who want to blow us up and the like.

But on this September 11th, this Senator wants to remember the 3,000 lives lost in New York, at the Pentagon, and in Pennsylvania. Obviously their loss has been felt by their families in ways none of us can imagine. But their loss has also been felt by all Americans. As a Senator, in the last year, not a day has gone by when I haven't thought about what happened last September 11th, and what actions this Congress can take to prevent such horrifying events. September 11th has moved this nation to respond and to defend ourselves in ways that has made America stronger, I have no doubt.

In addition, I want to honor the men and women in the armed forces, who have put their lives on the line in the last year to track down terrorists in caves and everywhere else they are hiding. I honor the law enforcement officials all over this country, who protect our homeland every day. And I have great respect for the newly hired men and women of the Transportation Security Administration, who are wearing the newest American uniform to ensure the safety of our airports.

September 11th made us address our security vulnerabilities, but there is more work to be done. In the coming months, on days that are less emotional than this anniversary, I hope we remain as strong and determined to win the war on terrorism.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, many of us will spend a good deal of this day reflecting on what happened one year ago in New York, Washington, DC, and Pennsylvania. The images of horror, confusion and bravery that dominated our television screens last September will, once again, be refreshed in our minds. The raw emotion that we felt then will also be revisited. And, as is our nature, we will, again, try to rationalize why such tragedy befell our Nation. But this effort will be futile, because those who attacked us are filled with a hatred that is incomprehensible to American logic. Simply put, for us, life is a precious gift of God; to our enemy, it is utterly dispensable. So how can we constructively approach September 11, 2002? I believe that Americans can do three things today to accomplish a sense of healing.

The first step focuses on our children. No group was scarred as much by the terrorist attacks as were they. Their innocent view of the world did not contemplate the kind of evil that was perpetrated on September 11, 2001. So for them, the images of crashing planes, burning buildings, and crying adults shattered their belief in a world that was good and safe. Not only were they frightened, they were also confused about why others wanted to hurt us. Today, many children may experience the same anxiety about terrorism that they did one year ago; let us recognize that and take a moment to reaffirm to them that they are loved, that they are protected, and that the good people in the world far outnumber the bad.

Secondly, be a patriot. This can be accomplished in many ways. Flying the flag is the most recognized. But telling a service-veteran that you appreciate his or her sacrifice is equally valuable. The civic heroes of September 11th, firefighters and police officers, also deserve our recognition for selflessly responding to the needs of the country. And acts such as giving blood, helping a neighbor in need or giving to a charity are just as patriotic. All these acts have the effect of uniting us behind a common purpose and remind us that no enemy can weaken our moral fabric.

Lastly, reflect back upon these words spoken by President Bush last September 20: "We will direct every resource at our command—every means of diplomacy, every tool of intelligence, every instrument of law enforcement, every financial influence, and every necessary weapon of war—to the disruption and defeat of the global terror network." This bold commitment by the President signaled to all that the United States was entering a long struggle that would require our desire for action to be checked by patience.

Patience, of course, remains necessary, but we have achieved much in our initial response to last year's attack. U.S. military action has unseated the Taliban government that once protected al-Qaida in Afghanistan, while terrorist training camps in that country have been rendered inoperable. At home, Congress and the President are working to establish a new Department of Homeland Security to enhance coordination of our government's anti-terror effort, both Chambers of Congress have passed the largest defense budgets in our Nation's history, and extraordinary effort has been made to improve air safety, intelligence gathering and counterterrorism methods. To be sure, our war on terror is just beginning, but we should remember that American action since last year's attack has been strong and has yielded positive results.

Contemplating what happened to our country one year ago is difficult for all of us. It is difficult for the friends and family of flight attendant Al Marchand, a New Mexico native who was one of the victims aboard United Airlines flight 175. It is difficult for the urban rescue team that traveled from New Mexico to New York in hopes of finding survivors. But remembering those lost is a duty. Today, if we focus on our children, our communities and the progress we have made in the last year, we will honor the fallen as well as re-energize ourselves for the struggle ahead.

Before I end, I want to make note of a poem I received from a young girl from Los Alamos, New Mexico. The title of the poem is "Who Am I," and it reflects some of the very serious thoughts that the reality of terrorism has forced upon our young people, thoughts about humanity, and thoughts about whether peace can prevail. I ask unanimous consent to print this poem in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHO AM I?

A face, different from others around me.
A name, unusual to outsiders, yet beautiful in meaning.
A voice, bold but not abrasive when spoken to the world.
To my parents, I am their pride, their courage.
To my teachers, I am a word of exquisite-ness.
Me: lucky and fortunate to be here and to have what I have.
In my family I am the listener and the speaker.
To my friends, I am the fun and happiness.
To my enemies, I am ignored like dust swept away.
To many strangers, I am another face smiling in the crowd.
My mind is mature, but there is much I don't know.

I am a child in every way.

Successes come and go, and I'm sure there will be disappointments.

I dream about the future and what it brings. I always remember the good things and seldom the bad.

I forget the days when I was little, and they disappear into vast space.

People don't understand my thoughts, my culture, or sometimes, just me.

My frustration makes me want to be alone. Who am I?

I am a voice with laughter, thoughts and opinion.

A name with pride and courage.

But most of all, a person waiting to fulfill a life of wonders, dreams, and the happiness that comes with it.

By Noopar Goyal,

LOS ALAMOS, NEW MEXICO,

MAY 2002.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today in remembrance of the events of September 11, 2001. It hardly seems that it was one year ago that New York City and Washington, D.C., awoke to an astonishingly sunny late summer day whose calmness belied the tragic events that would come that morning. While the passage of time has continued as it did before that day, our lives, our Nation, and the entire world have since been profoundly transformed.

As that day unhinged one year ago, we all struggled to answer the questions that raced through our heads: "Who is capable of such monstrous violence?" "Why would they do this to us?" And like the families of the victims, many of us sat at the end of that long day and wondered: "How do we go on from here?"

A deep sense of loss and uncertainty permeated the Nation in the weeks that followed the attacks. But in spite of the somber mood, we did what Americans do best. United as never before, we found our resolve to forge ahead. We found strength by turning to family and by turning to our neighbors. We rededicated ourselves to the civic responsibility that is the cornerstone of freedom.

While memory remains scarred by the worst act of terrorism on American soil, the past year has been a time for healing. Today, we continue to heal by remembering those who lost their lives on September 11. We remember the men and women who worked at the World Trade Center, the military and civilian personnel at the Pentagon, the firefighters who did what they could to ease the tragedy, and the heroes of United Airlines Flight 93 who gave their lives to spare the Nation an even larger loss.

Each day that passes will bring us a bit closer to becoming whole again. But we must all take time on this day to mourn those who lost their lives on September 11 and honor the heroes who saved so many lives. We must also keep in our thoughts the troops who are fighting overseas in defense of our nation.

Today is about remembrance, but tomorrow is always about the future.

Once again, we have to ask ourselves, "How do we go on from here?" And answer with certainty and strength. America will not be deterred by terrorism. Instead we will celebrate what it means to live as citizens of this country and honor our continued responsibility to advancing the freedoms that are the hallmark of this country.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today, on this somber occasion, to remember and honor the thousands of lives that were lost one year ago today in the tragic terrorist attacks on our Nation. The United States will never forget the horrific events that occurred on what began as a peaceful morning of Tuesday, September 11, 2001. The tranquility of that morning was shattered by the evil acts of terrorists, filled with hatred for our Nation and opposed to the ideals we treasure. With their terror, our Nation was plunged into one of the darkest days of our history as thousands of Americans lost mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters, sons and daughters, friends and associates.

However, during this tragedy, the American spirit shined through that darkness and continues today, as a beacon to the world. It is that spirit, the willingness to expend the last full measure of one's life in service to others, that is the strength of our Nation. It is a power that grows as we are challenged. It is a force which has helped this Nation through difficult times and will see us through these times as well.

On that dreadful day, the terrorists failed miserably in their attempt to weaken our Nation. Their goal was destined for failure, for America has faced adversity numerous times before and has always emerged stronger. The acts of heroism and charity by Americans in New York City, at the Pentagon, over the skies of Pennsylvania, here in Washington and across the Nation were extraordinary but not surprising.

Today, I also honor the men and women of our Armed Forces. They serve around the world defending the freedoms we enjoy and securing the liberty we cherish. I have stated many times that the highest obligation of American citizenship is to defend this country in time of need. Our citizens have accepted that obligation, some giving their all. Whether serving abroad or at home, the men and women in uniform are performing in an outstanding manner and deserve the appreciation and respect of all Americans.

History will not forget the events of this day. Likewise, we must never forget the thousands of Americans to whom we pay tribute today.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, anniversaries are a time for reflection, and I wanted to take a few moments to share what emotions this North Dakota is experiencing.

First, I feel sorrow, I feel sorrow for the thousands of innocent victims and the scores and scores of families and friends most directly and tragically affected. Those murdered were fathers and brothers, daughters and spouses; they were coworkers earning a living and supporting their families; they were best men in weddings, and mothers flying home to see their children.

They were also honorable Americans, as well as citizens from 86 countries around the world. The victims included North Dakotan Ann Nelson. Ann was the kind of daughter every parent wishes for, she was intelligent, caring, adventurous, and had a real zest for life. Ann was simply doing her job that day in the World Trade Center. Ann, the pride and joy of Stanley, ND, didn't make it home from work that fateful day.

When I think about Ann and her family and the other victims and their loved ones, I also feel anger. One of my home State newspapers, the Grand Forks Herald put it best, "Americans should accept that at the core of their grief is a white-hot fury and a sense of being outrageously wronged. . . . The World Trade Center didn't collapse in a strong wind. The Pentagon didn't fall into a sinkhole from an abandoned mine, and United Flight 93 didn't crash in a Pennsylvania field because it ran out of gas. No, those things happened because a band of terrorist fanatics slit the pilots' throats and then flew the planes, passengers and all, into the buildings for the mad glory of killing infidels by the score."

This North Dakotan's anger and sorrow also fuels my resolve. I feel resolve to continue working with members from both sides of the aisle and with our President to make sure we are doing everything in our power to protect North Dakotans and all Americans.

Over the past year, we have enacted vital anti-terrorism legislation, including provisions I authored to shore up our visa and border security laws. And while we have paid more attention to the challenges of protecting our 4,000 mile northern border from terrorist infiltration, I continue in my resolve to focus the necessary attention and resources to get the job done right.

So, I feel sorrow, anger, and resolve, but I also feel pride, pride in how our heroes performed that day in response to the attacks; pride in our police officers and firemen; pride in those risking their lives to save coworkers; and pride in members of Flight 93 who lost their lives to save countless others.

I also feel pride at North Dakota's own, the Happy Hooligans, who minutes after the terrorist attacks took to the skies over Washington, protecting our Nation's Capital at this most critical time.

I feel pride at the men and women in uniform, who have served and continue to serve in Afghanistan and across the world, with the unfailing twin goals of eradicating global terrorism and protecting their fellow citizens. I feel pride in the dedication of those reservists who have put their lives on hold to serve our country.

I also feel pride in our country, and it is certainly appropriate that Congress and the President agreed to designate September 11 as "Patriot Day." September 11 brought out the best in our fellow citizens and showed us again why we are all so fortunate to be a part of the greatest Nation on earth. Rather than the disillusionment that the terrorists hoped for, our country responded with renewed patriotism.

And finally, on this first anniversary of one of the darkest days in our country's history, this North Dakotan feels optimism. In times of challenge, moments of great opportunity also present themselves. In this instance, we stand at a critical time in our Nation's and the world's history, and the decisions we now make will influence the shape of our world in the 21st century and beyond.

Will we live in a world of freedom or fear? Will democracy reign or will fanaticism retain its lure? Will our country try to build a wall around ourselves or will we continue to be a beacon of freedom, democracy, and tolerance around the world?

Some fifth grade North Dakota students are planning to commemorate the September 11 attacks by planting trees at the International Peace Garden, just north of Dunseith, ND. The name of the program is "Seeds of Peace." I have the optimism to believe that this is the perfect symbol to commemorate the first September 11 anniversary.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I am here on this day of remembrance to express on behalf of the National Funeral Directors Association and all Nebraskans our heartfelt sorrow for those who lost their loved ones on September 11, 2001. We Americans can be proud to declare the continued strength of our Union one year after this horrific act.

The United States of America continues to stand as a beacon of freedom and opportunity for everyone, regardless of race, creed, or religious belief.

The United States of America was founded on the fundamental principle that all citizens have the inalienable right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and the vitality of the United States of America is in the diversity of ideas, the freedom to express those ideas, and the opportunity to achieve one's potential and direct one's destiny.

These principles are absolute and will not be surrendered or weakened by the cowardly acts of terrorists who are afraid of the sunshine of freedom and the responsibility it brings.

On this day we must continue our unity, which reaffirms the principles for which this country was founded and that on this day freedom shall ring from every community in this great land and the voice of America will be heard around the world.

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, we will always remember where we were on this day, 1 year ago. As on other moments of tragedy in American history, September 11 will forever be in our hearts and mind. For those who were lost, for those who gave of themselves to save others. On that day, we were all one. We were all Americans.

When we reflect upon a tragedy such as this, there are many who come into our minds. We reflect upon the honored dead who we remember today, including the friends and family we lost. We think of our loved ones who are still with us today. We remember all of the firefighters, police and ordinary citizens who risked their lives to save people they often did not even know. We reflect upon the members of our armed forces who diligently work to protect us from any future tragedy.

On this solemn occasion, I would like to take a brief moment to recognize the efforts of the members of the AFL-CIO on September 11 and its aftermath. Indeed, there were few others as affected by September 11 than the labor community. The firefighters and police who bravely sacrificed and risked their lives were union members. The laborers, ironworkers, and operating engineers who helped dig for survivors while the fires still burned were union members. The nurses, doctors and EMTs who cared for the injured and dying were union members. Those who manned the ferries and fireboats that transported both the survivors and the bodies of the victims across the harbor were union members. Their efforts greatly affected the lives of many.

In the aftermath, unions across America started up blood drives and the AFL-CIO Union Community Fund along with dozens of local and international unions raised relief funds for the families and children who have been left behind.

On this day of solemn remembrance, I want to recognize all of the sacrifices of these valiant men and women. Their response to this tragedy was truly heroic.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, today we remember the terrible events of September 11. A year has passed but for those who lost loved ones or sustained serious injuries in the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center or at the Pentagon, the pain is still fresh and the loss is still palpable. Losing a loved one is always difficult but to experience loss as a result of a senseless act of terror can only compound the pain.

For Americans in general, the sheer number of lives lost on September 11 was a national tragedy. Those of us who did not lose friends and family also experienced loss on September 11, albeit a loss of a different kind.

On September 11, we lost our sense of personal safety. The idea that terrorism could strike Americans going about their business, working in their offices or taking a simple plane ride for business or pleasure, has changed us forever. Travel by air will never be the same post-September 11. And on a less tangible level, we are now cognizant that in a free society like ours terrorists cannot truly be contained. The threat of terrorism may subside but it will never disappear.

On September 11, we lost our sense of trust. We have become more suspicious of those who want to enter our country. The Federal officials who protect our borders and control access to our country continue on heightened alert, on the lookout for aspiring terrorists. Our first responders, our local police and fire officers, have been tasked to survey our towns with a new eye and have entrusted all of us with the unsettling job of reporting suspicious activity in our neighborhoods.

Most of all, on September 11, we lost our sense of national security. The attacks of September 11 brought with them the realization that our robust defenses, the biggest and best in the world, cannot protect us from terrorists. Our sophisticated planes, submarines, and missiles cannot deter a terrorist attack, and cannot protect us from the unconventional attacks we now know the al-Qaida terrorists were contemplating.

Today, however, is not just a day to reflect on loss. Just as the stories of those who experienced personal loss on September 11 have evolved into stories of determination to carry on, our losses are tempered by resolve.

We are resolved to uproot the terror cells which may now be lurking in as many as 60 countries, waiting for us to let down our guard so they can attack us at home or abroad. Working with our allies around the world we are determined to disrupt these cells by stopping their funding and prosecuting their members. We will also remain vigilant. To the best of our abilities, we will take all precautions to deny these terrorists the opportunity to strike again.

We are resolved not to succumb to hate and to stereotyping of those who share ethnic or religious backgrounds with the terrorists. One of the biggest fears after September 11 was that there would be a backlash in this country against those of Middle Eastern descent or against adherents of Islam.

While there were reports of hate crimes, many Americans reached out to their Muslim or Middle Eastern neighbors to reassure them—whether they were American citizens or just residents that they should not feel at risk. While the heinous acts of September 11 elicited many emotions, I was proud that most Americans recognized that taking our revenge against those who had nothing to do with Osama bin Laden would have sunk us to the level of the terrorists themselves.

The threat of terrorism does have the potential to change the character of our nation. Just as we are vigilant about our physical security, we are resolved not to let terrorism curtail our freedoms. We must not allow the war on terror to infringe on the rights and liberties we hold dear. Terrorism will not go away, but it will have succeeded if we use it as an excuse to trample on the Constitution. The wonderful outpouring of patriotism which occurred this past year was not just an expression of national unity, it was a strong statement that we cannot and will not allow terrorism to undermine our democratic way of life.

In the days after September 11, many Americans wondered how we would carry on. And yet we have carried on. We have danced at weddings, rejoiced in new babies, and it is the brave family members of those who perished on September 11 who have led the way: the mothers who gave birth without the presence of their husbands and the brides who walked down the aisle without their fathers. This has been a difficult year, a year of inconceivable loss, but a year which has been marked by resolve and a rededication to the ideals and principles upon which our Nation was founded.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I know Senator JEFFORDS and Senator GRASSLEY are here. We are going to go out before 4 p.m. today, the reason being we have services for the Senate family, but that gives adequate time for everyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise today on this 1 year anniversary of September 11 to join my colleagues, as well as the rest of the country, in a day of reflection and remembrance. It is often said that time heals all wounds. Obviously, it is going to take an eternity for the grief to subside for the families of the 3,000 people mass-murdered last year, with the mental image of commercial jetliners searing into the national landmarks remaining fresh in our mind. If they do not, we are reminded of it by watching TV this very day and maybe all week.

Such horrific acts that happened a year ago today seemed impossible at that time. But, of course, all that has changed. Now it is hard to understand how such hate and extreme acts of horror against humanity can take place. While the Federal Government is working to beef up the military to protect our borders and to improve its intelligence gathering, it is virtually impossible to guarantee a risk-free environment in a free and open society that we proudly claim as America.

One year after the attacks, I am not so sure the American people really remember that we are in a war on terrorism. But the fact is, we are, and we will be for some time to come. I pray that we do not end up with a situation in the Middle East that we see too often on television where there are random suicide bombings. The risk exists and Americans are not realistic if they do not think of those things happening here like they might happen in Jerusalem. Terrorism has changed our way of life. We might be complacent about it and not want to realize it, but it is here. And every one of us, then, has a responsibility to remain vigilant.

The 1-year anniversary of September 11 is an important reminder that the war against terror has not yet been won. Considering the loss of human life, imminent terrorist threats to our security, and even our ailing economy, it is not easy to look for the silver lining on the 1-year anniversary of the September 11 attacks. But remember what the President said in the week after those attacks: The terrorists succeeded in tearing down bricks and mortar, but they failed to rock the foundation that has kept America strong.

September 11, 2001, ushered in a new era. Notions of invincibility have been shattered. But the uncommon courage of first responders called to duty on that day reflects the steadfast spirit of our great Nation and our people called Americans. Our resolve to pull together and to stand united against evil immediately resurrected the principles on which this country was founded some 226 years ago. Despite the attacks, attacks defined to pit fear against freedom, the United States of America is yet stronger than ever.

Like the rest of the country, lawmakers in Washington, DC, dropped partisan pretense, worked quickly to assist survivors, backed recovery efforts, ensured the safety of the flying public, and got the economy rolling again. The 107th Congress threw its support behind the President to root out the terrorist networks responsible for the attacks, realizing the war in Afghanistan is probably only one of many battles to be fought and hopefully won.

Thanks to courageous service men and women, the al-Qaida network has been largely dismantled from its base in Afghanistan but not elsewhere. That evil continues to lurk in other regions of our world. And with the security of the American people first and foremost in our mind, the President has worked to leave no stone unturned. That includes creating a new Cabinet-level Department of Homeland Security and keeping Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein from unleashing weapons of mass destruction against the United States or other places within our world.

The President needs to make the case to the American people, to Congress, and our allies abroad, and he will do that hopefully within 48 hours, and do it in a way that says freedom and peace will remain at risk, as he explains it, until rogue dictators and others who harbor terrorists and finance their evil acts are no longer able to do those things.

This month, the Senate is debating the proposal to realign the Federal Government's infrastructure and operations charged with thwarting acts of terrorism. I am working to make sure the new Department helps to solve the shortcomings exposed by September 11 and not create new ones.

Many recall the patriotism displayed by native Iowan Coleen Rowley, who blew the whistle on bureaucratic bungling at the FBI. I will work in this bill to see that new Department employees are guaranteed strong whistleblower protections and to strengthen accountability within the intelligence community. These protections for whistleblowers are very important to make sure our intelligence community and the homeland security is working for the good of the American people and to see the statutory requirements are carried out.

When the Department of Homeland Security bill is up, I will make sure that hard-working taxpayers' money is not wasted with this new Federal agency.

One year later, after September 11, life goes on in America. It is not the same as it was a year ago. Life is not as secure or risk free as we once thought it was—and maybe we should not have thought that it was, but we did. Air travelers deal with tightened security measures at the Nation's airports. People are staying closer to home, flying less. Ordinary Americans and law enforcement officials do not hesitate to report suspicious activity. For many, it has enhanced common courtesies and boosted greater appreciation for the simpler things of life.

Iowans deserve a lot of credit for their outpouring of support in the last year. From a remarkable quilt-making project for the victims, particularly in New York City, to generous charitable cash donations, and to those serving in our military, Iowans are proud, compassionate Americans. Many agree that the tragedy a year ago has renewed a sense of civic duty, patriotism, and appreciation for the U.S. military. There is a spirit of all-for-one and one-for-all, as we wear, display, and decorate with all things red, white, and blue.

With this 1-year anniversary, I join my colleagues in reflection and remembrance. While we go about our daily business, we can consider the tragic loss in human life and the acts of heroism by brave defenders. In the weeks and years ahead, we can continue to work for the betterment of our communities. We can donate blood, pray for the victims and their families, support emergency workers, and give thanks for the precious freedoms we enjoy every day.

We cannot erase the sorrow and suffering brought by September 11, but with our actions each one of us can make America stronger.

I remember this day especially Miss Kincade, from Waverly, IA, who was on the plane that hit the Pentagon. She was an intern in my office in 1984.

I remember Mr. Edward V. Rowenhorst, whom I did not know but I know his brother who goes to my church in Cedar Falls, IA. He was in the Pentagon working.

I remember traveling to a ceremony last Veterans Day in Anamosa, IA, where they honored one of their own who was also killed in the Pentagon 1 year ago today.

So Iowans, as most people in most States, have victims to remember. I remember them.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise to speak in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, today we as a nation commemorate a most unfortunate milestone, the 1-year anniversary of the tragic attack of September 11, a day that will sadly live in infamy. Since that time, much has been said and written about the terrible events of that day.

As we reflect on the events of the past year, I would like to commend the thousands of rescue workers, volunteers, and countless others who helped rebuild our Nation in the months following the attacks. In particular, I would like to especially commend the work of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, fondly known as FEMA.

To give some background, on August 15, 2001, I became chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, which has jurisdiction over FEMA. A short month later, terrorists attacked the Pentagon and the World Trade Center. Later that day, following the attacks, I visited the Pentagon. I was amazed that literally overnight FEMA had established a well-coordinated Federal response at the Pentagon. Virginia, Maryland, and other first responders came—from as far away as Nebraska. As soon as possible, they were all working, as coordinated as I have ever seen.

As soon as possible after that, I traveled to the World Trade Center—again to take a look at FEMA's response. Again, I was overwhelmed by the organizational capacity of FEMA and the fine work being done by that agency's men and women, under the guidance of FEMA Director Joe Allbaugh. There, on the piers of Manhattan, FEMA had quickly created a disaster field office that was a small city unto itself. Thousands of workers from around the country came together to bring calm and order to an otherwise chaotic situation.

Visiting the Pentagon this morning brought back a flood of memories for me about my own visits to the Pentagon and the World Trade Center. Just days after those attacks, I vividly remember the sights and sounds and smells. The devastation I witnessed was incredible, and difficult to put into words. Thousands of people lost their lives due to the cruel and cunning acts of evil perpetrated by a few. The victims of these attacks were men, women, and children, people with well-laid plans for their pleasant futures.

Although I left both the Pentagon and the World Trade Center with a heavy heart, I also left with a profound sense of gratitude for the gallant efforts of these rescuers and volunteers who tirelessly, and mostly anonymously, worked in places reserved only for the Ground Zero heroes.

In the year following the attacks, I have spoken with many people, Vermonters and others, about the attack. We have all expressed profound sadness for our Nation's great loss. They have also left me with the confidence that freedom will prevail, that good will triumph over evil, that these horrible attacks cannot break our resolve to stand together as free Americans.

Abraham Lincoln once said:

Freedom is the last best hope of Earth.

Time is a great healer. The passage of time has brought thoughtful recollection. The passage of time has not dulled my recollection of what I saw and felt in those days following September 11. For me, this healing process has brought a renewed commitment to move forward with the hope that freedom prevails.

In closing, I would also like to pay tribute to the work of the Vermont Air and National Guard, which did an outstanding job of protecting our skies and our borders and our airports in the days after September 11. When our Nation was most in need, we pulled together successfully to bring this Nation into a position where it feels secure and with hope for the future.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SILVER ROSE

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I am here today to thank Gary Chenett, Diane Rey, and John Schniedermeier. They are responsible for awarding The Silver Rose to our veterans in Nebraska. The Order of The Silver Rose was established in 1997 by Mary Elizabeth Marchand. Her father, Chief Hospital Corpsman Frank Davis, died from illnesses resulting from the use of Agent Orange in the Vietnam War. He was a combat veteran; however, he was not wounded in combat, but was exposed to a dangerous substance while fighting for his country that took his life many years later.

The Department of Defense has determined that Chief Davis and many like him do not qualify for The Purple Heart. It is the mission of The Order of The Silver Rose organization to recognize the courage, heroism, and contributions of American service personnel found to have been exposed to Agent Orange in a combat zone. I am sure that as time passes, they will expand their focus to members who have died from other conflicts.

The Order of The Silver Rose gives many veterans the satisfaction that they are being recognized for giving their Nation the ultimate sacrifice. There are thousands of veterans who served this country faithfully and now find themselves in poor health, some fatal health, directly due to being exposed to harmful substances during war.

Gary Chenett, Diane Rey, and John Schniedermeier have awarded eleven Nebraskans with The Silver Rose. I would like to honor them today, they are: Raymond D. Todorovich of Omaha; Edgar Fleherty of Omaha; Randy E. Holke of Fremont; John Schniedermeier of Omaha; Ronald R. Charles of Omaha; Terry H. Greenwell of Omaha; David C. Smith of Firth; Joseph E. Stillwell of Omaha; Roy R. Rogers of Fremont; Albert W. Kowalski of Omaha; Gilbert J. Styskal, Jr. of Omaha.

On behalf of Nebraska, I thank these brave patriots for their sacrifices.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred September 2, 2002 in Shelton, CT. A 42 year old gay man was beaten at a Labor Day party. The three attackers made derogatory remarks about the victim's sexual orientation and then assaulted him, breaking his facial bones and ribs. Police are investigating the incident as a hate crime.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider Executive Calendar No. 1008, Denny Wade King, to be United States Marshal; that the nomination be confirmed, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and that any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nomination was considered and confirmed, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Denny Wade King, of Tennessee, to be United States Marshal for the Middle District of Tennessee for the term of four years.

NOMINATION DISCHARGED

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Commerce Committee be discharged from further consideration of the nomination of Marion Blakey to be Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration; that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration; that the nomination be confirmed; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that any statements thereon be printed in the RECORD; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action; and that the Senate resume legislative session with the preceding occurring without any intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nomination was considered and confirmed, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

Marion C. Blakey, of Mississippi, to be Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration for the term of five years.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

SENSE OF THE CONGRESS ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE TERRORIST ATTACKS LAUNCHED AGAINST THE UNITED STATES

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate receives from the House H. Con. Res. 464, a concurrent resolution regarding the anniversary of the terrorist attack, the preamble and the concurrent resolution be agreed to; that any statements thereon be printed in the RECORD; and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, provided that it is identical to the resolution that I ask be printed in the RECORD following the granting of this request.

H. CON. RES. 464

Whereas on September 11, 2001, while Americans were attending to their daily routines, terrorists hijacked and destroyed four civilian aircraft, crashing two of them into the towers of the World Trade Center in New York City, and a third into the Pentagon outside Washington, D.C.;

Whereas the valor of the passengers and crew on the fourth aircraft prevented it from also being used as a weapon against America;

Whereas thousands of innocent Americans were killed and injured as a result of these attacks, including the passengers and crew of the four aircraft, workers in the World Trade Center and in the Pentagon, rescue workers, and bystanders, making these attacks the deadliest terrorist attacks ever launched against the United States;

Whereas when the gravest moments came, many regular Americans, relying on courage, instinct, and grace, rushed toward the flaming buildings in order to rescue or toward terrorist-controlled cockpits in order to resist;

Whereas by targeting symbols of American strength and success, these attacks clearly were intended to assail the principles, values, and freedoms of the United States and the American people, intimidate the Nation, and weaken the national resolve;

Whereas while the States of New York, Virginia, and Pennsylvania bore the brunt of the terrorist attacks, every State and Territory and all Americans were affected and mourned these tragic losses;

Whereas Americans reached out to help strangers who had lost loved ones, colleagues, and their businesses;

Whereas local, State, and Federal leaders set aside differences and worked together to provide for those who were attacked and to protect those who remained;

Whereas Americans continue to repair damage to buildings and the economy, while relishing the freedoms they enjoy as Americans;

Whereas on September 14, 2001, in Public Law 107-40, Congress authorized the use of "all necessary and appropriate force" against those responsible for the terrorist attacks;

Whereas the United States Armed Forces subsequently moved swiftly against Al Qaeda and the Taliban regime in Afghanistan, whom the President and Congress had identified as enemies of America;

Whereas, in so doing, brave servicemen and women left family and friends in order to defend the Nation;

Whereas a year later, many servicemen and women remain abroad, shielding the Nation from further terrorist attacks;

Whereas, while the passage of a year has not softened the memory of the American people, resolved their grief, or restored lost loved ones, it has shown that Americans will not bow to terrorists;

Whereas the Congress has passed, and the President has signed, numerous laws providing additional resources for the overseas effort against terrorism, as well as additional tools for Federal, State, and local law enforcement and judicial systems to protect Americans at home; and

Whereas the Government reexamined the need for domestic security and the Congress is currently considering legislation to create a Department of Homeland Security with the specific mission of preventing further attacks.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, what we saw happen to our country 1 year ago today will be forever etched in our memories. Several of our colleagues have taken time here on the floor today to reflect on that horrible day.

Though our Nation was wounded deeply that day, we learned a great deal about ourselves—and that has made our country stronger. The courage of the first responders, the valor of the passengers on flight 93, the strength of the families of the victims, the character of our armed forces, and the generosity of Americans from each and every State in the Union have shown to terrorists, and to the world, that America is strong and will not bow to terror.

H. Con. Res. 464 is a small tribute to each of these heroes. It spells out, in broad bipartisan fashion, Congress's memory for lost loved ones, our deep admiration for the families of these innocent victims, our respect for the work of our first responders and armed forces, and our resolve to find and bring to justice those responsible for the attacks.

That resolve was made clear on September 14, 2001, when we overwhelmingly passed S.J. Res. 23. In that resolution, we granted the President the authority to pursue the nations, people or organizations who perpetrated the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on the United States in order to prevent any future acts of international terrorism against the United States by such nations, people, or organizations.

With today's resolution, we look back at the horror and the hope we saw on a day we will never forget. There may come a day when we must again look ahead to threats to our Nation that lie on or beyond the horizon. I am confident that when that time comes, Congress will again act in a bipartisan fashion to take the steps needed to keep America strong, and Americans safe.

But today, as we walk the path from remembrance to recovery, this resolution says what we all know in our hearts: We will never forget.

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 2002

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 9:45 a.m. tomorrow, September 12; that following the prayer and the pledge, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate proceed to executive session to consider Calendar No. 960, with the time until 10 a.m. equally divided between Senators LEAHY and HATCH—that would be prior to the vote on that nomination—with no intervening action; further, that it be in order to request the yeas and nays on the nomination at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the nomination, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, any statements thereon be printed in the RECORD, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and the Senate return to legislative session and resume consideration of the Interior appropriations bill.

PROGRAM

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the next rollcall vote will occur tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock on the confirmation of Timothy Corrigan to be a United States District Judge for the Middle District of Florida.

Following that vote, the Senate will resume consideration of the Interior Appropriations Act. But at noon, the Senate will resume consideration of the homeland security bill.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:45 A.M.
TOMORROW

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 3:46 p.m., adjourned until Thursday, September 12, 2002, at 9:45 a.m.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 11, 2002:

MARION C. BLAKEY, OF MISSISSIPPI, TO BE ADMINISTRATOR OF THE FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION FOR THE TERM OF FIVE YEARS.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, September 11, 2002

The House met at noon.

Remembering the images of September 11 a year ago can still stun a nation. A reflection of that tragic day and the thousands who were taken from us can still take the breath away of some. Others feel nothing, only emptiness. Others have moved on and celebrate the distance. Today a moment of common silence can unite us all in a deeper sense of presence.

Because words have their own spin to such an overwhelming story as this past year. Silence alone is free enough to embrace all traditions and all sentiments, drawing out a language of the heart.

Only silence can interpret some of the most sacred moments of a lifetime. So let memories flow and prayers arise in the soul of America as we enter unafraid the mystery of what has happened to us in silence.

Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York (Mr. McNULTY) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. McNULTY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3917. An Act to authorize a national memorial to commemorate the passengers and crew of Flight 93 who, on September 11, 2001, courageously gave their lives thereby thwarting a planned attack on our Nation's Capital, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2136. An act to establish a memorial in the State of Pennsylvania to honor the passengers and crewmembers of Flight 93 who, on September 11, 2001, gave their lives to prevent a planned attack on the Capital of the United States.

S. 2896. An act to enhance the operation of the AMBER Alert communications network in order to facilitate the recovery of abducted children, to provide for enhanced notification on highways of alerts and information on such children, and for other purposes.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will receive 15 one-minute speeches on each side.

REMEMBERING SEPTEMBER 11

(Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, today as a Nation we are reunited by a sense of common grief. One year ago today, America witnessed the unspeakable when our Nation was attacked and more than 3,000 innocent lives were cruelly taken from us at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, and in Pennsylvania. From my home State of New Jersey, we lost over 700 people, and God bless their families. It was also a day when horror was met by heroism and the worst of humanity was overshadowed by the best of America. In reflections on this day, we remember the bravery of those who responded on September 11, our police, firefighters, our first aid squads, people who never gave up hope and rallied our Nation. They who responded came from all over America and across the Hudson from New Jersey.

We are grateful as well today for the service of our young men and women in uniform who, fighting in our war against terrorism, are resolved to bring justice to those who attacked us. They are fighting to right this terrible wrong in honor of the memory of those who perished and to protect our children and grandchildren, ensuring that they inherit a Nation free from further terror.

ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF SEPTEMBER 11

(Mr. McNULTY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, whenever I think of the enormity of what happened on September 11, 2001, words fail; and so I try to recall the words of our commander in chief on that fateful day. He basically made three suggestions. He said we should pray for all of the innocent victims and their families, and I try to remember to do that every day. He then said we should be grateful. And I will be perfectly honest, gratitude was not what was in my heart at that moment. But he went on to explain that we should be grateful to all the police officers, firefighters, and emergency personnel who, when others were running away from the buildings in terror, running for their lives, continued to run toward the buildings, into the buildings, up the stairs, many to their deaths. That was their job. And they did it well that day because they saved thousands of lives.

Finally, he suggested that we unite as a Nation in our resolve to track down the terrorist cowards who committed those acts, bring them to justice, and take away their capabilities to ever do anything like that again either in the United States or anywhere else in the world.

On this solemn anniversary may we continue to remember those three suggestions by our commander in chief.

TO THE CHILDREN ACROSS AMERICA REGARDING SEPTEMBER 11

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, usually when I stand here to address these 1-minutes, it is on the subject of missing children. Today I want to talk about kids who are missing mothers and fathers and sisters and brothers and friends and family because on September 11 of last year more than 2,000 children lost a parent. This may not be the kind of loss that I usually address, but it is a profound loss, nonetheless. I want to send a message to those kids today that this House is thinking about them and they are in our hearts and in our prayers.

The children of this country also lost a sense of innocence and security. I want to encourage parents across the Nation to talk to their children about the tragic events of September 11 of last year to reassure them that we all want the best for them and will continue to work to keep their, our, country safe from harm.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Congressional Caucus on Missing and Exploited Children, I send our thoughts and prayers out to the children who lost somebody at the Pentagon, the World Trade Center, or in Shanksville, Pennsylvania, and to the kids all across America who are learning to deal with a changed and unsettled world.

God bless you and God bless America.

HONORING MICHAEL BELAY FOR HIS CONTRIBUTIONS TO HUMANITY

(Ms. SANCHEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Michael Belay of Orange County. On a trip back to his native Ethiopia to a town called Abbiyi Addi, Belay saw children playing on the hulk of a helicopter that had crashed near their school. The dry, cracked earth was the floor of their classroom. They had no chalk, chairs or blackboard.

Belay saw an opportunity to help brighten the future for these children. He scrimped together $10,000 and took it back to his village. With this, he bought clothing, shoes and bags of food. When he returned to California, he organized HAPPY, Hands Across the Planet to Poor Youth, to raise $200,000 for these children to buy televisions, computers, construction materials, and chalk.

We can all find inspiration in Belay's actions. I am especially proud of him, Mr. Speaker, since he works part time as a security guard at Chapman University where I am a proud alum and a member of the board of trustees there.

It is people like Michael Belay that truly make our world a better place to live.

ON REMEMBERING THE EVENTS OF SEPTEMBER 11

(Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ACEVEDO-VILÁ. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Puerto Ricans, I want to express heartfelt sympathy for the families of the victims from the terrorist attacks against this great Nation 1 year ago. The impacts of these horrific events were immediately felt throughout Puerto Rico. Hundreds of Puerto Ricans were among the dead and Puerto Rican emergency crews were among the first to arrive to assist crews in New York and at the Pentagon. But had there been no direct tragic link to Puerto Rico through casualties or through the emergency workers, Puerto Ricans would nonetheless continue to walk in lockstep in the war against terror. Make no mistake about it, Puerto Ricans today, as throughout the last 100 years, serve dutifully in all the branches of our Armed Services. Our common citizenship and common devotion toward democratic principles underscore our commitment to common defense. I stand before my colleagues today to let you all know that Puerto Rico will always be there in this effort. The cowardly acts of September 11 have caused great pain. Our suffering shall never be forgotten. But this Nation is today stronger and more committed to our principles of freedom and justice than ever before. United we stand, divided we fall. We stand together and will never, ever forget.

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF TERRORIST ATTACKS LAUNCHED AGAINST THE UNITED STATES ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 464) expressing the sense of the Congress on the anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 464

Whereas on September 11, 2001, while Americans were attending to their daily routines, terrorists hijacked and destroyed four civilian aircraft, crashing two of them into the towers of the World Trade Center in New York City, and a third into the Pentagon outside Washington, D.C.;

Whereas the valor of the passengers and crew on the fourth aircraft prevented it from also being used as a weapon against America;

Whereas thousands of innocent Americans were killed and injured as a result of these attacks, including the passengers and crew of the four aircraft, workers in the World Trade Center and in the Pentagon, rescue workers, and bystanders, making these attacks the deadliest terrorist attacks ever launched against the United States;

Whereas when the gravest moments came, many regular Americans, relying on courage, instinct, and grace, rushed toward the flaming buildings in order to rescue or toward terrorist-controlled cockpits in order to resist;

Whereas by targeting symbols of American strength and success, these attacks clearly were intended to assail the principles, values, and freedoms of the United States and the American people, intimidate the Nation, and weaken the national resolve;

Whereas while the States of New York, Virginia, and Pennsylvania bore the brunt of the terrorist attacks, every State and Territory and all Americans were affected and mourned these tragic losses;

Whereas Americans reached out to help strangers who had lost loved ones, colleagues, and their businesses;

Whereas local, State, and Federal leaders set aside differences and worked together to provide for those who were attacked and to protect those who remained;

Whereas Americans continue to repair damage to buildings and the economy, while relishing the freedoms they enjoy as Americans;

Whereas on September 14, 2001, in Public Law 107-40, Congress authorized the use of "all necessary and appropriate force" against those responsible for the terrorist attacks;

Whereas the United States Armed Forces subsequently moved swiftly against Al Qaeda and the Taliban regime in Afghanistan, whom the President and Congress had identified as enemies of America;

Whereas, in so doing, brave servicemen and women left family and friends in order to defend the Nation;

Whereas a year later, many servicemen and women remain abroad, shielding the Nation from further terrorist attacks;

Whereas, while the passage of a year has not softened the memory of the American people, resolved their grief, or restored lost loved ones, it has shown that Americans will not bow to terrorists;

Whereas the Congress has passed, and the President has signed, numerous laws providing additional resources for the overseas effort against terrorism, as well as additional tools for Federal, State, and local law enforcement and judicial systems to protect Americans at home; and

Whereas the Government reexamined the need for domestic security and the Congress is currently considering legislation to create a Department of Homeland Security with the specific mission of preventing further attacks: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That Congress—

(1) recognizes September 11 as both a day to remember those taken from their families, loved ones, and fellow citizens and a day for Americans to recommit to the Nation, to their freedoms, and to each other;

(2) extends its deepest sympathies to the countless innocent victims of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, their families, friends, and loved ones;

(3) honors the heroic actions of first responders, law enforcement personnel, State and local officials, volunteers, and others who aided the innocent victims and, in so doing, bravely risked their own lives and long-term health;

(4) stands in great debt with the American people to the members of the Armed Forces serving both at home and abroad;

(5) praises the people of the United States for their patriotism, compassion, prayers, and generosity in donating time and money to support the innocent victims of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks, their families, friends, and loved ones;

(6) expresses thanks and gratitude to the foreign leaders and citizens of all nations who have assisted and continue to stand in solidarity with the United States against terrorism in the aftermath of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks;

(7) discourages, in the strongest possible terms, any effort to confuse the war on terrorism with a war on any people or any faith;

(8) commends the President and the brave servicemen and women of the United States Armed Forces in the successful effort to oust the Taliban from power;

(9) remains resolved to pursue all those responsible for the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, and their sponsors until they are discovered and punished; and

(10) reaffirms that Congress will honor the memory of those who lost their lives as a result of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks and will defend bravely the citizens of the United States in the face of all future challenges.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the Democrat leader and cosponsor of the resolution, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, a year ago today the east coast of this great land woke up to the first rays of morning sunshine. We woke up as a Nation, full of optimism, full of gratification, aware of our freedoms, but probably taking them for granted. We were concerned about the people we love, with the confidence they would all be there. We were excited about the business of the day with hopes of good outcomes, and dearly involved with our children with an understanding of their safety. We did not think about heinous deeds when we woke that morning. Our minds were busy with our plans and hopes, dreams and schemes; and we went about our day's work.

Then, all of a sudden, out of the dark depths of the evil corners of the world, hatred, meanness, despair, jealousy, greed, whatever, rose to afflict this Nation.

We were shocked at what we saw. First, most of us thought it was an accident and how tragic it was. But soon, we realized it was a vicious, premeditated attack on us as a Nation and on innocent civilians in this country.

Those streaming rays of sunshine that came through those big buildings of New York City that stood as a monument to this thing we call the practical American genius, were shattered. That peaceful field in Pennsylvania, awake with morning dew, was smashed. Our Pentagon that stands for strength and freedom was assailed in a way that it has never been assailed. And, indeed, this very building on which we stand today was saved that morning by the first response to this vicious attack.

We took the hurt and the losses, and they came early; but it did not take us long to collect our wits in this great country. Immediately upon understanding on Flight 93 how vicious this was and how evil the intent, our American heroes fought back and this Nation was inspired by Todd Beamer who started the response with that phrase, "Let's roll."

Our early responders in New York City, after the tragic loss of life following American Flight 11, American Flight 77, and in Northern Virginia

after the horrible nightmare of United Flight 175, our early responders came from our communities: firemen, policemen, and emergency workers of all types. They rushed to the danger and saved lives.

We struggled through that day with doubt, uncertainty and fear. But as the day wore on, we became more a Nation of resolve and less a Nation of fear. We began to build our way back to confidence and optimism on that very same day. America had the unwelcome need to see its own heroes fight for survival and rescue on our own land, and our heroes rose to the occasion in a way that has inspired each and every one of us.

In New York City and Pennsylvania and here in Northern Virginia, they did so no more nor any less than they would have in Kansas City, San Francisco, or Houston because they displayed the character of a free people who cherish their freedom and love their neighbors.

Now we have been asked to go on with the task of ridding the world of the evil that struck that blow. We again call upon our heroes, now not so often, not so many civilians, but honorable men and women in uniform who have stood before the history of this great Nation's marvelous tradition of defending freedom, peace and respect and have said, "I will volunteer to serve this Nation in its armed services."

These new young heroes, following generations of heroes past, are now being asked daily all across this globe to incur risks and hardship to find the evil ones and remove them.

I believe the perpetrators of evil that launched this horrible attack have seen in ways they have never dared to imagine the character and strength of this great Nation. They now know the resolve of this great Nation. They all understand the courage of our heroes.

Let me say again what I said at the time. This Nation has proven it will spend its heroes. Our heroes have proven they will go when asked, they will volunteer, they will do their duty. But we do not spend our heroism from this great Nation out of ambition for territorial expansion or out of a sense of revenge, but out of a requirement for a just world, a world in which people who will perpetrate evil against others will be found, and they will be prosecuted.

Let me just say to those of you who are still out there plotting and scheming, do not underestimate our American heroes; they are young, they are bright, they are strong, they have courage, and they will in fact bring you down.

Now we have come, Mr. Speaker, to this day a year later. The sun rose in the east today, and this great east coast of this great land was the first to experience this morning. We woke a little wiser, a little more aware, a little sadder, but we awoke with optimism, love, resolve and courage, and we will be that way for so long as this great Nation shall endure.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to cosponsor this resolution with the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) in the spirit of bipartisan unity on this difficult day for our wonderful and great Nation.

We gather together today to remember the victims, honor our rescue workers, and cherish the values embraced by human beings across the globe. On this first anniversary of September 11, we recall the strength, the courage and the character of innocent people who lost their lives in this horrendous attack.

To the families of September 11 victims, we say that we are with them as one. We honor the bravery they have demonstrated in the face of unspeakable suffering, and we honor the spirit of the American people, humanity at its best.

Today, we recall that amid the chaos of September 11 our rescue workers gave the last full measure of devotion so others could live another day. Hundreds of people rushed into burning buildings to save others who they had never before even met. On one of our darkest days, they sent forth a defiant ray of hope, and words alone could never do justice to their sacrifice.

Today, we also recognize this fundamental American truth: From the horror of September 11 has come incredible, unimaginable strength. Our Nation is still grieving, but make no mistake, we stand united.

As I said Friday in New York at our joint session, in this great and faithful struggle, there are no Republicans, there are no Democrats; there are only Americans, and we will remain resolved with our President to defend all those who threaten the liberty, freedom and democracy that define our Nation.

Today, as we pray for the victims' families, we also offer profound gratitude to the people who may well have saved our lives by fighting back on Flight 93. This resolution is crafted in their spirit, with them as our inspiration and as our guide.

This resolution honors people like the man who went to Ground Zero after the attacks and started digging through the rubble, searching for survivors, because, he said, we are "digging for freedom."

It honors the woman whose legs were crushed by debris at the World Trade Center, who has been in the hospital every day for the past year.

It honors the firefighters in New York who, ascending the stairs, calmly told civilians, "Just keep going down, clear run. Keep going down, clear run."

It honors the doctors at the Pentagon who, rolling in water to ward off the flames, saved countless servicemen and women because of their raw courage.

It honors the ironworkers, the construction workers, the engineers and others who worked around the clock for months to clear the debris at Ground Zero.

It honors all the workers at the Pentagon who worked day and night to meet the schedule of having the Pentagon back in perfect condition before the year anniversary of September 11.

It honors our law enforcement personnel who are protecting our citizens on a daily basis here at home.

It honors the members of our Armed Forces who have been fighting and are today fighting to defend our freedom and secure our Nation.

And it honors people like those we had lunch with on Friday in New York who lost their spouses on September 11.

In the face of the unthinkable, their courage, their simple courage to move to the future while they grieved about the past, was deeply moving and inspiring. They demonstrated a commitment to the values that all of us hold dear: Freedom, family, faith and friends.

Let all these deeds in the past year, and more, stand as a lasting monument to the spirit of our great Nation.

Today, we know that our most solemn obligation is to ensure that those who died on September 11 did not die in vain. In the days and weeks ahead, let us continue to work together with humility to protect our people, guard our freedoms, and report to the world that America will never be defeated.

Let us move forward as one Nation, one people, for the sake of every single person who believes in freedom and believes in civilization and believes in humanity.

Let me end with the words of an old hymn that I love so much. When we face the unexplainable, when we face evil, many of us turn to God. And, as we did one year ago, we ask again today for God's help.

As the hymn says, "And He will raise you up on eagles wings, bear you on the breath of dawn, make you to shine like the sun, and hold you in the palm of His hand."

May God shed His grace on this great and wonderful country and all of our people.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the chairman of the Committee on International Relations, and that he be permitted to control that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) will control the time of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY).

There was no objection.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), the ranking member on the Committee on International Relations, be permitted to control the balance of my time and yield that time as he sees fit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) will control the remainder of the time for the minority leader.

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H. Con. Res. 464.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a year since the world watched the impossible happen, and yet it is difficult to believe that such a year has passed so quickly. The sense and feel of time have been altered, seemingly suspended even as the calendar's relentless progress has remained unaffected.

On this first anniversary, we would only deceive ourselves if we were to believe that those events are now safely confined to the past. We will continue to live with them all our lives.

Modern communications have brought us many new and wonderful things, but they have also made possible the communal experience of tragedy. In this new age, distance will no longer spare us, nor can an absence of ties insulate us, from sorrow.

All who witnessed the events of September 11 still bear the scars of seeing inconceivable images and impossible events unfold in real time. But our own experiences, however painful, cannot compare with that of the innocents who bore the horror directly, nor with that of their families and friends who were suddenly and violently severed from their former lives and from the touch of those deeply loved.

We Americans are a practical people. Instead of resigning ourselves to the difficulties of life, we instinctively seek to identify problems in order to focus our efforts and move towards solutions. In the past year we have done this.

We have come to know our enemies and direct our determination and resources to uncovering their hiding places and plans. We are now engaged in designing and implementing measures to resist their ability to harm us. The challenge is an entirely new one, but one which gains in clarity each day. I hope all of us are now aware that in addition to our successes, we must prepare ourselves for the likelihood of failures in a struggle that may have no end.

By infusing purpose, action can thus fill many voids, but the need remains to understand what happened and to comprehend the meaning of the events of that day. Here words give way to silence, for deep reflection is the predicate to understanding. Our modern, rational world once promised in time to reveal all secrets to us, but can we still cling to that belief now that we have been confronted with things we thought long past, vanquished and erased from the world by reason and light?

The modern world has seen many efforts to eliminate God from our lives, but we have not been able to eliminate evil. The last century was unparalleled in human history in its celebration of the savagery that human beings can wreak upon one another. We had hoped we might escape that fate in this century, but now we know that we will not.

We have been forcibly awakened from our dreams of an earthly heaven by the bitter knowledge that evil still roams freely in the world. We cannot allow ourselves to be paralyzed with despair or fear, and neither can we permit our natural optimism to shield us from the realities of the world. If there is any useful thing to be drawn from this terrible experience, it is that we have been given an unmistakable warning that in this new century, unknown and fearsome challenges await us, challenges that will impose the severest test of our national character.

Knowing this, we have a duty to prepare ourselves to defend not only our lives and those of our children, not only our beloved country, not only our freedoms, but civilization itself. We are Rome, beset by new barbarians who are savagely motivated by their immense hatred of us, of our happiness and our success, of the promise America represents for the world; for our enemies have no aim except destruction, nothing to offer but a forced march back to a bleak and dismal past. Theirs is a world without light; their all-encompassing hatred a repudiation of any saving grace.

Their victory would impose a new Dark Age, but this time perhaps an endless one. They are enemies of the future itself.

As we resolve ourselves to our task, as we grieve for all of those linked to us by tragedy, we may also see ourselves more truly and thereby understand that our great strengths are interwoven with many fragile things, and that being human, we have our faults and flaws to contend with as well. The threats we face have given us a greater sense of how rare and wonderful is the world we share and of our responsibility to protect it from the storms outside.

It is for these reasons that we remember those 3,000 fellow citizens who, asking nothing other than to live their lives in peace, were brutally murdered by men without conscience or mercy. We know it is right to remember our dead and commend them to the mercy of God, because should we forget them, we would only invite new acts of terror. We remember because, to quote Lincoln's haunting phrase, "the mystic chords of memory" bind us to the victims and the heroes of September 11.

May those who died in the attacks of September 11 rest in the mercy of God. May those of us who remain be steadfast, courageous, and live lives worthy of their great sacrifice.

Mr. Speaker, H. Con. Res. 464 expresses our gratitude to our friends and underscores the Nation's resolve to meet the enemy and defeat them. I believe passage of this resolution will commemorate those heroic actions of last September 11 and stand as an important symbolic gesture which all Members should support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, at the outset, let me commend my good friend and distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), for his powerful and thoughtful statement; and I identify myself with both the sentiments and the words that we have just heard.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of this historic resolution, and I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, just a bit over a year ago, I had the great honor of joining my good friend, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on International Relations, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), in managing the debate on the resolution condemning the September 11 terrorist attacks. On that day, I spoke of our Nation's loss of innocence. America's illusions of invulnerability were violently shattered on September 11, 2001; and our Nation turned its focus on far greater concerns than some of the follies and frivolities that had consumed us prior to that day.

Since September 11 last year, we have matured as a Nation. We Americans have come to terms with the terrible reality that ours continues to be a most dangerous world from which there is no escape. Distant events can and do impact on our daily lives in unpredictable and even unthinkable ways.

We have matured too, Mr. Speaker, in our understanding of the meaning of the term "homeland security." September 11 made clear that our safety is as dependent upon a strong foreign policy as it is upon strong domestic defenses. There is no homefront in this fight, only a united front in which our domestic and foreign policies form a single seamless defense against terrorism. Among the many casualties of September 11 was the false dichotomy between domestic and foreign policy.

Now, a year later, we face a new challenge. It is incumbent upon us now to prosecute this war against terrorism not simply in our own self defense, but in defense of the principle of democracy that is at the very core of our Nation. The terrorists and their protectors fear the freedom we cherish, and they seek to destroy it wherever it thrives. The war on terrorism, then, is a common struggle with all democracies to preserve democracy itself, and we can only achieve true victory in this epic struggle when we bring democracy to all the corners of the globe.

In his address before a joint session of Congress on September 20 of last year, the President defined our adversaries in this war as the perpetrators of the September 11 attacks and their protectors. He further widened the war in his State of the Union address to include other terrorist organizations and states that terrorize the world with weapons of mass destruction.

We must now widen our struggle further still to encompass all those repressive, undemocratic regimes that provide the breeding ground for terrorism. It is only through the creation of open societies, resilient to dissent and capable of free debate, that terrorism can truly be defeated.

It is in the crucible of the Middle East where this greater struggle must now be waged. It is not enough to defeat Osama bin Laden and his minions, although that we surely must do. We must also combat the repression, the lies, and the hatred that consume so many in this crucial region. The United States and our allies must recommit ourselves to bringing democratic institutions and free and open societies to these peoples.

It is tempting, Mr. Speaker, amid the grief of this day to find solace in the victories we have achieved in the war against terrorism to date. And indeed, the brave men and women of our armed services engaged in Afghanistan and around the globe deserve our deepest praise and gratitude for their battlefield achievements.

But we must not grow complacent in this epic fight, a fight that may span generations. To do so would dishonor those who perished on this day one year ago, and to do so would undermine the cause of democracy worldwide.

In the immortal words of President Lincoln, repeated at the World Trade Center this morning, we are a nation engaged in a great war, testing whether our Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. For our own sake and for the sake of free societies, we must continue our fight.

Mr. Speaker, on this first anniversary of September 11, 2001, we mourn the victims, we honor the heroes, we contemplate the lessons, and we celebrate the unity of our Nation so proudly displayed since that fateful day. One year ago, we suffered a grievous wound. One year later, that wound has begun to heal and the scar it has left has toughened our skin, but it has not and will not harden our hearts or dampen our spirits. God bless this great Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Goss).

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee for yielding me this time. I am obviously here to join my colleagues in honoring the memory of those who died in the terrorist attacks of a year ago this day and to underscore with gratitude the amazing valor displayed by them.

I am sure every American remembers where they were and what they were doing when these ignominious attacks occurred. For me, I recall finding Speaker HASTERT in his office, urgently gazing out the window down the Mall, looking at the smoke coming from the Pentagon. I urged immediate evacuation, and the Speaker said, stop. First, we must open the House and have a prayer. So part of my memory includes our short gathering in this Chamber and the earnest and moving prayer by the guest chaplain of that day, Reverend Gerald Creedon.

I would like to begin my remarks this day recalling that prayer. He said, "God of peace and life, send Your spirit to heal our country; bring consolation to all injured in today's tragedy in New York and Washington. Protect us and help our leaders to lead us out of this moment of crisis to a new day of peace. Amen."

What Reverend Creedon did not know, and what none of us knew here, was that more casualties were to come in a field in Pennsylvania shortly after his prayer and our very hasty adjournment that day. Actually, this was not Father Creedon's original prayer; he had prepared one on the topic of immigration. But realizing the gravity of the situation, he spontaneously gave us heartfelt, wonderful words which were suitable to the moment and which are posted on the wall of my office to this day as a daily reminder.

To the more than 3,000 people who lost their lives that day at the World Trade Center, the Pentagon, and United Flight 93, we owe continuing remembrance, deep thanks, and responsive action. A year ago today, terrorists attacked Americans and citizens of scores of other countries who were on our U.S. soil. We, along with a broad coalition of nations, have taken up the challenge of combating the scourge of global terrorism. It is serious business. President Bush has left no doubt about his commitment to have our Nation lead the way.

Last year the fight came to the doorstep of each and every American citizen; and within the very first minutes of September 11, 2001, our Nation responded as one. I would like to dedicate my short time today to celebrating the men and women, ordinary Americans, who have fought back; the quiet heroes.

Let me begin with Ceecee Lyles, a flight attendant of Flight 93, who was a resident of my district of southwest Florida. A former police patrol officer detective, she had spent 6 years risking her life to protect others in that service. In December of 2000, mindful of her young children and looking for a less dangerous career, she enrolled as a flight attendant school candidate; and 6 weeks later, she began flying for United Airlines out of Newark.

At 9:58 on September 11, only 5 minutes after the House recessed for the day under the dire circumstances then apparent, Ceecee called her husband, Lorne, in Fort Myers, who is a police officer there, from her plane to tell him that her flight had been hijacked. Her words: "I called to tell you I love you. Tell the kids I love them." Her last words that we know of were, "I think they are going to do it. They are forcing their way into the cockpit."

And then the phone went dead.

In this Chamber, we owe a particular debt of gratitude to CeeCee Lyles and her companions on Flight 93, and we all know it. That flight may very well have been heading to Washington when it crashed into Shanksville, Pennsylvania. Without prompting or training, the passengers and crew fought back, and in doing so, saved many additional lives; possibly, our lives right here in the Capitol, for as we now know, many believe, and there is some evidence, that the Capitol was the intended target of Flight 93.

FBI Director Mueller, speaking at the crash site in Pennsylvania, said, "We believe that those passengers on that jet were absolute heroes." Wallace Miller, the coroner for the case, called the passengers citizen soldiers. He went on to ask: "When can you think of, other than the Revolution or our Civil War or at Pearl Harbor, where American citizens died defending their home ground?"

But let us reflect a moment on our history. While many would compare 9-11 to the devastation of Pearl Harbor, there is a significant difference. Pearl Harbor was, after all, a military-against-military matter; 9-11 was a vicious attack on civilians and on freedom.

It is obvious that all of us have had to deal with new restrictions on the way we live our lives; but we have also developed a sense of pride, of patience, and individual responsibility as we go about our lives to bring us closer as Americans.

The terrorists thought they would destroy our spirit; but instead, they renewed it. Destroying the will of the enemy to fight is the common measure of victory in war. bin Laden and his depraved extremists fueled our resolve to wipe his brand of evil from a civilized world.

In addition to people all over America who have stepped up to the plate, our government has also become more alert, more focused, and more vigilant. We all must recognize the dedication and sacrifice of the thousands of individuals in government service who are out there on the front lines. They are protecting you and me, and they are making us proud. They know we are counting on them at a time when it matters.

Every new day as we wake up safe and sound in our homes here, I hope we remember to say just a little thank you to those out there for the work they are doing. Whether fighting al Qaeda in Afghanistan and Pakistan, working the streets in Africa, Latin America, Europe, or Asia, perhaps working in a cubicle in the D.C. area, or as part of the joint terrorism task force in a U.S. city, these are the intelligence officers, the military and civilian personnel who in all likelihood will not receive public recognition for the work they do; yet they do work long hours, often in places far from friends and family, and sometimes at very great personal risk. I regrettably acknowledge that sometimes they do not come home.

Johnny Michael Spann was a CIA officer, a husband, and a father of three. He went into Afghanistan in an early phase of the war to collect information crucial to defeating the Taliban and to protecting Americans at home. He was killed last November during a prisoner uprising in Mazar-e-Sharif, which was particularly brutal, as we now know.

Finally, I would like to recognize that since last September every American has been engaged in combatting terrorism. We have been more vigilant, aware and alert, reporting leads to the police and FBI in record numbers. We have volunteered time and resources to our communities. We have been more patient as we have tried new security procedures at airports and public buildings, even though some of them have clearly turned out to be unworkable. We have maintained our basic freedoms and our democracy in the face of further terrorist threat. We still fly, we go to the mall, we cheer on our sports teams, we drive over bridges, we speak our minds, and we assemble where we choose.

So on this September 11, let us rededicate ourselves to honoring the memory of those who died by continuing to stand up to terror and to fear. Then let us also look to the future and the young people who are preparing to join the fray. Our youth, who some thought might be becoming a bit apathetic, or were perhaps now taking this great country for granted, are now applying in record numbers to service academies, to police and fire departments, the military, the FBI, the CIA, and other government service. They are our future and they are ready.

September 11 will come again next year and every year thereafter. It is now part of who we are. Woe to those who would ever test us again.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON), our distinguished colleague from our capital city who represents Washington with such grace and effectiveness.

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and for his kind and gracious words.

September 11 will always be a day to remember; but for us, it must also be a day to consider how to go on. If one lives or works here, as Members do, we remember that no sooner had September 11 come than we had October and the anthrax tragedies that occurred, beginning in the Brentwood post office, and spread even to this very Congress.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, though some may consider the capital city a target city, I can come to the floor this afternoon and say I have never felt myself to be a target. That is probably because I am an American, and it may be in part because I was a small child in this city during World War II. Therefore, I am blessed and perhaps burdened by the notion of American invincibility. I do not believe that simply because of our military might. Somehow I believe that my country cannot and will not be defeated ever from within or without. It is simply part of the way I was raised, and it is part of the way we must raise our children.

I know how one's spirit can be broken when one goes to the funerals of three small children and their teacher who went down in the plane at the Pentagon. It can try one's spirit. But the fact is, I regard those children as representatives of all who lost their lives in September and October of last year; and somehow or the other, remembering September 11 and the October anthrax tragedies through the lives of these 11-year-old children and their teachers, random targets, has instructed me how to go on.

I believe we will defeat terrorism. I tell you, it is part of my core belief. What I think we have to learn to do is to maintain an open society in the process. No society has ever faced what we have today. No society has ever had to face keeping itself wide open while understanding that terror lies within.

I am a native Washingtonian, a fourth-generation Washingtonian. We live here and feel ourselves the stewards of the Nation's capital. As such, we cannot stand by and see the Nation's capital ever be closed, because if it is closed or seems to close down, the rest of America will believe it must follow behind.

If this is to be an open and free society, it must begin with an open and free Washington, DC. I am proud of the Congress for keeping our Chambers open, for doing all we can to keep this city open, and for remembering that when we are open, the rest of the country will feel itself open. Finally we will, I believe, have the rest of the world believe they, too, must open their societies to us and to the rest of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for bringing this resolution to the floor.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), the chairman emeritus of the Committee on International Relations.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank our chairman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 464, commemorating the tragic events of 9-11. I commend our distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY); our distinguished Committee on International Relations chairman, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE); and our ranking minority member, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), for bringing this measure to the floor at this time.

On that day, 1 year ago, our Nation was deliberately and barbarically attacked by terrorists at New York's World Trade Center, at the Pentagon, and on Flight 93 over Pennsylvania. It is our solemn duty today to reflect on those terrorist events and to memorialize those who perished needlessly at the hands of those criminals.

My 20th Congressional District in New York lost more than 90 innocent lives on that terrible day. We join in extending our condolences to all of the 9-11 victims, and to their families and to their loved ones, and at the same time, reminding them of our Nation's unrelenting determination to bring to justice all those who carried out these evil acts.

As our Nation stands together today in honoring the innocent men and women who were taken from us on 9-11, we also pay tribute to our firefighters, to the police officers, to the rescue workers, and to all the citizens who bravely mounted the largest rescue operation in history under the most unthinkable conditions. Their countless heroic acts on 9-11 mark it both as a day of tragedy as well as triumph.

Let us also pause today to salute the men and women of our Armed Forces who are out there defending freedom and democracy on the front lines of our war on terrorism. Let us pray, too, for their safe return and their eventual triumph.

As we reflect today upon our extensive losses on the anniversary of tragedy and horror, let us also remember the valor, the patriotism, and the unity of our Nation in its darkest hour. That date, 9-11, was not only a turning point in the history of our great Nation, but also the world. As we seek God's blessing for our Nation and for the victims and heroes of September 11, let us all pledge to work together to make our world a safer place in which to live.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), one of the true statesmen in this body.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), for yielding me this time.

I am pleased to join him and also my very close friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), in recognizing and remembering. As well, I am pleased to follow the remarks of my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN). All three of these gentlemen, Mr. Speaker, have been in the forefront of focusing on the foreign policy of the United States. All three have focused on the extension of liberty and justice and freedom throughout this world. All three have focused on human rights and the recognition of the rights of individuals. How appropriate it is that these three leaders lead us in this remembrance.

Mr. Speaker, none of us, none of us will forget where we were when we learned the news. None of us, I think, will forget those 84 minutes from 8:46 a.m. on September 11, 2001, when the North Tower was struck, to 84 minutes later when the crash of the jet from Pennsylvania precluded the success of the terrorists in striking this Capitol.

None of us, Mr. Speaker, will ever forget. In an instant on that Tuesday morning, now known simply as 9-11, the generation of Americans, this generation of Americans, suffered its Pearl Harbor. In an instant, or more accurately, I suppose, in 84 minutes, more than 3,000 innocent human beings, many of uncommon courage, were murdered by criminals of unbounded evil.

Words, Mr. Speaker, cannot convey the depth of pain inflicted on this Nation and its people 1 year ago. The pain endures and will remain. Today we remember all those who were taken on that horrific day. Our thoughts and our prayers are with those who survived and those who lost loved ones, as well as with the brave men and women this very hour defending freedom here at home and abroad.

In many ways, such unspeakable acts have clarified our purpose, steeled our resolve, and confirmed who we are.

We are a peaceful, tolerant and compassionate people. The evidence of that, Mr. Speaker, lies throughout our great Nation.

Since September 11 private charities have raised more than $2.4 billion, private charities, more than $2.4 billion to assist survivors. Former President Clinton and former Senate majority leader Bob Dole joined to raise $105 million to pay for college for the children and spouses of those killed or disabled. More than 3,000 people download applications for Americorps every week; more than 76,000 have requested Peace Corps applications; and more than 48,000 have signed up for Citizen Corps programs. Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is a generous, compassionate and giving Nation.

Closer to home, Donn Marshall of Marbury, Maryland, refused to let the savagery of 9-11 define the life and loss of his beloved wife, Shelley. Shelley was an employee of the Defense Intelligence Agency and she was one of the 20 Fifth Congressional District residents and 53 Marylanders who were taken from their family and friends by the mindless acts of savagery on 9-11. Rather than give in, however, to unblinking but justified anger, Donn has given his sorrow meaning.

In tribute to his wife, Shelley, he established the Shelley A. Marshall Foundation, an irrevocable trust that funds children's story hours at public libraries, creative writing contests at colleges, and tea parties at nursing homes that bring senior citizens and high school students together.

The aftermath of 9-11 has seen countless other acts, Mr. Speaker, of generosity, community and courage, in your district, Mr. Speaker, in mine, and in the districts of every Member of this House, which is to say in every corner of this Nation. From the local police officers and firefighters who raced towards danger at the Pentagon and Ground Zero in New York City, to the Facchina Construction Company in my district and those employees who completed their reconstruction work at the Pentagon 3½ months early, even after their La Plata headquarters was devastated and destroyed by a tornado just a few months ago, to the local artist in my district who raised $5,000 for the widows and children of firefighters from the sale of 9-11 T-shirts that he designed.

Mr. Speaker, the terrorists who sought to break our spirit only fortified that spirit. Their barbarism reminded us of our inevitable vulnerability but also reminded us that we are a part of something much greater than ourselves. We are the land of the free because, Mr. Speaker, we are the home of the brave.

More than 40 years ago President Kennedy stirred our Nation when he said that, "The energy, the faith, the devotion that we bring to this endeavor will light our country and all who serve it." And he correctly concluded that, "The glow from that fire can truly light the world."

The fire of freedom, Mr. Speaker, forged the American character and it burns deep within our soul. The ashes of tragedy have rekindled that spirit; and one year later, the world must know freedom's light still burns brightly and its eternal truth shall never, never, never be extinguished. May God, Mr. Speaker, continue to bless and guide America as we continue our commitment to a just Nation and the defense and extension of freedom.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Without objection, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) will control the time on the majority side.

There was no objection.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP).

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this important resolution and I thank the leadership of both sides for their initiative.

Mr. Speaker, this is a day of remembrance, a day of remembering over 3,000 individual persons who died at the hands of people who were so deranged that they also died in their killings of innocents in America. A day of remembering 3,000 families that will never again be the same, but the families through their sacrifice have definitely contributed to a better America because of what they have given. A day of remembering the sacrifice and courage that was demonstrated, manifesting itself as love, immediately overtook hate, incredible love that sent warm feelings throughout the world towards the United States of America. It is a day of emotion.

I was at the Pentagon this morning, as were many of my colleagues and our President and the Secretary of Defense. I was there last year right after the Pentagon was struck. The stench of war, death and destruction a year ago was replaced this morning by the smell of new construction, a breeze that blew up the dust of a construction site now complete, sparkling new windows, and a whole new day at the Pentagon. A day of sadness for great loss. A day of joy for the Phoenix project and that new beginning. A day of humility.

I continue to be in awe of this job, this country, and the people of America. A day of national pride as we stand together with our President and our leadership. A day of deep and abiding love for our fellow man of all denominations from all around the world. God created each of us. But a day of righteous anger for what has happened, and a desire for justice to be served, but for our country to never extract revenge.

Mr. Speaker, today is a day of unity in this House and across this land. The Holy Scripture says that unity is a supernatural anointing of God. The words say, One can chase a thousand, in the Old Testament. Two can chase 10,000. What that means is whenever God's children get together with a common purpose, spirit of unity, God anoints that unity and supernatural things can happen. We have seen that in this country as we have come together. We need to do it more often. We need to continue the unity that this tragedy brought to this great Nation.

Mr. Speaker, today is a day of resolve. We live in a new and difficult time. We stand today, my generation, on the shoulders of the greatest generation. A generation that I grew up admiring and continue to admire. The greatest generation rightly earned their place in our country's history because of their dedication and their sacrifice. My generation has been called the "me generation." We are self-absorbed, self-consuming, lazy, maybe not even capable of having what it takes. But I believe that in the last year, thanks to our domestic warriors, our first responders, our troops on the home front, our firefighters and law enforcement personnel and EMTs, and the bravery and courage that they have shown, this "me generation" may be becoming the "we generation." More selflessness, more sacrifice, more courage than I have seen in my lifetime has been demonstrated in the last year.

I even see the joy in the eyes of the greatest generation as they look in their later years at what has happened in the last year with some amazement and incredible pride to say to this generation, you have what it takes, too. And I am glad because the days ahead are uncertain, challenges are many. We may have many difficult times that we must go through ahead; but, Mr. Speaker, we have what it takes because we inherited a legacy of courage and honor and valor and we must answer this call to courage because what is at stake is freedom.

It is fragile. It is a powerful force much like unity and love, but it is fragile. We must not rest. We must not grow complacent over time. We must be vigilant. We must be willing to fight and to die to preserve freedom.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend and distinguished colleague from Rhode Island (Mr. LANGEVIN).

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, today I join millions of people in solemn reflection on the tragic events of September 11, 2001.

One year has passed since that horrific day thrust the world into shock and sadness; and while some pain has subsided, our wounds have not entirely healed, particularly for those who lost loved ones in New York, Pennsylvania, and Washington. However, by responding to this tragedy with hope and determination, our Nation has grown stronger.

As the initial confusion of the attacks subsided, we became familiar with some of the names and the faces of the victims. Rhode Island was touched personally by this tragedy through the loss of several who called our State home. David and Lynn Angell, Carol Bouchard, Renee Newell, Mark Charette, Michael Gould, Amy Jarret, Kathryn Laborie, Shawn Nassaney and Lynn Goodchild. We learned about these individuals, their interests and their lives. We have prayed for their families and loved ones and responded to their grief with compassion.

As in the past, Americans offered sympathy and support to those touched by tragedy, reminding us that though the terrorists attacked our Nation, they did not and they cannot damage our spirit.

On this solemn occasion I pay tribute to those who lost their lives, to their friends and families who continue to grieve, to the American heroes who dedicated themselves to rescue and recovery efforts, to our service men and women who are defending our Nation against the ongoing threat of terrorism and to the spirit of America which has helped us endure these difficult times and will grow stronger from our sacrifices.

God bless America.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on this resolution be extended 60 minutes to be equally divided between the majority and the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE).

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) for yielding me time, and I thank the sponsors of the Patriot resolution which I rise in strong support of this afternoon.

Today is a solemn day to reflect on the lives lost and the families who have been altered forever by the terrorist attacks last September 11.

In the aftermath of these devastating attacks, the American public and people around the world came to realize that thousands of innocent Americans and others from many nations and walks of life perished because evil forces wanted to strike at the heart of this great Nation.

Today and forever we will grieve for all of the victims. We have listened to the reading of the names of those lost but who, more importantly, are the family, friends and loved ones of those who are still on this Earth and miss them today.

September 11 will always be etched in the minds of all Americans and our families and friends throughout the world. Today we remember our heroes who gave their lives so others may live, our brave citizens, firefighters, police officers, and emergency personnel. The outpouring of emotion, generosity, and courageousness of mankind continues to touch us daily. Now is not only the time for remembrance of the past but also a time to look forward to living our lives with vigor and joy. We are a country that stands more united than ever before. Our diversity has strengthened us and our pride in America continues to grow. On this pain-filled first anniversary, we stand tall defending freedom, working for peace, and seeking justice. We must continue to support one another, and we must remain committed and united in the war against terrorism and use all of our might to bring to justice all of those involved with the attacks. Today we pledge to do everything in our power to defeat terrorism and to make our Nation stronger in every way that has made it a beacon of freedom and opportunity in the entire world.

May God bless America.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding me this time. And I thank the authors of this resolution today.

A year ago today, many of us as Americans might have been asking the question who are we? And the terrorists who attacked us might have thought in that horrific act of violence that who we were would crumble. They might have expected that because we came from all walks of life and spoke different languages when we first came to this Nation, we enjoy our respective cultures, that the coalition would disintegrate, that we would no longer be America, that we would begin to join places where we might have come from or our ancestors might have started and we might have gone at each other and might have accused each other.

But we fooled them because America is a Nation of the free and the brave. It is in fact a very special place; and more than anytime in our lifetime, Americans stood united. It frightened the rest of the world, I might imagine, those who wanted to perpetrate terrorism, undermine our democratic ideals, get us to attack our Constitution. We stood firm. As I sat there today at the Pentagon and I watched as our flag began to blow in the morning's wind, it reminded me of the words of Francis Scott Key, why he was so moved to write the "Star Spangled Banner," for as he looked up as those bombs were bursting and that war was going on, he felt that there was a theme and a symbol that continued, and his words were:

"Now it catches the gleam of the morning's fresh beam,

In full glory, reflected now shines on the stream;

'Tis the star spangled banner. O, long may it wave

Over the land of the free and the home of the brave."

That is what we showed the world on September 11. We showed them that we could in fact survive. And today I take time to salute those first responders who helped us survive, the police, the firefighters, the paramedics, all the medical professionals, and just plain ordinary people, the volunteers, the men and women of the United States military who too today stand at the front line of freedom and opportunity and justice, the unsung heroes, many of whom will not and did not live to tell their own story. We honor them and yesterday belongs to the families, the families of those who lost their lives and the families of survivors. We honor them and we thank them.

I spoke today to a family member who lost his wife in Somerset, Pennsylvania; and his words were chilling to me. It reminded me of the importance of the resolve of this Nation and of this government. He said simply, "I do not understand. I'm still living through this. I do not know how I'm going to get through it." He, however, may take comfort in the way that America has come together, how we have comforted each other. He may take comfort in knowing that anytime we are attacked, we will stand unified together. Their stories may never be told, those who lost their lives, but we will stand arm in arm together.

Might I say, Mr. Speaker, as I close, that the government came together, State and local officials. Might I also say that even though we were diverse, we did not use this time to attack any religious group, any believers of any faith, any distinctive ethnic group. We came together.

I would simply say, Mr. Speaker, that this Nation is a Nation under God. I hold this Bible. I will not read it today, but I am proud as an American that if I chose to do, I could read this Bible because we do have the freedom which we fight for, and that is why I know in our hearts we will continue to wage this ongoing fight against terrorism; but we will do it by showing to the world our own values of democracy and of freedom and of justice and equality.

I believe the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" says it well:

"Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord. He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored.

He has loosed the fateful lightning of His terrible swift sword.

His truth is marching on."

The truth of this Nation continues to march, and we can do it in a way that understands freedom.

God bless America and God bless its people, for the truth will continue to march on.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

In the way of introduction of the next gentleman, I would say that the Speaker, in the aftermath of the events of September 11, decided to create an entity within the House of Representatives to focus on the problems of terrorism. He placed that responsibility in the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and created under the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) a new subcommittee to focus exclusively on terrorism, and that subcommittee is chaired by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), and the ranking minority member is the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN). A report they have prepared for the House is exceptionally insightful, very important in our work here; and I commend the gentleman and the gentlewoman from California for their effort.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS).

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) for his very kind comments, and it was a very bipartisan effort that allowed us to produce what I think is a very informative report.

Mr. Speaker, today I rise in strong support of this resolution. On the anniversary of September 11, we remember the innocent victims of last year's terrorist attack against our Nation and pay tribute to the heroes who risked their lives to save others.

This day is indelibly marked in our Nation's memory. It is a day when our Nation changed, when we were savagely attacked by malicious enemies whose hatred of freedom and democracy runs so deep that they would murder innocent men, women and children.

These attacks on our cherished principles, values and freedoms tried to weaken our Nation; but the tragic events of September 11, 2001, only strengthened the American resolve. The loss is overwhelming; but in the wake of this tragedy, we have witnessed many of the best aspects of America: the tremendous outpouring of patriotism, a common sense of grief and loss which touched every American, a bond of love and support among strangers from across the land, a renewed commitment to our respective religious beliefs, and a renewed national resolve to root out terrorism and act against the enemies of America.

Today at the Pentagon ceremony, I visited with Pat Hogan, the widow of Major Cole Hogan of Macon, Georgia. Major Hogan was an Army Green Beret who served his country bravely here at home and around the world and was killed in the attack on the Pentagon. Our hearts, prayers, and thoughts are with the friends and families like Pat Hogan who suffered such a tremendous loss a year ago.

Over the past year we have endured daunting challenges, and our lives have been forever changed by these terrorist acts and the threat that continues to confront us. We have made progress in making America a safer place and fighting the war on terrorism. More still needs to be done; but as we move forward, we have an opportunity to rededicate ourselves to do all we can to work together to preserve the memory of those who perished in making our Nation a better place, a safer place and to ensure that the spirit of freedom, democracy and our core American values continue to burn even brighter in our Nation and around the world.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I too rise to remember the terrible events of September 11, to honor the victims of the attack and their families and to let them know that especially today, they do not stand alone, and to pay tribute to the heroes of that day, the passengers of Flight 93, the rescue efforts at the Pentagon and in New York City, the police officers, the firefighters, the first responders, emergency medical technicians, the health care providers.

That day started with great shock and honor, Mr. Speaker; but it ended with incredible unity and a sense of resolve that those responsible would be held accountable. From the ashes of that attack arose a new sense of patriotism and a solemn pledge to never forget and to learn from that terrible day.

We became unified in this Nation out of a sense of common values that we share: love of country, love of the freedom and liberties that we hold so dear, a shared sense of common vulnerability now that our splendid isolationism in the world and our sense of innocence was taken from us. That is perhaps what has made me most angry about the events of last September 11, the grief that we have to share with the families who lost loved ones, but the knowledge that my two little boys and all our children in our country will have to grow up in a 21st century with the specter of terrorism and that vulnerability hanging over their heads.

I was heartbroken to have read the story of the two little boys who lost a father at the World Trade Center when they were at home, and they got all excited and started jumping up and down when they saw their dad's car being pulled into the driveway. They were screaming, "Mommy, Mommy, Daddy's home, Daddy's home." She knew that could not be the case, and she looked out the window to only see a tow truck dropping off her husband's car in the family driveway and having to explain to her sons why their dad was never coming home again.

ida who came back up to Ground Zero to sift through the wreckage in order to find the remains of bodies so they could be identified. They did it out of a sense of honor to their fallen comrades but also because they had lost their own sons, the next generation of firefighters who went into those burning buildings to save lives. One of the firefighters was interviewed by Ted Koppel, and he asked them, "Why are you doing this day in and day out, from dawn to dusk every day?" He responded, "When we signed up to be firefighters and when our sons signed up to be firefighters, we all knew there was a risk in this job, but everyone deserves a decent burial."

These are the memories that will live with us for the rest of our lives and why it is so heartbreaking.

After one of our intelligence briefings, I was talking to one of the intelligence officers and commented to him how sophisticated this terrorist operation seemed, and he replied that it was not all that impressive. He said it was a low-tech operation. It is very easy to fly commercial airlines when they are already afloat. The hard part is landing them safely, and they never intended to land safely.

That is the challenge that lies before our country today. We not only need to fly the Ship of State safely, but we need to land the Ship of State safely; and that is why I hope that we learn from this terrible event, but do not get too intoxicated with our own military power, which is considerable.

I would hope that we realize we must maintain our good citizenship throughout the globe, that we are in this all together. This is not only about enhancing our own security interests in the United States and for our citizens abroad, but for all of the freedom-loving nations throughout the globe who have a common goal in defeating international terrorism.

We cannot do this alone. We need the help of the international community.

It is easy for our Nation, with the military power that we now possess, to accomplish so-called regime change. The hard part is nation-building that comes after. And that is why it is vitally important, I believe, that we keep our eye on the ball; that we pursue the al Qaeda organization, wherever they have scattered to the four winds, and that we do it with the cooperation and the help of the international community.

I am confident with the deliberations in the days ahead that we will be guided with proper decisions. May God bless and may God continue to guide this great Nation.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PLATTS).

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding me this time. One year ago today, the lives of all Americans were forever changed. For the terrorists, the story of the September 11 attacks is one of immense hate, a hatred for the principles of freedom, liberty, and equality for which our great Nation stands. For Americans, however, the story of September 11 is a story of immense love, a love of country, a love for human life.

Firefighters, police officers, and everyday citizens were heroic in rescuing victims of the attacks, and later in recovering the remains so as to properly honor those lost. Countless other citizens volunteered to assist and encouraged relief workers. Across the country, flags waved, hands were clasped in historic unity, and voices joined in prayer and in patriotic song.

In response to the attacks, America has been made stronger. Americans better appreciate the sacrifices that police officers, firefighters and emergency personnel make every day to ensure our safety. And we certainly have a much deeper admiration for the courageous devotion to duty of our servicemen and women, our men and women in uniform, who fight to defend our precious freedoms throughout the world.

President Bush so profoundly captured the enduring spirit of America when he stated last year, "We will not tire. We will not falter. We will not fail. United we stand."

God bless those who lost loved ones in the attacks of September 11 and those who gave their lives seeking to save the lives of others, and certainly God bless the United States of America.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), my good friend, the distinguished ranking member of our Committee on Agriculture, and a great patriot.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. It has been said that "Greater love hath no one than to lay down his life for a friend." Unless perhaps he or she lays down a life for a stranger. That is the love, the heroism, the patriotism that we pause today to remember and to honor. It is the love we witnessed on a large scale in New York and Pennsylvania, and Washington 1 year ago. But it is also the love that is practiced daily in communities across this great land.

In some ways, September 11, 2001, is so indelibly imprinted on our minds and souls that it is difficult to believe an entire year has passed. As we recall each detail personally experienced on that day, we remember the horror, the anguish, the sorrow, and the fear. Certainly these emotions remain fresh to all of those who lost a loved one. But even for citizens in other parts of the country hundreds of miles away, our connection as fellow Americans meant that we all felt deep grief.

As John Donne wrote more than 300 years ago, "No man is an island, entire of itself. Any man's death diminishes me because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls, it tolls for thee." In the weeks following September 11, as we heard the bells tolling or the bagpipes playing Amazing Grace in funeral after funeral, each one of us did feel that a part of us had died. And so today, as we remember, we feel sadness, we feel grief.

For those of us who were not physically present at one of the attack sites, perhaps our greatest wound came from the fear that gripped our chests and our country. Suddenly our sense of safety, of invulnerability, of carefree security received a vicious slash from a cruel and unexpected attacker.

As a Nation, we face the question will we be paralyzed by this fear or will we overcome it? The answer to that question is where the story brings us today. From biblical times until today humanity has discovered three things which overcome fear: Love, faith and action.

Some people are aware of that truth every day of their lives. Each community's firefighters, our police officers, our emergency and health care workers, our men and women in military uniform, every day these heroes set aside personal fear in order to do their job so that the rest of us might live safely. They risk the possibility of laying down their lives for both friend and stranger and in doing so they demonstrate some of the greatest examples of love in our society.

The year that has passed since September 11 has also helped us find meaning in and through our grief. It has given us an ability to view both world events and our personal lives with a new perspective. And what we have seen is that one of the darkest days of our history gave birth to thousands of acts of goodness, creating perhaps one of our finest hours. Ordinary men and women across the country showed extraordinary bravery, kindness and compassion as we pulled together as one United Nations.

As we look back, we learn that it was through our giving back that we are now able to move forward. So while we respect and honor those who lost their lives a year ago, and feel compassion for those who remain in grief, today is also a day of celebration. We celebrate the American spirit, the heroes who are gathered here today among us all over America, and the three antidotes to fear, love, faith and action.

The marvelous thing is that every one of us has the capacity to bring to life these fear fighters. We cannot all rush into burning buildings or stop senseless acts of violence. Few of us may actually be faced with the opportunity to save another life. But we all can be heroes by loving, by believing, and by acting to strengthen our communities. As we honor our heroes, both living and dead, we are called to find the heroic urge inside ourselves.

September 11 may have shown us the worst of humanity, but it also reminded us of the chance to become the best of humanity, by loving, believing and acting. May each of us today honor those who died by doing just that.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased now to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS).

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, exactly 1 year ago today, the lives of every American citizen were changed by the cowardly acts of terrorism committed against us on our own soil. Families were broken, loved ones were lost forever, and our sense of security was shaken.

Yet even in the dark hours of September 11, 2001, hope remained. For within the hearts of Americans, we share a common bond as citizens of the greatest Nation on earth. This bond prompts us to courage, to service, and to patriotism. This bond inspired Americans on the day of the attacks to rush to the aid of their fellow Americans without thought of possible consequences to themselves. This bond provides hope that our Nation will heal from our grief and conquer those who would threaten our liberty and our way of life.

While we choose to honor the sacrifices and tragedy of September 11 with solemnity today, we also celebrate who we are as a Nation. We celebrate our Republic, we celebrate freedom, we celebrate service, sacrifice and love for one another. We celebrate the heroic acts of ordinary citizens and to commemorate the tragic events of September 11. From the soldier to the firefighter and policeman, to ordinary folks going about their daily lives, we salute you. Your sacrifices will not be in vain. A grateful Nation lives and hopes because of your love for this great country.

I close today with Professor Al G. Wright's beautiful ode to our Nation, which celebrates our country with these words: "I am an American. That is the way most of us put it, just matter-of-factly. They are plain words, those four. You could write them on your thumbnail, or you could sweep them clear across this bright autumn sky. But remember, too, that they are more than words. They are a way of life. So whenever you speak them, speak them firmly, speak them proudly, speak them gratefully. I am an American."

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ROSS), my distinguished colleague and good friend.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, September 11, 2001, is a day that none of us will ever forget. I was sitting in my office across from our Nation's Capitol, and from the window in my office, I literally saw smoke rise from the Pentagon. A few hours later, I would learn that a young Navy petty officer from our district named Nehamon Lyons would be among the casualties at the Pentagon. Picking up the phone and calling his mom, Mrs. Jewel Lyons, back in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, was the most difficult call I have ever made.

This morning, I joined with other Members of Congress and with our President, united, Democrat and Republican alike, united as one America, as we remembered in a special service at the Pentagon. We remembered those who lost their lives 1 year ago today at the Pentagon, at that pasture in Pennsylvania, and, yes, at the World Trade Center in New York City. After that ceremony I returned to my office and I called Mrs. Jewel Lyons in Pine Bluff, Arkansas, to let her know what I had just experienced in that very special and moving service at the Pentagon and to let her know that America has not forgotten that young Navy petty officer, Nehamon Lyons, and his service to this great country.

My grandfather taught me to always look for something good in everything bad. There was not anything good about September 11, but I do believe it has brought out the best in the American spirit. I see a country today that is more patriotic than perhaps ever in my lifetime. I see a country today with a greater appreciation for our veterans and our soldiers. And I see a country today that is praying a lot more. Bible sales are up, church attendance is up, and I know that means America is only getting stronger.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, on the first anniversary of the tragic events that killed so many Americans at the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, it is natural for our thoughts to turn to the victims of that day. It was, of course, a world-changing event that will continue to affect all of us. Now we know, too, that an extraordinary debt of gratitude is owed to those brave passengers of United Flight 93, which crashed in a Pennsylvania field. They fought the murderous hijackers in the cockpit and, thus, foiled the plot to crash that plane into the Capitol or White House.

The families of the victims will continue to grieve their losses, but the commemoration around the Nation today should focus on reinforcing America's newly heightened unity and sense of resolve that we as a Nation will dramatically increase our effectiveness in protecting our homeland and our citizens abroad from terrorist attacks. We must remain committed to meet these challenges while at the same time preserving the freedom, civil liberties, and opportunities which make America the envy of the world.

The period set aside for formally mourning our losses is long past. The victims and their families now are best served if all of us share and act upon a commitment to keep our Nation secure, strong, and a bastion of liberty. May God bless America.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN), a distinguished colleague and good friend.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution. It is hard to believe that it has been exactly 1 year since that terrible September day, 1 year since our Nation experienced that devastating and profound loss. Words cannot begin to express the heartache that we felt that day, or the sympathy we continue to feel for those who were lost.

Like many of my colleagues, I represented several of the victims of September 11; and I appreciate this opportunity to extend my deepest condolences and prayers to their loved ones.

It has been a difficult, but necessary, week for all of us. From our session in New York City and visit to Ground Zero, to the ceremony at the Pentagon this morning, to the consideration of this resolution, Members of this House have had the opportunity to express our solidarity with the families and communities most deeply affected by September 11.

Today is also an opportunity to pay tribute to the millions of Americans who reacted with such bravery and compassion in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks, the doctors and nurses who ministered to the injured; the firefighters, police officers, ironworkers and others who refused to leave the site of the World Trade Center until everyone was accounted for; the ordinary citizens from every corner of our country, every background and religion, who donated blood, money, or who provided a kind word or a prayer.

Mr. Speaker, I also think it is important at this moment for us to express our gratitude to our men and women in our Armed Forces who, as we speak, continue to battle terrorists in Afghanistan. They serve our country with great distinction, and they are a credit to our country and, indeed, to the world.

We have accomplished a great deal in the past year by working together, but I believe we have much more to do.

Today we recall the solidarity and compassion shown our Nation and our people by other nations and other peoples around the world, and we can work with them to bring our most cherished values into reality.

Mr. Speaker, we can, I believe, make this world less violent, more peaceful, more tolerant, and more secure. We have the ability to eradicate poverty, disease, hunger and hopelessness, the things that terrorists exploit to justify the unjustifiable. What we need is the will to make it happen. We need to lead the world in pursuit of these important goals. In doing so, I believe we will demonstrate the true and magnificent character of the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, it is my hope that as we remember the victims of September 11, as we offer our condolences to their families, and as we continue to bring the perpetrators to justice, that we rededicate ourselves to providing a better world for us all.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. Cox).

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, today is Memorial Day for the victims and the heroes of September 11. It is a time to honor the people who have died and the people who still live. It is important as we grieve for the victims that we keep in mind how many people are alive today because of the efforts of those who helped them, many of them still alive.

Today it was my honor, along with Senator BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL of Colorado, to honor and recognize 11 members of our Park Police here in Washington, DC who were heroes and first responders on that day. It was an interesting way to recognize them. There was a crosscountry motorcycle ride organized by citizens from all of our districts and States across the country. It started out in Orange County, California, went to San Diego, California, 3,500 miles later it picked up hundreds of riders and came here to the Nation's capital. Like BEN CAMPBELL, I am a Harley rider and so I was happy to join them. That is why I found myself in a position to be able to bestow these glass plaques to our first responders.

First, the riders themselves, our constituents. They raised $1 million for the World Trade Center Miracles Foundation just from among the riders. In that they were like the people who responded heroically on September 11. They put aside their concerns and put first the needs of others. That is what people all around our country are doing in response to September 11.

Along their 3,500 mile route, they stopped in places like Wichita, Kansas, where they dedicated an evening to the family of Daniel Nolan. He perished in the World Trade Center. A few days later they were in Illinois at the Champaign County Fairgrounds celebrating the important work of first responders. Only yesterday, they traveled to Stoney Creek School in Shanksville, Pennsylvania, where the students had built a memorial to the heroes of Flight 93. At every step along the way, they honored the dead and the living, as we do today.

This coast-to-coast effort culminated in the honoring of 11 heroes who live among us in Washington, DC, from the United States Park Police; and I would like to mention their names on the floor.

First, two members of the motorcycle unit, Lieutenant George F. Wallace, commander, and Sergeant Daniel P. Beck, supervisor of the unit. They were in front of the Capitol today. They saw what had happened at the Pentagon from this side of the river, and they did what heroes do: they went right to the middle of that danger. They were two of the first uniformed police at the Pentagon on the scene. They assisted in the initial evacuation of the wounded. Their efforts helped ensure that those injured who were still alive received immediate care, and for that, obviously, those men and women, their families, and all of us are grateful.

After the arrival of other local police and fire units, these officers continued to work. They cleared the vicinity and organized the evacuation of personnel from the monumental core area.

There were nine others outside the Capitol who were similarly honored. The members of the United States Park Police Aviation Unit, Eagle One and Eagle Two. Eagle One includes Sergeant Ronald A. Galey, pilot; Sergeant John E. Marsh, rescue technician; and John J. Dillon, rescue team officer.

Eagle Two includes Lieutenant Philip W. Cholak, aviation unit commander; Sergeant Bernard T. Stasulli, assistant aviation unit commander; Sergeant Keith E. Bohn, pilot; Sergeant Kenneth S. Burchell, copilot; and physician assistant Keith Kettell and Jason Kepp, medic, of the Uniformed Services University.

Here is what these people did on September 11. At approximately 9:40, the United States Park Police received an emergency call from Reagan National Airport tower notifying them that a plane had crashed in the vicinity of the Pentagon. They did not know yet what had happened. Members of Eagle One immediately lifted off, and they flew right into the center of the disaster, hovered right over the Pentagon, and they honored an FBI request and activated their microwave downlink and provided a live video feed of exactly what was going on at that moment.

Just as Eagle One began to provide this live feed, personnel at Reagan National Airport abandoned the airport tower and said they could not see anything because of the smoke. They requested that these people, the names I just gave you, take over responsibility for all of the air space, and they did. They took control over all of the tower's responsibility.

Even as Eagle One completed this assignment, Sergeant March requested helicopters from the Maryland State Police, MedStar and AirCare, and coordinated with ground units to establish a landing zone, honoring a request from the Arlington County Fire Department to transport patients to regional burn centers.

Meanwhile, Eagle Two's crew responded to its call of duty and loaded the mass casualty kit and additional equipment on board their aircraft. They landed on the west side of the Pentagon and immediately began coordinating the transport of 11 priority-one burn patients. While Eagle One directed MedStar and AirCare aircraft into the landing zone to medevac additional patients, Eagle Two transported two of these patients to the Washington Hospital Center. Those people are alive and doing much better today as a result of these heroic efforts.

As a lasting example of their heroic efforts, the U.S. Park Police Aviation Unit responded to a final request of the Arlington County Fire Department to transport a battalion chief of the Pentagon Fire Command Center for a 1-hour flight over the crash site because he was directing the firefighting efforts on the ground from their craft.

Those are just some of the heroes of September 11. They live among us here. It was, as I said, my honor to present them with citations this morning. But as we honor these first responders, I think we have to remember that, as we draw inspiration from their work, they are still there every day protecting our neighborhoods. They are still there every day protecting us from threats, whether it be fire or a terrorist attack. Because of their bravery, which we take so much for granted, we have a wonderful future to look forward to in this country.

I have no doubt that we will succeed in our efforts in the war on terror, and I have no doubt that we will owe a continuing and ever-deeper debt of gratitude to these men and women to protect and defend our country. I am grateful for the opportunity to honor these men and women.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS).

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, in communities across the land, we gather to commemorate the unspeakable attacks against our Nation 1 year ago today.

Even with the passage of time, there are still no words to adequately describe our pain, sorrow, and our anger. Our hearts remain heavy with grief for the 3,000 souls who were lost, and we continue to mourn with their families and their loved ones.

I feel especially heartbroken for all the children who lost their fathers and mothers on this terrible day, and for all of the babies who came into the world after their fathers were killed. These young lives have been permanently and senselessly altered by those who so erroneously believe that extremism and hate pave the road to salvation.

Now it is our duty to help these children fulfill their dreams and understand that their parents died in an attack on the freedoms and values we hold to be self-evident.

It is also important to pay tribute to the acts of courage and heroism carried out by so many people: the firefighters, police and rescue personnel, the passengers on the doomed aircraft, and by countless citizens who volunteered at the crash sites and around the Nation. Some of them included volunteers from my district on the central coast of California who lent their expertise and resources.

Today is a day that we should honor all of the first responders who not only risked their lives on September 11, but who are also the first on the scenes of emergencies and disasters every day in communities across this country.

I am so proud of their commitment and their determination to make our country, indeed the world, a safer place. These brave individuals deserve our highest respect on September 11 and on every day.

It is also important to remember and honor the brave American servicemen and women who are defending our freedom around the globe, joined by defenders from other countries.

They are defending the principles of democracy and security on which this country was founded, and we salute their tireless mission. This has been a year of great sorrow and mourning. But it has also been a time of great American unity, strength of spirit, and generosity.

As one widow reflected, it is as though this entire year has been stuck on September 11. Now, perhaps, we can move on to September 12.

Mr. Speaker, I hope and pray, and let us work, that the coming year will bring peace to our families, our community, our Nation, and that the generosity of our people and the spirit of our democracy will be well known and well documented throughout the world.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. PUTNAM).

Mr. PUTNAM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, this is an emotional time for this country and an emotional time for this body. All of us have participated in events in our communities, tributes to the victims and their families in New York and the Pentagon, and that is right and proper. But I want to take this opportunity on this first Patriot Day to look forward, to remember and pause and reflect on why they envy us so, why the terrorists hate us so. What is it that would cause them to bring about the death and destruction of so many innocent lives, so many hopes and dreams shattered, so many communities who have lost church members, PTA officers, rotary club presidents, chamber directors, so many children who have lost a parent?

They despise the fact that we stand for freedom; that we represent all that is great, all that is tolerant and hopeful and helpful and strong about communities.

They misunderstood us. They thought we were no stronger than the celluloid films that come out of Hollywood; that we would buckle and cave, that we would wither up and shrink from the fight.

What they did not understand was that we had an army of ordinary American citizens who would rally; who would stand in line for hours to give their blood; who would contribute their paychecks to strangers; whose children would go to schools and have penny drives and carwashes and other fundraisers to send off to the victims, their families, and even the children in Afghanistan.

They hate the fact that in America little girls have the same opportunities as little boys, to dream, to hope, to be whatever they want to be, from a teacher to a firefighter to a Member of Congress, to President of the United States. They are afforded equal opportunity.

They resent the fact that different faiths have every opportunity to worship together, side by side, on the same city block, in peace.

They resent the fact that we have heroic civil servants who deliver the mail, who put out fires, who comfort victims, who run into buildings that everyone else is running out of; that we have teachers who instill values and character into the next generation of Americans; that we have health care workers, doctors and nurses, who rally to the scene and give so much of their heart and soul to putting lives and bodies back together.

People still risk their life to come to this country. People still see the United States as that shining city on a hill. They still risk their family's safety, they give up all of their worldly possessions, to stow away in a tanker or to cobble together a rickety raft and brave the straits of Florida or the Atlantic, to become a part of this country that those terrorists tried to destroy.

If given the opportunity, most free people, most thoughtful people, would choose that way of life, would choose that equality, that tolerance, that hope, that dream that is America.

And while all of us fight on a regular basis in this Chamber over things great and small, we never question the legitimacy of the debate or the legitimacy of the leadership or of the system or of the institution. While we criticize the policies of our President or administration, we do not question his right to be there and be our leader.

That is what they hated, that is what they envied, that is what they attempted to destroy, and they have succeeded only in bringing out the best in all Americans, leaving America today stronger than she was last September 11; a little closer together, still fairly complacent, still fairly naive about the dangers this world poses, but still very much in love with all things American, very much in love with our ability to debate on this floor, our ability to hope and dream and be whatever we want to be, and to instill that in our young people.

America is stronger today than she was a year ago; a little bruised, very bloodied in some areas, but stronger.

Mr. Speaker, God bless these United States of America.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, our Nation was changed forever on the morning of September 11. The goal of Osama bin Laden was to demoralize us, was to create fear and uncertainty, to bring about instability in our country; and, obviously and thankfully, he has failed.

Last week Congress met in New York City to pay tribute to those who were killed on September 11 in that city, and this morning we assembled at the Pentagon. At these events and similar events all over this country, we were reminded about our resiliency and how strong this Nation really is.

Last September 11, we saw amazing displays of heroism and bravery. We saw what is extraordinary and best in the human spirit. None of us will ever forget the sight of firemen entering the World Trade Center, going up the stairs while other people were going down the stairs. And, as we know, most of those firemen never got out of that building alive.

We also today remember the courage of the people at the Pentagon who saved lives there, and we honor the members of our Armed Forces who are fighting terrorism in Afghanistan and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, we have also learned a great deal since September 11. We have learned, as we have never learned before, that we are a vulnerable Nation.

Yes, we are the most powerful Nation on Earth, but what we learned on that day is that we could be attacked and that thousands of innocent men and women could be killed.

We have also learned that we must lead an international coalition against bigoted, religious fanatics who believe that they have the right to kill innocent people in order to impose their reactionary ideology on others.

Many of us have also learned that in order to maintain true American values, we must not undermine the principles and constitutional rights that make our country great and that this country was founded on.

As an American and as a Vermonter I have been extraordinarily proud of how our people responded to this crisis in terms of blood donations, financial contributions, and how we came together as a community to support the victims of September 11 and to support each other. If there is something positive out of the horrors of September 11, it is that we as a Nation, all of us, despite our backgrounds, where we come from, our religious beliefs, must continue to show that same sense of community, that love for each other, that was demonstrated in the aftermath of the September 11 attacks.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER).

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the resolution. Today is the 1-year anniversary of the most horrific attack on American soil in our history. On September 11, 2001, freedom-hating terrorists took from all of us our sense of innocence. They took from all of us the idea that innocent men, women and children going about their daily lives are immune from the horrors of war. They took from all of us the sense of safety and security to which we had become accustomed.

What they did not take from us and what they could not ever take from us, no matter how hard they tried a year ago, is our freedom and liberty, our way of life, our government of the people, by the people and for the people.

New York Governor Pataki opened the memorial ceremony at Ground Zero this morning with the reading of the Gettysburg Address which President Lincoln delivered in 1863, barely 100 miles from where the passengers of United Flight 93 heroically stopped terrorists from their attempt to, I believe, destroy this very building.

Part of President Lincoln's address includes these words: "That from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave their last full measure of devotion, that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."

We, too, are dedicated to a new birth of freedom here in this new century.

The horrible events of last September 11 have reawakened in all Americans a new sense of patriotism; a strength, a resolve that had lain dormant for far too long. The flags we see flying in every neighborhood across America today were not put up this morning. They have been there for the last year. The support of the American people for our men and women fighting overseas has remained unwavering, and the kind words and deeds of our fellow man seem all the more common today, 1 year later.

Eugene McCarthy once observed that America can choke on a gnat, but swallow tigers whole. This is a tiger that we as a Congress and as a Nation must deal with, and we will.

There is no lack of resolution here. There is no rancor. We will continue to stand behind the President. We will continue to do what we must do to keep those who hate our values and ideals from committing evil acts against us ever again.

Today let us honor and pay tribute to those who were taken from us before their time and resolve to remember them always. But let us also resolve that our commitment to the Republic that our Founders risked their own lives to create more than 200 years ago is stronger than ever. The foundation of our Nation is solid, and so is our dedication to her.

Mr. Speaker, God bless America.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF).

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, the world must be made safe for democracy. Its peace must be planted upon the tested foundations of political liberty. We have no selfish ends to serve. We desire no conquests, no dominion. We seek no indemnities for ourselves, no material compensation for the sacrifices we shall freely make. We are but one of the champions of the rights of mankind.

These were the words of President Woodrow Wilson in his war message to Congress April 2, 1917.

This week, from Los Angeles to New York, from Fairbanks to Fort Lauderdale, and in 200 million households in between, a Nation struggles to come to grips with the most vicious attack on unarmed civilians in the Nation's history.

We once again appreciate, with the force that sometimes only tragedy brings home, that we are one country. Differences of geography, language, income and ethnicity have faded away. There are no national divides, no partisan debates, no hometown rivalries, no baseball strikes, not on this day. For all too brief a time, we are simply Americans.

Some of that change has been extraordinarily positive for our own security and for the peace and prosperity of the world. The promise of mutually assured destruction that for decades we exchanged with the Soviets has been replaced with an unprecedented partnership with Russia. This is no detente, but a completely new realignment of interests, which has transformed the world landscape and dramatically reduced the possibility of nuclear catastrophe.

For all that has changed in the last year and all that has transformed since the end of the Cold War, we are still at risk. Our most immediate and tangible threat comes not from interlocking engagements with a Europe that cannot overcome its historic feuding, not from nation states that are amassing colossal military forces with an eye towards territorial aggrandizement or world domination. The threat is primarily asymmetrical now, from stateless terrorist organizations and the nations that support them; from murderous psychopaths that are bent on igniting a holy war and have a blood lust for the United States. Such depravity has always existed, but with the advent of weapons of mass destruction and their terrible availability, it no longer takes a national miscalculation to inflict misery on the world. And as the lone superpower in the world, America has a target on her back.

The threat may come from new quarters, but we have one powerful bond with Americans from the beginning of the last century: This conflict is still about making the world safe for democracy.

On September 11 we were not attacked because we sought to conquer or subjugate another people. We were not attacked over a territorial dispute or a clash of national ideologies. And, notwithstanding post-attack propaganda from the terrorists, we were not attacked over our policy in the Middle East. Osama bin Laden and al Qaeda never showed an interest in the Palestinian cause except in a post-attack effort to point their homicidal rage as a defense to the West's supposed hostility to Islam. We were attacked simply because we existed, simply because we represented and continue to represent the triumph of free institutions, a respect for the free exercise of religion, association, and expression. We were attacked because we are a democracy in a world very unsafe for democracies. And winning this war, and the long twilight struggle it has become, will require nothing less than a sustained, unswerving commitment to the propagation of freedoms around the world.

We must root out al Qaeda and terrorist organizations wherever they exist. We must take the fight to the enemy, as the President declares, and not wait defensively at home for the next attack. At the same time, we must open a completely new front in the war on terrorism: the battle for democracy. We must attack tyranny, despotism, and the trampling of human rights around the world. We must use every instrument of our national policy to support the growth and cultivation of free institutions, a respect for the free exercise of religion, the right to associate with whom one pleases, and the right to speak one's mind. We must encourage the growth of democracies in every corner of the globe and not simply in Europe or the Americas. Democracy must come to the Arab nations, to China, and to every corner of Africa, and not simply to our adversaries. Democracy, too, must come to our allies, to the Saudis, to the Egyptians, and to the Jordanians. Democracy, not oil, will be the ultimate guarantor of our security.

This lofty ambition is not fanciful, not quaintly sympathetic, but practical. Democracies do not make needless war, democracies do not seek to terrorize or conquer, democracies do not serve as the breeding grounds for genocidal rage or terrorist madness. Democracies are better capable of eliminating the common scourges of mankind: poverty, disease, famine, and conflict. If we are to be partisans, let us be partisans of democracy.

We may never ferret out every last terrorist; the germ of madness is difficult to eradicate completely. But our peace and prosperity lie as much in changing the soil. Peace, again, must be "planted upon the tested foundations of political liberty," and a cardinal part of winning this war, as in the war to end all wars, will be our fortitude as one of the "champions of the rights of mankind."

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on this resolution be extended for 30 minutes to be equally divided between the majority and the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER), my good friend and distinguished colleague.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy in permitting me to speak on this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, at 8:46 this morning I came to this Chamber, where I was exactly a year ago, to reflect on the events that had transpired that terrible day and what has ensued since then. As we all shared a flood of remembrance in honor of the memory of the victims and the heroes of last September 11, I think, Mr. Speaker, it is just as important for us to reflect on the progress of this past year. Because tragedy gave us an opportunity and a responsibility, not just to deal with additional threats to our families, but to use the vast wealth and power of the United States to be a leader and a partner around the world, while we fulfill the promise of America here at home.

I thought about how much I have been inspired by the reactions of the American public at the time of the tragedy and of what we have seen throughout the year. But, Mr. Speaker, I wonder honestly what we think we have accomplished as a Congress in this last year. Immediately, we did do, as the resolution says: Local, State, and Federal leaders set aside differences and worked together to provide for those who were attacked and to protect those who remain. But since then, since then, is America really safer because of congressional action? Do the vast intelligence and security agencies now work together seamlessly? Have we made progress, not just against the Taliban and al Qaeda, but to promote democracy and freedom, peace and prosperity around the globe? Is this Congress working together cooperatively on issues of peace, the environment, human health, and education?

By any objective measure, we as elected officials have fallen short of that mark. We have yet as a body to provide voice, not just to the fears and frustrations, but to the hopes and aspirations of Americans that we will seize this moment.

Now, I think people on both sides of the aisle will disagree as to why this is so, but I do not think anybody can argue that we have done all that we could, or even, frankly, that we have done all that much from airline security, to reducing energy dependence in the Middle East, to giving coherence to our policies in the Middle East and around the world. We have fallen short in doing all that we could for peace and democracy.

As part of this solemn occasion, the most fitting tribute of all is not for us just to reaffirm as the resolution suggests an honoring of the memory of those who lost their lives and that we will bravely defend the citizens of the United States in the face of all future challenges; part of what we need to do is to acknowledge where we have fallen short and to renew our commitment that in this next year, we in Congress will catch up to where the actions and the expectations of the American public are; that we will enter in as Members of this Congress with a new spirit of cooperation and achievement, that takes the actions that make achievements of our values real, towards making our communities and, indeed, the world more livable and our families safer, healthier, and more economically secure.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I would like to first express my appreciation to my good friend and fellow Californian (Mr. LANTOS), as well as the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) for moving this very important resolution and, like everyone else, I rise in strong support of it.

We all know that today we mark this first anniversary of one of the most tragic days in America's history. As we think about the families of those victims, our thoughts and prayers go to all of them. We all have sort of mixed emotions on this day. We all, of course, recall exactly what it was like here in the Capitol a year ago today, and we think about the day first and foremost with sadness because, as I said, of all of those whose lives were lost. But we also think about today with a great deal of resolve and defiance. In some sort of strange way, we also celebrate the success that we have had in pushing back those, as the President calls them, "evil-doers," those who would, in fact, bring an end to our way of life.

Just yesterday here in the District of Columbia and in 12 other States, there was a great celebration in that we had elections where people were choosing their leaders. We are continuing with our work here in the U.S. Capitol right now. So that is why we all have mixed emotions as we deal with today.

But it is also, I think, very important, Mr. Speaker, for us to take a few minutes to look at the history of what led up to September 11 and to realize that as we, with this resolution, are remembering and honoring those who were killed on September 11, I think it is also important for us to realize that this is an international war on terrorism, and it is not a war that began on September 11 of last year, it is a war which has been going on for decades.

Just a few minutes ago I sat down with some of my staff members and started talking about some of the horribly tragic events that Osama bin Laden and his terrorist allies have perpetrated over the past couple of decades, and I thought it appropriate that we take a moment as we reaffirm our strong commitment, as the President has said, to win this war on terrorism, and look at what led up to that tragic day one year ago.

On the 1st of April in 1983, 63 were murdered and 120 injured when the U.S.

Embassy in Beirut was bombed by the Islamic Jihad. On the 23rd of October in 1983, we all remember the tragic Islamic Jihad bombing of the Marine barracks when we lost 242 of our Marines. On the 14th of June, 1985, Robert Stethem, the U.S. Navy sailor, was murdered and thrown from that TWA flight 847 which was hijacked by Hezbollah terrorists who also held 145 innocent passengers hostage for 17 days. On the 26th of February, 1993, we all remember very well the World Trade Center bombing in which six were murdered and 1,000 people injured. On the 25th of June, 1996, 19 U.S. military personnel were killed and 240 injured when the Khobar Towers housing complex in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia was bombed by Osama bin Laden's allies. On the 7th of August, 1998, 12 Americans and hundreds of Kenyans and Tanzanians were murdered in the bombing of the U.S. embassies at Nairobi and Dar Es Salaam, directed, as we all know, by Osama bin Laden, and on the 12th of October in 2000, 17 sailors were murdered and 39 injured in the bombing of the USS Cole. That was a horrible, horrible day.

These events, Mr. Speaker, underscore the fact that this is a war which has been going on now for decades.

So when I think about some of the challenges that we face as a Congress ahead, we are going to be dealing with a resolution which will help us confront those who have in fact provided shelter and refuge to al Qaeda and, of course, I am referring to Saddam Hussein and Iraq.

So this is a war which is one which really reaches all across our globe. It is one which I am happy to see our allies have joined in providing strong support for, and it is one which will continue probably beyond our lifetimes.

As I think about some of the very wonderful quotes throughout history that lead to our dealing with these challenges, I am reminded of a couple. There is one that I like to recall. At the beginning of every one of Winston Churchill's volumes, he has what is called the moral of the work, which is basically four points. He says: in war, resolution; in defeat, defiance; in victory, magnanimity; in peace, good will. I think that underscores where it is that we are headed in dealing with this challenge, which is going to continue in the future.

Shortly after September 11, President Bush went and delivered a speech in Cincinnati, Ohio. As I think back on many of the brilliant statements that have been made following September 11, I think that one of the most poignant, which underscores, again, the sacrifice that was made a year ago and where we are today, President Bush said, "Terrorist attacks can shake the foundations of our biggest buildings, but they cannot touch the foundation of America." These attacks can shatter steel, but they cannot dent the steel of American resolve.

So, Mr. Speaker, as we move ahead, I again would like to thank my colleagues, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) and the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER), for this very important resolution, and provide strong support; and, as everyone is doing, extend my thoughts and prayers to the families of those who tragically lost their lives a year ago today.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, we are all united in every congressional district in coming together in America today. I would like to honor two contributions from the first district of the State of Washington.

First, I would like to honor the life and heroism of Army Sergeant Larry Strickland, who lost his life while at his post on the second floor of the west wing of the Pentagon 1 year ago today.

Army Sergeant Strickland was a native of Edmonds, Washington, who served his country as a personnel manager and traveled to every post around the world to which he was assigned. He was a senior adviser to the deputy chief of staff, and he earned the greatest title I think anyone in the American military could have. He was a good soldier.

But he was also a good son to proud Americans Lee Strickland and Olga Strickland of Edmonds, Washington; and a good husband to wife, Deborah; and a good father to Julia, Matthew, and Chris; and a good grandfather to Brendan.

To those family members, we cannot ask to beguile them from their grief; but we hope that they are left with the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that should be theirs for having left such a precious contribution at the altar of freedom. That family can be assured that we will keep Sergeant Strickland's memory alive as we go forward together in a unified way to preserve the freedoms for which he died.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would like to honor Molly Peebles, Chuck Oppermann, and Erik Lindbergh, who led the flight of 51 planes in the Flight Across America from every State in the Union that brought every State's flag and the United States flag to New York this morning, having begun flights all across this country on August 11 to bring a message of resolution and healing to this Nation.

They spoke with the spirit of general aviation, which is important in this country for our freedoms and our economy. I hope their contributions send a statement that we have to honor general aviation and help them through this crisis, so we can continue to have both security and a viable general aviation in this country.

Mr. Speaker, America is proud of people in every district in this country, and I offer the honor of this Nation to these people from the First District of the State of Washington.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Nevada (Mr. GIBBONS), one of the three subcommittee chairmen of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, today America remembers. America just 1 year ago witnessed three heinous and senseless terrorist attacks that will be forever etched in our minds and memorialized in our history. May I say that no American will ever forget the horrific images of September 11, 2001, and no American will ever forget the thousands of innocent victims, or the hundreds of courageous heroes who will always have a place in our history and in our hearts.

Yet since that fateful day, the American people have persevered and established a new sense of normalcy. May I say to the cowards who targeted our great country last year, let me recite that terrorism against the United States, our freedom, and our people will never be tolerated. The United States stands strong, and we will fight terrorism wherever it lurks. No corner of this world will be safe for them or those who want to attack freedom, destroy liberty, and instill fear.

America's fight will not be won quickly or easily; however, it will be won. I have seen firsthand the bravery and the patriotism of the men and women in our Armed Forces, and may I say that they will not settle for anything less than victory. They are willing to make the ultimate sacrifice to protect our liberty. They deserve our strongest support and our deepest gratitude.

Americans have answered the call to help their fellow man and to defend freedom and to serve their Nation. We will not retreat. We will not be intimidated. America is strong and her strength is in her people. It is the strength of the American people that will prevail over terrorism wherever it may hide.

So on this, the first-year anniversary of September 11, on this, Patriot Day, may Americans again unite to remember our loss, to celebrate our freedom, and to defend liberty.

May God bless this great country and its people.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 3 minutes to my good friend and our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from California for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, 1 year ago today, I was in Tel Aviv, Israel. So, Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the over 3,000 victims who died in the September 11 attacks on America; and I wish to pay tribute to all the family members of those who perished, as well as to our public officials, businesses, and private citizens who have dedicated themselves to the rebuilding of a stronger Nation over the past 12 months.

In a recent special report about life after September 11 in America's tallest building, the Sears Tower, the Chicago Tribune observed that what happened was more complicated than fear. It was an awakening, then a reckoning, then a change in priorities and plans in the calculation of everyday decisions. This awakening and recalculation in our everyday lives has taken place not just among those in the Sears Tower and my home in Chicago, but across this great Nation. It is a new realization of how connected and responsible we are for the protection and well-being of all our fellow citizens.

In response to the devastation caused by the terrorists, the residents of Chicago have joined with millions of others in this country and around the world to donate millions of dollars and hours to the rebuilding efforts. Their material gifts, however, reveal an even deeper resolve to let the principles of freedom for which we stand ring loud and clear.

As we contemplate the effects of September 11 and extend our deepest sympathy to those who lost their loved ones on that fateful day, let us resolve to build not just a more vigilant and stronger homeland defense, but a society that continues to protect our personal freedoms and would enable us to fulfill the American dream of liberty and justice for all.

And in pursuit of this goal, let us, Mr. Speaker, continue to be able to sing: "O beautiful for spacious skies, for amber waves of grain, for purple mountain majesties above the fruited plain. America, America, God shed His grace on thee, and crown thy good with brotherhood from sea to shining sea."

God bless America.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to my good friend and our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. MEEKS).

Mr. MEEKS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I woke up this morning not knowing, really, where was the appropriate place for me to be. Being a New Yorker, I did not know whether I should be at Ground Zero this morning, whether I should be in my community with many of my constituents, or whether I should be here in Washington, DC.

I made the decision to try to do a little bit of both, so I spent this morning with my constituents in New York, but then felt that it was most important for me to come here to Washington as we reflect on what took place just a year ago today, as we memorialize the individuals who lost their lives a year ago today, as we sit with and hold hands with the family members of those who lost their lives.

It is time for reflection; and as I reflect and think about just last Friday, as Members of the United States Congress came to New York for the first time since 1789 and went to the original Federal Hall, it struck me about this great thing that we know called democracy, and why we have to stand and fight and make sure that democracy prevails.

For when I just think, in 1789, I as an African American may not have been able, or not "may not," would not have been able to be part of that Congress. But democracy has prevailed, so that in 2002 I am a Member of this Congress; and we are here today where the Congressional Black Caucus is meeting.

We must preserve that democracy. What happened on September 11 of last year threatens that democracy. We must let freedom ring.

As I reflect and think, the words of Dr. King came back to me, where basically he was just talking about freedom. In 1965, we were talking about freedom basically just here on these shores. His words were, "So let freedom ring from the prestigious hilltops of New Hampshire. Let freedom ring from the mountains of New York. Let freedom ring from the heightening Alleghenies of Pennsylvania! Let freedom ring from the snow-capped Rockies of Colorado! Let freedom ring from the curvaceous peaks of California! But not only that; let freedom ring from Stone Mountain of Georgia! Let freedom ring from Lookout Mountain of Tennessee! Let freedom ring from every hill and every molehill of Mississippi! From every mountainside, let freedom ring."

I think we need to add now: Let freedom ring from Afghanistan. Let freedom ring from Pakistan. Let freedom ring in Israel and Palestine. Let freedom ring in China and India. Let freedom ring in Zimbabwe and Nigeria.

Let freedom ring in every country on every continent, because when freedom rings, in the words of Dr. King, when we let it ring, we will let it ring from every village and every hamlet, from every State and every city in every nation, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, Muslims and Buddhists, will be able to join hands and sing the words of the old Negro spiritual: "Free at last, free at last, thank God Almighty, we are free at last." God bless America.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 4 minutes to my good friend and distinguished colleague, the

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from California (Mr. LANTOS) for yielding me this time. And I thank all of our colleagues for bringing forward this resolution.

None of us will ever forget where we were on September 11, 2001, when we first learned about the 8:46 attack on our Nation. It was a defining moment for our Nation like November 22, 1963, and December 7, 1941. Now we commemorate the first anniversary of September 11 and, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, we are not sure what we should say or what we should do, but we want to join together as a community to show our solidarity.

Today we honor our heroes. These are not our Presidents or our sports figures. These are ordinary Americans who performed extraordinary acts. Heroes by chance and heroes by choice. Like Todd Beamer on Flight 93 who gave up his life to save many others. We now know that it was likely that that plane was headed here towards the Capitol. He may in fact have saved our lives. Heroes such as John Fischer, a New York City firefighter, who went into harm's way in order to save lives and lost his life on September 11. Heroes such as Lieutenant Darin Pontell, a naval officer, a young man that I had the honor to appoint to the U.S. Naval Academy. He understood the risks of serving in our armed services, but he thought he would be safe in the Pentagon. He lost his life. Over 3,000 of our fellow citizens lost their lives, casualties to our continuing effort as a Nation to maintain liberty, safety, and freedom for all of its citizens.

Each of us was personally affected by September 11. We may not have known anyone personally who died, but we still grieve for them, and we hold the members of their families close to our hearts. We shall never forget September 11. Shortly after September 11, the Congress passed a law calling on the President to designate September 11 as Patriot Day in honor of the individuals who lost their lives as a result of the terrorist attacks against the United States that occurred on September 11, 2001.

Throughout America we join together as a community in solidarity to make it clear to the world that our Nation is united and resolved to defend freedom against all enemies, any enemies. We may be Democrats or Republicans, conservatives or liberals. We may differ in religion or ethnicity, but we are united as Americans. Terrorists destroyed the New York World Trade Center buildings, but they can never destroy the character, strength and values of the American people.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday was an important day in Maryland. It was primary election day. Marylanders chose their leaders and representatives by the ballot box. Our enemies rule by fear, intimidation, and force. Because of America's leadership, freedom and democracy are winning in all corners of the world. As President Bush has said, "We are a people dedicated to the triumph of freedom and democracy over evil and tyranny."

Today we thank millions of Americans who responded to the Nation's calls, our soldiers, our firemen, our police, our postal workers, and so many more who have been on the front line for the defense of our country.

Ever since September 11, "God Bless America," our hymn, has had a special meaning. One year ago this evening, we sang it on the steps of the Capitol to make it clear to the world that we would triumph. Tonight we will sing "God Bless America" on the steps of the Capitol to make it clear to the world that we will never forget September 11.

Mr. Speaker, may God bless those who mourn, may God bless those who serve, and may God bless America and bring us peace.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on this resolution be extended 20 minutes to be equally divided between the majority and minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? There was no objection.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WEXLER), our good friend and distinguished colleague.

Mr. WEXLER. Mr. Speaker, we are here at this somber occasion to recognize September 11 as a moment in history when American heroism and patriotism prevailed over terror, adversity, and hate. This resolution pays tribute to those families personally affected by the tragic events of September 11 and honors the innocent victims of these horrific attacks.

Today America is united, drawn together by overwhelming grief, a shared commitment to freedom and unwavering resolve. Our unity as a Nation sends an unequivocal message that despite the tragic events of September 11, the American spirit remains strong, that in the face of destruction and hate, democracy, justice, and hope will prevail.

September 11 demonstrated that in a moment of unparalleled adversity and devastation, there exists an innate desire of Americans to help others that is unimaginably selfless and good.

Never was this more clear than 1 year ago today in New York and Washington where hundreds of the world's bravest and finest, including firemen, policemen, and first responders rushed to assist the victims of these tragic attacks; or above Shanksville, Pennsylvania, where passengers on Flight 93 actually took a vote, a vote, to sacrifice their own lives to preserve those of others and prevent a potential assault on the very Chamber in which we now stand.

The vote on Flight 93 to overtake the hijackers epitomizes American values, courage, and heroism at their very best. For in a moment of unprecedented darkness and despair these brave souls refused to sit idly by and bear witness to evil. They chose to take action after evoking the most basic American right and fundamental symbol of democracy that all of us hold dear.

As we commemorate the tragic events of September 11 and honor the victims lost in New York, Washington, and aboard Flight 93, we must remember the extraordinary acts of heroism that took place one year ago today. From Washington to every community across the United States, may we derive strength and courage from the bravery demonstrated on September 11 and commit ourselves to a future free from terror, intolerance and hate to one of understanding, freedom and, above all, peace.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this has been a fine moment for the House of Representatives. We came together, not as Republicans or as Democrats, but as American citizens who are still so painfully aware of that horrible moment a year ago when lives were snuffed out, orphans were made, widows were made, family tragedies were made across this land. And the people who did it so totally and so profoundly misunderstand the nature of an open and free society. They sought to intimidate us. They sought to make us give up the good fight, but they have only succeeded in steeling our will and determination that the terrorists of this globe and the regimes that harbor them will not prevail.

This struggle will go on for a long time. Al Qaeda may have been largely defeated in Afghanistan, but they are all over the world in scores of countries planning to perpetrate additional evil deeds. We are ready for them.

Not since Pearl Harbor have the American people been as determined, as united, as committed to defending the values of our way of life, our Constitution, our pluralism, our acceptance of all religions, of all ethnic groups, of all forms of commitments to values that we so dearly cherish in this country.

The terrorists may have succeeded in bringing down two magnificent buildings but they also succeeded, contrary to their hopes and aspirations, of steeling the determination of the American people to protect this free and open and magnificent society.

As we recall the events of a year ago and as we plan the next action, it is important for us to realize that while not always will governments be with us, people who love freedom will be with us in every corner of the world.

The President will be addressing the United Nations tomorrow. He will be speaking to all freedom-loving peoples on the face of this planet. He will be talking on behalf of all of us because we are determined in the 21st century, as we were in earlier centuries, not only to preserve our way of life but to expand the arena of freedom for people everywhere.

It is easy, Mr. Speaker, to become discouraged. When Pearl Harbor struck, many were pessimistic. When Hitler swept across Europe, many were pessimistic. But the indomitable spirit of men like Winston Churchill knew full well that free societies will prevail. The Osama bin Ladens of this world are simply incapable of comprehending how powerful the spirit of freedom is in open and democratic societies. We may suffer setbacks, we may suffer occasional defeat, but our goal of preserving this way of life for ourselves and making it available for others if they so choose cannot be defeated either by hijacking an aircraft, spreading biological or chemical weapons, or any such means. The spirits of free men and women will prevail. And there is no doubt in the minds of any of us in this body that however long this struggle will take against terrorism and countries that support terrorists, we will prevail in the long run as free men and women always have.

The many ceremonies across this Nation, from New York to the Pentagon to Pennsylvania, to every town and hamlet in the United States, is proof that the American people have learned the lesson of a year ago. We may have lost our innocence but we have multiplied our resolve and determination. This Nation is united, strong, and conscious of the fact that our values, more than our physical capabilities, will result in our ultimate victory.

I want to commend all of my friends and colleagues who have participated in this discussion. I trust the message that we sent with many voices, many phrases, different approaches, will not be lost on those who cynically or otherwise are doubting the resolve of the American people. This resolve is unshakeable, and this resolve will bring about ultimate victory over terrorism and totalitarian societies.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to commend my colleague and friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), for the very able way that he has handled this debate, really this memorial, this commemoration, for his cogent and insightful remarks. The gentleman suggests that, in fact, this has reignited or reawakened a powerful, diverse Nation. Indeed, that is the case. That was what the terrorists apparently did not expect.

On a personal note, may I say that my wife and I are particularly grateful that her sister, an office worker in the Twin Towers, survived the bombing attack in 1991 and again last year and was able to come down to safety with a lot of difficulty and a lot of courage; and all of those people who had that experience, of course, will have a commitment to make this country even better and even stronger than it had been. I believe that there is not a doubt in anyone's mind in this country who understands America that what happened on September 11 has only reinforced our strengths. It has, in fact, increased our unity and our resolve.

The comments from my colleagues here today give us some very strong indication of the sentiment that their constituents feel and resolve that their constituents expressed to them in their districts. I commend all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for this remarkable experience and expression here today.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD), a good friend and neighbor and colleague.

Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I submit this statement in the RECORD in support of this resolution and applaud all Americans for their resilience as we commemorate, if you will, and reflect on last year's events.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my support for House Concurrent Resolution 464 that expresses the sense of Congress on the anniversary of the horrible terrorist attacks launched against our country and our ideals of democracy.

My heart is heavy as I reflect on the tragic events of a year ago. The past year has been especially difficult for the families, friends and coworkers of individuals who perished in New York, Pennsylvania, and Washington, DC. Our prayers are offered to the victims and their families.

Today, in a small and symbolic way, we are expressing our gratitude to the firemen, policemen, healthcare workers and the individuals who, on that fateful day, performed heroic deeds and helped their fellow human beings without regard for their own welfare. We thank you profusely for your efforts. America owes you a debt that we can never repay. We salute you for your service and valor.

We also salute those who have served our Nation so bravely overseas and all people of goodwill who personify humanitarian virtues during this tenuous and volatile time in the world.

Today, we are united as a nation to confront current world realities that have transformed the social, psychological and spiritual fabric of the world in which we coexist with our domestic and foreign neighbors.

During the recent year, my colleagues and I have actively engaged in debate about how to formulate an agenda that addresses homeland security, national spiritual salvation, and political bridge building with our international friends.

As we continue to make inroads toward progress, I cannot over-emphasize how important it is to map out a course for our future that will sustain, inspire and protect our children. We must infuse them with a sense of optimism because the confidence in which we as Americans move around our country has been shaken. However, as Americans, we will not be deterred from experiencing the freedom we cherish.

My colleagues and I on the Transportation Committee recognize the importance of protecting the confidence of America's traveling public. We have worked diligently to ensure that the security needs of the flying public are paramount. We will continue to pursue the course of protecting our transportation infrastructure, and we are committed to making sure that America continues to move passengers and cargo efficiently and safely.

As ranking member of the Subcommittee on Workforce, Empowerment and Government Programs, I recognize how small business owners around our Nation have been victimized economically and traumatized emotionally by the events of 9–11. Consequently, my colleagues and I on the Small Business Committee have worked to ensure that industries hit hard by the traumatic events of September 11th, including the travel industry, are able to survive. We have held hearings and offered legislation that seeks to resuscitate small businesses throughout our Nation. Small businesses constitute the backbone of our country's economy, and with our help, they will not only survive, but also flourish.

Our domestic efforts and grief over the tragic events of September 11th have heightened our appreciation for the pain of others around the world that have been subjected to the brutality and inhumanity of terrorism. And that is why we have supported liberation and democratization efforts in Afghanistan and sought to assist and rehabilitate the victims of persecution who are attempting to rebuild their lives and their country.

On this occasion of reflection recommitment and rededication to freedom, we are affirming our resolve to salute and honor the men and women who paid the ultimate price—their lives, just because they are Americans. They will never be forgotten and our Nation shall continue to rise to meet the challenge of terrorism and the threats posed by terrorists who seek to derail freedom and the goodwill of humanity.

May God bless America and all people of goodwill.

Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember those who lost their lives and the lives of loved ones on September 11, 2001. I also rise to submit an article which appeared in the National Journal on August 31, 2002 which recounts my experience on that fateful day:

President Bush had scheduled a visit to Booker Elementary School in Sarasota to give a major speech on education on the morning of September 11. I'd spent the weekend in Washington, but I flew down in order to be with the president and to fly back on Air Force One with him. The president was scheduled to arrive at Booker at 9 o'clock in the morning. I was told something had hit the World Trade Center, but I didn't think too much more about it. We all weren't focused on that.

The classroom was small, so there were a limited number of people in that room besides the students. I went into the auditorium-type room and was awaiting the president's speech. The second plane hit at 9:05 or so. We all started to realize the magnitude of what was happening. We were just in a state of shock: "This can't be true. This can't be true."

Matt Kirk, of the Legislative Liaison Office at the White House, was assigned to us, and he tried to keep us updated. Things were in a state of flux, and the Secret Service agents were moving around. There was a question about whether the president was going to make a speech to the nation from the school, or go over in front of Air Force One. The White House staff felt the quickest way was to just do that right there. We went out and got in our van in the motorcade. I had my BlackBerry with me and I would get some news, and Matt Kirk could get some news from his little pager, but it was limited. This was, say, 9:15 to 9:30. The president came out, got in his limousine, and then we just drove very rapidly over to the Sarasota-Bradenton Airport. The president got on the plane, and it took off about 10 o'clock. We were told to tighten up our seat belts very tight, because the plane has the ability to take off very steeply. When we took off, we were told there was no communication, because they didn't want anyone to know where Air Force One was, and the press was told that too.

In many ways, for most of that day, I had far less news and information than most of the people around the world. It was frustrating. Air Force One did not have, at that time, the ability to pick up television. Matt Kirk would go up and try to talk to someone else and pick up some news. Somebody would come back and share some information. The president's political adviser, Karl Rove, came back a couple times, just giving us an update. It was very tense with the staff, because there obviously was a great security concern by the Secret Service and the crew.

Around 10 o'clock, we were heading due north. And then, you could sense a turn to the west. I would say 10:45, maybe 10:30 or so, the plane changed course. We were told we weren't going back to Washington. We didn't know where we were going. I remember looking out my window and looking down at that Gulf Coast of the Alabama-Mississippi-Florida area.

We started to pick up some TV reception. We saw that the collapse of the towers had occurred. It was so surreal. I remember Karl Rove coming back and he said, "There are 40,000 people who are working at the World Trade Center at this time." No one knew the magnitude could have been that high. And then, to hear about the Pentagon!

About 11:30, we got called up to the president's office. The president was at his desk. There's a little sofa that can seat four or five people, and a chair where Andy Card sat. Behind us was this TV screen on the wall. I didn't even know it was there until I got a photograph, and you saw the World Trade Center, a fuzzy picture of it, right over our heads.

The president was telling us that there were some other planes—six, maybe nine, planes—that were unaccounted for, and that a plane had crashed in Pennsylvania, so the decision was made not to return to Washington. He was very serious, very determined, very focused, and very collected. And I felt much more emotional at that moment that he was. You saw he was in control. I felt choked up. It was almost like you're speechless.

He said he was determined to make sure that the people who were responsible for this would be identified and punished. There was speculation on the plane, but not with him, that it was bin Laden. The belief was, the only people capable of such an evil deed were either a government—and they didn't think it was any government behind this—or the bin Laden organization.

The president was saying, "We are going off to an undisclosed location." He was able to very calmly explain where we were and what we were getting ready to do. The only one speaking was the president. And I don't remember really even asking questions.

I remember saying as we were leaving, "God bless you, Mr. President." You could see the weight on his shoulders. He had been through a lot in those couple of hours. And he obviously knew a lot more than we knew. He talked about how he had given the order—he actually said it had been while he was driving over from the school to Air Force One—to bring all the planes down from the air. He was saying how we had an AWACS and six fighters surrounding us. He was saying we were going to land at an undisclosed location, and that we would be getting off the plane there, and he was going on to another undisclosed location.

When we got to Barksdale Air Force Base, all you saw were just rows and rows of B-52 bombers. There was a van, a Humvee, there were people standing around with automatic weapons, which you don't see in the United States. We're seeing it today—but we did not see it until September 11. And you could see the president go out. We were left there on the plane. That's when we got good TV, from noon to 1:30. We could not have any contact—no cell phones or BlackBerrys. Then the president came back about 1:30. We exited the plane and stood there on the tarmac, and Air Force One took off.

I was able to call my wife, who was at home on Capitol Hill. The White House had called her and told her I was on Air Force One. I said something like, "Honey, I'm OK." I was able to tell her where I was and that there was another plane that was going to take us back to Washington. They flew us to Andrews Air Force Base, and I got home about 6 o'clock. We have to be about the only plane in the air, with the exception of the fighter planes, because everyone was grounded, I guess. I'll never forget the landing. You saw the Pentagon smoke.

I remember when I came home and walked in the house, it was very emotional. I hugged my wife. We just squeezed each other. It was hard to comprehend. I just didn't want to talk to anyone, besides my son and daughter, because it was still so emotional. I choke up sometimes just talking about it. It's just hard to comprehend that I was right there on Air Force One when this whole thing was evolving. This was obviously the most significant event during my congressional career. You realize that the U.S. is vulnerable—that we're not immune to some of the problems elsewhere around the world, and it makes you think that life is very precious. I didn't know anyone personally who perished that day, but it brought that home to me.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today as a cosponsor of this important Resolution and to share in a day of grief and reflection with all Americans.

One year ago today, the course of our Nation was forever changed. As we all know, on September 11, 2001, terrorists used hijacked airplanes to inflict catastrophic damage upon the United States, taking the lives of over 2,000 Americans. And while this day one year ago was marked by chaos, carnage, fear, and great loss, it also served to showcase the best we as Americans have to offer. In the year since, these qualities—courage, innovation, idealism, hope—have enabled us to take great steps toward rebuilding this Nation.

In many ways, the legacy of September 11, 2001, is a patchwork of personal stories. For many of us, the world has been changed forever in very personal and very painful ways. Each child who woke up on September 12th without a parent—and each parent who suffered the unspeakable pain of awakening without their child—deserves our tireless pursuit of those responsible for these heinous crimes. All Americans deserve a country in which they feel safe.

Each and every one of us has a connection to the destruction. Stepping out of my car that morning, I could feel the ground shake below me as the third hijacked airplane struck the Pentagon. I will never forget the uneasiness that I felt—I know that I will never be able to separate my personal attachment to that day with the larger infamy of September 11th. While our individual struggles to come to terms with what occurred are often frightening and lonely, they are also what bind us together. I believe I speak for millions of Americans when I say that a piece of me died with each victim of the September 11th attacks.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not mention a constituent in my district who also had a piece of him taken away that day. John Wesley's fiancée, Sarah, died on the plane that crashed into the Pentagon. John, like so many loved ones left behind, funnels his grief into a positive effort that is a testament to his fiancée—ensuring that her legacy will continue. I must also mention that despite his grief, John, such a positive person—is now committed to preserving Sarah's mission of exposing kids to different cultures. Mr. Speaker, there are so many John Wesley's in our Nation and I salute them for their courage.

We are now at the one-year anniversary of a day America will never forget. It is time to take a look at where we are. Already, we have waged our "War on Terrorism" to Afghanistan with great success. Brave American servicemen and servicewomen have risked their lives half-way around the world to prevent further attacks, and bring those responsible for September 11th to justice. We have radically altered the way that we look at national security by undertaking the single greatest Federal Government reorganization in 50 years. We have taken unprecedented strides in revamping our transportation security infrastructure. We have been forced to reevaluate our aging systems of immigration and naturalization. We have cleared the tons of rubble of the two largest buildings in America's largest city. We have removed and rebuilt the nerve center of this Nation's defenses. And we are far from through.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as a patriot and a legislator. I take both roles very seriously. Since the attacks of September 11th, the American people have been reminded that freedom is not free. It takes courage to both survive in a dangerous world and retain our liberties. I will continue to work to give law enforcement the authority and resources it needs to attack terrorism, while standing sentry over the fairness, justice and constitutional rights of all Americans.

I mourn the victims of September 11th, and together with all Americans, I accept the challenges facing us as a truly united America. We will never forget. But we will not let the actions of a handful of zealots derail the hundreds of years of work we have put into this country—the freest, most successful, and most democratic nation in the world.

God Bless America.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, September 11th will always remain a day of great grief and sadness, courage and hope. The sight of the destruction and evil filled us with disbelief, sadness, helplessness and anger. That day and every day since we have also been blessed to see the best of America.

Throughout the last 12 months, we have seen the greatest of our national character in countless acts of sacrifice, courage and love. Police, firefighters and port authority officers rushed into the building with more concern for finding victims than for their own safety. Two office workers, finding a disabled stranger, carried her down 68 floors to safety. Rescuers worked past exhaustion to save lives after the collapse. The men and women of our Armed Forces, Federal Law Enforcement and Intelligence Community are now prosecuting the war on terrorism abroad. The men and women on Flight 93, having spoken with loved ones on their cell phones and being told of the unfolding events, stormed the hijackers and took the plane down, saving thousands of lives on the ground. These acts showed the world what we have long known—that our fellow Americans are courageous, compassionate and brave. That the true strength of our Nation is in the souls of each of us, and that is something our enemies can never take from us and never defeat.

Our Nation still grieves through our national tragedy and personal loss. To the children and parents and spouses and families and friends of the lost, we offer our deepest sympathy, our tears, our support and our love. None of us will ever forget the events of September 11th, but we will continue our lives together, arm-in-arm, with a collective strength that can carry us all.

Not only is our military winning the war on the ground, we are also winning the war in the hearts and minds of individuals across the world. The world is beginning to see exactly who America is and who are enemies are. Never has the difference been so clear. They wish to kill and destroy, we seek to assist and build. They work for division, we seek unity. They pray for and plot our failure, we hope and work for a better life for all.

In one year's time, we have comforted those who lost loved ones, we have completed our clean-up at Ground Zero, rebuilt the Pentagon, rallied the civilized world against terrorism, renewed our friendship with our Muslim friends and Arab partners, destroyed terrorist training camps in Afghanistan, rid the world of thousands of terrorists, put others on the run who will soon understand there are no limits to American justice, and freed a people from an oppressive regime, restoring hope and opportunity. We're working with the new Afghan government to lay the foundation for long-term stability and to reverse the conditions that allowed terrorist regimes to take root in the first place. This Congress has taken necessary actions to strengthen our homeland, assist the family and friends who lost loved ones, and worked to stem the economic downturn that resulted. There has been much good that has come out of that tragic day that shook us to our core, but strengthen our resolve and determination to rid the world of evil. And we still have much work to do. We did not ask for this mission, but we will fulfill it to ensure that freedom endures.

We are now engaged in a struggle that we cannot and will not lose. We have come to a unique moment in history, and America must take its rightful place, leading the charge for the right of men and the responsibility of government. Throughout our storied history, America has reaffirmed its commitment to freedom. Today, we find ourselves at the dawn of a new birth of freedom, not only for our Nation, but indeed for all of mankind. We have been given this enormous task, and we will undertake it as only America knows how—head on—and we will succeed. We will capture this opportunity for all of mankind and all time. We will continue to lead this Nation and world that we love, confident that the same God that watched over George Washington as he led our revolutionary army, over our founding fathers as they established our system of government, over Abraham Lincoln during the Civil War, and over our Armed Forces as they stormed the beaches at Normandy, is still watching over us today as we go forth to make the world safe for freedom and democracy.

America was targeted by our enemies because we are the beacon for freedom and opportunity in the world. That light still shines brightly today. Peace and freedom will prevail. Hatred and evil are ephemeral, but love and goodness have no end. The greatest people in the history of mankind have been called to defend a great nation and the greatest of ideas, and we will continue to succeed.

As we pause to mark the first anniversary of one of the worst days in our Nation's history, we not only remember and pray for the loved and the lost, we also renew our commitment to honoring their memory by pursuing peace and justice, by upholding freedom and democracy, and by defending all that is good and just in the world.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Speaker, today, as we remember the victims of 9/11 and pay tribute to the fallen heroes who sacrificed their lives to save others, our Nation offers gratitude, comfort and support to the families of those who perished on that tragic day. Our Nation is also reminded of the brave men and women who are standing guard here at home and abroad—soldiers, police officers, firefighters, and first responders. We are grateful for their service. Time may heal wounds, but we will never forget.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is with a most profound sense of remembrance that I rise in support of this resolution, which I am proud to cosponsor. Although Guam, the distant U.S. Territory I have the privilege of representing in this body, is roughly some 10,000 miles away from the City of New York, Pennsylvania, and Northern Virginia, its people, my constituency, share in the sorrow and concern for those directly affected by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on our Nation. Our geographic isolation and great distance from the mainland has not kept us from taking part in the healing process, in demonstrating our resolve, and in providing for the defense of our country. This past year has been a time of anguish and renewal for many. It has been a time of trepidation over our future in a world with division, unresolved differences and weapons of mass destruction. As we reflect on the events of one year ago, we are reminded of who we are as a people, of what we believe in as a nation, and of the values that make our democracy strong.

The people of Guam are a patriotic people, whose loyalty to the United States has been tested in our most darkest hours of history. As many of my colleagues recall, concurrent with the attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, Guam was also attacked, invaded and then occupied. During World War II, our island endured a 32-month brutal occupation. Survival during this daunting and difficult period emboldened the people of Guam and taught us to cherish freedom and democracy. It was with this experience, etched in our memories, that we were confronted with the events surrounding the most devastating attacks on American civilians in our Nation's history on September 11, 2001. In the days that have followed, school children on Guam, like many across the country, have penned their thoughts on paper and creatively expressed their feelings in drawings and illustrations for the families, firefighters, police officers, rescue personnel, and others that were a part of this tragedy. On Guam, like everywhere else in the country, scores of American Flags waved atop cars, trucks, and buses, on backpacks of school children and in front of homes. People filled the pews in the churches and places of worship to pray for those who lost their lives and for comfort, hope and peace. The people of Guam also donated blood, time and money in support of the rebuilding efforts. Memorial concerts, performances, and vigils have been held to bring recognition of the American heroism that was so courageously displayed in the aftermath of the attacks.

Last November, I was able to travel to the New York City Office of Emergency Management where I witnessed firsthand the professional, compassionate work of the people of New York in the face of this tragedy. I was able to bring with me then hundreds of support and thank you letters and drawings from school children on Guam.

To the families of those who lost loved ones, please know that the thoughts and prayers of the people of Guam are with you. To those first responders who aided in the rescue efforts and to those individuals who have committed themselves to the rebuilding efforts, please know that the people of Guam are grateful to you for your work and commitment. As we commemorate the tragic events of September 11, 2001, and pay tribute to all the goodness that has followed within the past year since that unforgettable day, let us never forget the sacrifice. The people of Guam stand in solidarity with the rest of our country. We continue to stand ready to do our part in this national crusade. As so often has happened in the past century, Guam is ready. We made our contributions in World War II and in the Korean and Vietnam Conflicts. We will do our part, and more, again and again in this new century to defend our country, to preserve our democracy, and safeguard our values of freedom and liberty.

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Speaker, today marks the one-year anniversary of one of the most tragic days in our country's history. I am proud of the way Americans have united following the horrific terrorist attacks on civilians. Neighbors who rarely spoke to each other, or people who did not even know each other shared their thoughts, compassion, and prayers for our fallen heroes. Our country is now stronger than ever.

Understandably, a lot of Americans are outraged following the attacks. Let it be clear that we will continue to hunt down those responsible for the attacks of Sept. 11, and those that may be foolish enough to plan to harm us again. We must also remember that we are not fighting a war with people of any specific ethnic group, nationality, or religion. We must be vigilant and wary of any efforts by the U.S. government or members of our citizenry to racially profile innocent people, as we wage our war against terrorism. I repeat the poignant words of a famous philosopher who once said "Whoever fights monsters should see to it that in the process he doesn't become a monster."

As a child, I was a first-hand witness to civil injustice. My family and I were locked up in a U.S. internment camp during World War II only because we were of Japanese descent. There were many patriots during this war. Thousands of young Americans of Japanese ancestry fought and died for the very country that imprisoned their families. However, their loyalty to America never wavered.

Our war against terror is going to be a long-term engagement. Along the way we will need to be thoughtful and critical of many different courses of action. It will be more important than ever to ensure that we all have the freedom to ask tough questions of our government officials, cultural institutions, and citizenry. The declaration of war against terrorism, in itself, is not sufficient justification for the passage of invasive and constitutionally suspect government powers, or calls for military action against nations. A true patriot will ensure that the actions of our government are just and reasonable.

Our Constitution is rarely tested in times of tranquility, but is severely tested in times of tension, turmoil, and tragedy. We must remember to embrace the principles of our Constitution—our contract for democracy and freedom—which others seek to destroy. They shall not succeed. My heart and prayers go out to all those who lost someone dear to them. Know that I share your pain, and that I will never forget the sacrifice your families made in the name of America.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, a year has passed since 3,000 innocent men, women and children tragically lost their lives in a brutal and cowardly attack on our country.

While we have had a year to come to terms with the enormous tragedy of September 11, the sense of loss remains overwhelming.

On that somber day, we all watched in disbelief as terrorists hijacked planes to attack buildings that symbolized our strength and power. We will never forget that day or the people whose lives were unexpectedly taken from them.

New Mexico's families felt the pain of losing friends and loved ones. No one who knew Alamogordo's Alfred Marchand can ever forget this man who proudly served his community in the Alamogordo Department of Public Safety. After a stellar 21-year career, he followed his heart and became a flight attendant. While living his dream, he perished on United Airlines Flight 175 fighting against the terrorists.

We must also remember Senior Airman Jason Cunningham, who grew up in Carlsbad. Jason died on a mission in Afghanistan while trying to save another serviceman. Albuquerque's Sgt. First Class Christopher James Speer also died in an Afghanistan firefight with suspected terrorists. He made the absolute sacrifice to protect us from terror.

Remembering the 3,000 lives taken from us reminds us that, though we continue to move forward with our own lives, we do so in a world that has been profoundly affected by the events of September 11.

As we search for ways to deal with the unspeakable horror of this tragedy, we can take guidance from the words of Robert F. Kennedy. Amid the grief and rage that followed the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., RFK said, "In this difficult time for the United States, it is perhaps well to ask what kind of nation we are and what direction [do] we want to move in."

These questions are still appropriate today. What kind of nation are we? What direction do we want to move in? I would answer that America remains a great nation and I would challenge us all to move in a direction that even more closely embraces the virtues and values that make us great.

September 11 has tested—and will continue to test—the resolve and the resilience of all Americans. It will test our commitment to the virtues and values on which this Nation is built: democracy, diversity, liberty and justice for all. Our response to September 11 must be to become even more passionate in our commitment to these virtues and values: to embrace and support democracy around the world; to celebrate our national mosaic of races and religions; and to shine the light of liberty even more brightly into every corner of the earth.

America is involved. We give of ourselves—as servicemembers, teachers, law enforcement officials, emergency workers, and volunteers for causes great and small.

Today, public service is more important than ever. Tragedy reminds us we must come together to create an America that is even more just, more democratic and more secure.

America is a great nation. Let us look back on September 11, 2001, with sadness and respect, grieve for those we lost, and honor those who showed the courage that makes us all proud. Let us emerge from this tragedy a stronger and wiser great nation.

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. I rise today to commemorate the anniversary of the September 11 attacks on our nation. As I reflect on this first anniversary of the tragic attacks on our nation I am overcome with sadness and hope, that we as a nation have come together in a spirit of reflection, resiliency and continued renewal is a testament to the enduring greatness of the American spirit.

Though we are pausing throughout the day to remember those we lost, our resolve to protect our freedom, is unyielding. Our nation is strong and once again America and our values have persevered. Friday's Special Session of Congress in New York's Federal Hall invoked the history of the first Congress convened in 1789 and represented a strong message to the world that as Americans we stand together in our fight against terrorism.

Last year when I visited Ground Zero I saw evil in the devastation present. Last week at Ground Zero I saw the continuing of our healing process and the unlimited hope of the American spirit. Throughout the past year I have been working with community leaders in my congressional district to both cope with the aggression forced upon us and assess the level of preparedness in our region should another incident occur.

We need to be sure our everyday heroes: our police, fire, ambulance, and medical personnel have the adequate resources, training, supplies, materials, and equipment they need to protect our community. These brave men and women are a critical component of our Homeland Security for they are our front line. Because of their valiance and commitment to service we are safer than we were a year ago.

As we remember the attacks on our nation in New York, at the Pentagon, and in Pennsylvania we are reminded of the promise and the hope that has risen from the ashes of that dreadful day. For Independence, to Lee's Summit to Kansas City, the people in the heart of our nation are joining in numerous events commemorating the 9/11 anniversary. One such event, the interfaith observance, "Remembering 9/11: A Day of Hope reflects the uniqueness of Kansas City as a place known for its river and fountains. Water gathered from the Missouri River and many of the area's fountains will be mixed with water gathered from rivers all over the world, including Tibet and Egypt. The water will be distributed to participants in the observance to be used at other events later in the day symbolically connecting all those present to a spirit of renewal and healing, regardless of religion or creed.

Another common theme throughout the Kansas City area remembrances is the number 3,000 approximating the number of victims in the September 11 attacks: 3,000 flags are to hang at the Kansas City Middle School of the Arts, 3,000 memorial candles are to light at Temple B'nai Jehudah, 3,000 names are to be read at the bell tower at Rockhurst University.

Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in support of H. Con. Res. 464 and echo the sentiments of Margaret Truman, daughter of President Harry S. Truman and native of Independence, Missouri that "in years to come we will see September 11 as a turning point in our history as a people, a day of grief and glory that created a new dimension in the soul of America."

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on this first year anniversary, I extend my deepest sympathies to the families of the countless number of innocent victims of the September 11th terrorist attacks on the Pentagon, the World Trade Center, and in a desolate field in Pennsylvania.

Nothing will ever repair the losses we suffered as a nation one year ago today. The history of the United States changed forever when nineteen terrorists hijacked four planes and killed three thousand Americans.

While the events of that morning will forever play in our mind's eye, we endure and we are moving forward. As a united America, we have taken the needed steps to rebuild, to heal, to pursue justice, and to secure our borders.

Since that time, I have been proud to vote for legislation to make our communities safer and our military stronger as we face the challenges of the new century. I commend President Bush for his leadership and I commend the brave men and women of the United States Armed Forces in the successful effort to oust the Taliban from power and hunt down those terrorists who perpetrated these acts of evil. I applaud those in our Armed Forces for their continued commitment to pursue those responsible for the attacks.

The words spoken so long ago by President Lincoln seem to fit so eloquently at this moment in history. "It is for us the living rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

As we humble ourselves before Him and pray for His guidance, may God continue to bless this great nation.

Mr. STRICKLAND. Mr. Speaker. We all carry with us memories of September 11, 2001. It was a profoundly personal day for all of us. No matter what happens in our lives, each of us will forever carry the horror we felt as we watched the unbelievable images on television unfold that fateful day. Even if we had no family or friends who were directly involved, as Americans we were deeply touched by those unspeakable events.

One year later, we observe a day of remembrance. Not an anniversary, but a guidepost: a mark against which we measure how far our nation has come since that horrific day one year ago.

That day, we witnessed the courage of hundreds of heroes who sacrificed themselves in an effort to save others. We felt rage and despair that a few evil men could purposefully steal so many lives, and at the same time we felt deep pride in the courage of our fellow Americans. We witnessed the best and worst of humanity. We dealt with our sorrow by caring for each other.

What began as one of the darkest days in our nation's history will long be remembered as one of America's finest hours.

One year later, I see a new America. We have not experienced the enormous sea change many predicted, but we greet each day with a greater sense of responsibility to our families, our communities and our nation. We also know that from now on we will be asked to sacrifice convenience for safety. We now know how vulnerable our freedom makes us.

But we also have a newfound appreciation for those freedoms and a renewed sense of the strength that our liberty gives us. We have been reminded that America's strength as a nation comes not only from its military might, but from the tightly woven fabric of the American family, symbolized in the stars and stripes of our flag. It is the solidarity of our national family that I hope will once again bring comfort to the families and friends of those who lost their lives on that fateful day.

We should also remember the thousands of Americans who are nobly risking their lives in foreign lands in the effort to wipe out terrorism. This war will continue to be time consuming and costly. But we Americans are a strong and resolute people. We have lived through the dark days of wars past.

As FDR said following the attack on Pearl Harbor, "No matter how long it takes us to overcome this premeditated invasion, the American people in their righteous might will win through to absolute victory . . . With confidence in our armed forces, with the unbounding determination of our people, we will gain the inevitable triumph. So help us God."

May God place his blessing on you and yours, and may God continue to bless the United States of America.

The following is a statement by Alan Wallace. Alan was a firefighter from my district who was stationed on the heli-pad outside the Pentagon on September 11, 2001. For his bravery that day, Alan was a co-recipient of the Department of Defense Fire Fighter Heroism Award. The following is his account of the events that day.

On the morning of September 11, 2001, I was assigned to the Heliport Station at the Pentagon. I was assigned there the day before as well. I should have been assigned to the Pentagon fire station all that week.

Fort Myer firefighters were taking a week-long class on Air Field Firefighting, given at the classrooms Building 219. Mark Skipper, Dennis Young and I had already had the training. Mike Thayer, John Pine and Ronnie Willett also had had the training. Thayer, Pine and Willett were scheduled off on 9/11. Chief George Thompson was off because his wife was ill.

Mark Skipper, Dennis Young and I were the 3 crew members assigned to the Pentagon fire station on the morning of 9/11. We arrived there about 0730. The fire station was new and we had only been using it since January or February 2001. We also had a new crash truck assigned there, an Emergency One Titan 3000. It carries 1,500 gallons of water and 200 gallons of 3% foam. Our first helicopter flight was around 10 am. But we were expecting Pres. George W. Bush to land in Marine One around 12 noon, returning from Jacksonville, Florida. (He had actually left from the Pentagon the day before.) Needless to say, neither flight arrived at the Pentagon that day because of the terrorist attacks.

Mark, Dennis, and I had our turn-out gear either on the crash truck or in the station. About 0830 I decided to pull the crash truck outside of the fire station and place it in a position more accessible to the heliport landing site. The truck was then parked perpendicular to the Pentagon, with the rear of the truck 15-20 feet from the west wall of the Pentagon, and the truck facing west, towards the heliport pad. The right side of the truck was approximately 30 feet from the fire station's apparatus door opening. (I forget to mention the Ford Van we normally use for transport between Fort Myer and the Pentagon. It is a 15 passenger vehicle which was parked west of the fire station facing north, with its rear about 10 feet north of the apparatus end of the fire station and approximately 6 feet from the side of the fire station.)

The fire station is approximately 75 feet long, 35 feet wide and 16 feet tall. The flight control tower sits above the fire station. There were two other individuals at the heliport site: Sean Berger (U.S. Army Personnel) and Jackie Kidd, both active duty Army.

As I said, we were expecting Pres. Bush about noon, which would be a Code One Standby. In such situations, one of the problems I see at the heliport is that there are too many people there. Plus there are many vehicles, including Secret Service, Pentagon SWAT, U.S. Park Police, D.C. cops on motorcycles, and the two Presidential limousines. And some of these vehicles even park in front of the fire station apparatus door, blocking the fire truck from exiting the building! That is why I wanted the crash truck out of the station and parked in a good location, for easy access to the Heliport in the case of an emergency.

After checking out the fire truck, eating a bowl of cornflakes, and cleaning the station and apparatus area, I sat in my favorite chair in the apparatus area to read a book about opera. About 0900 Mark and Dennis were inside the fire station in the day room. Mark came out to tell me that an airplane had just crashed into the World Trade Center. I then got up and went into the day room to watch the television coverage from New York City. While we three were watching, a second aircraft struck the second tower. I think we watched the TV for about 10 minutes or so.

I then went back outside. I was soon joined by Mark. We both began to work around the crash truck and were talking about the events in New York. About 0920, Chief Charlie Campbell called the Pentagon fire station to inform us of the attacks on the WTC in New York. He actually talked to all three of us: first Dennis, then me and then Skip. He wanted to be sure we were aware of the WTC disaster and that it was definitely a terrorist attack. He wanted to be sure we were aware of everything going on around the fire station. He also said Washington D.C. could very well be a target and if that happened, our fire truck could be dispatched to an incident.

Let me say this. After the NYC attack, I began to have "second thoughts" about having the fire truck parked where it was. Would it be better for the time being to return it to the fire station until around 1100 or so? But I decided not to move it.

Mark and I continued to mess around the fire truck. The last minute or two before the plane hit the Pentagon, Mark and I were working in the right rear compartment where the foam metering valves are located. Mark told me how, if you had to, you could get as much as 50% foam solution out of the roof turret and discharges. We laughed about cheating the government out of some foam! Mark and I then walked toward the right front corner of the truck. We were side-by-side, always within an arm's reach of each other. We had walked past the right front corner of the crash truck (Foam 161) and were maybe 10–15 feet in front of the truck when I looked up toward my left side. I saw a large frame commercial airline crossing Washington Blvd, heading towards the west side of the Pentagon! The plane had two big engines, appeared to be in level flight, and was only approximately 25 feet off the ground, and only about 200 YARDS from our location. I later said the plane approached the Pentagon at about a 45 degree angle but later drawings showed it was closer to 60 degrees. The airplane appeared to be a Boeing 757 or an Air Bus 320—white, with blue and orange stripes. Mark later recalled the plane was silver and even identified that it was American Airlines.

So many people think Mark and I watched the plane hit the building. We did NOT. We only saw it approach for an instant. I would estimate not longer than half a second. Others didn't understand why we didn't hear it sooner. We did not hear it until right after we saw it. I estimate that the plane hit the building only 1½–2 seconds after we saw it.

What I am saying is, immediately after we saw it we heard the noise, the engines, I'm sure. I described that as a terrible noise—loud, scary, and horrible. At the time we saw the plane, I said "LET'S GO!" and Mark and I ran away from the area. I turned and ran to my right, going north. (I do not remember which way Mark went, since I did not see him until I crawled out from under the Ford Van.)

As I recall, I had several clear thoughts and feelings as I was running: (1) the noise from the engines of the airplane; (2) awareness that now WE are being attacked; (3) planning to run until I catch on fire, then maybe dive to the ground and then figure out what to do; (4) hearing the sound of the plane crashing into the Pentagon, which I later described as a "crunch"; (5) sensation of a lot of pressure; (6) feeling very, very hot very quickly; (7) "we're certainly not going to burn up!"

Later that morning when I began to look at the distances of everything from the fire truck, I thought the plane hit the building 200 feet south of the front of the fire truck. I had only apparently run about 20 feet when the plane hit the building. I ran another 30 feet or so until I felt I was on fire. I thought I had done everything I could do for myself. I decided to get down below the fire and fireball. So I dove face first to the blacktop. At this time, it just happened that I was right beside the left rear tire of the Ford van. (I presume that the debris from the Pentagon and airplane was being propelled away from the impact site.) I immediately crawled very quickly under the van for cover and safety.

At this time, I noticed a lot of heat and decided to crawl to the end of the van. Very soon the heat was unbearable and I decided to get out from under the van and get farther away from the impact site. It was then that I saw Mark Skipper to my left—out in the field 50–75 feet away. He was standing, looking back to the impact site and seemed to be swinging his arms. I immediately ran over to him to ask if he was OK. He said he was, and then said "I'm glad you saw that airplane!" I said "get your gear on—we have a lot of work to do; I'm going to the fire truck."

It was probably at this time that I first noticed the damage to the Pentagon and the crash truck. A lot of smoke was in the sky above the Pentagon. The rear of the crash truck was on fire with a large blaze. But most noticeable was that everything around the fire truck on the ground was on fire. Also the west side of the Pentagon was on fire, all the way from the first to the fifth (top) floor.

I ran about 30 yards back to the damaged crash truck, stepping carefully, not to slip on the burning debris covering the ground. I arrived at the right cab door, opened it and climbed in. I grabbed the radio and put the head set on, then jumped over the radios into the driver's seat. I immediately pushed the 2 engine start buttons and the engine started, to my amazement. I thought if I could pull the fire truck away from the Pentagon and put it in a left turn, I could direct the roof turret nozzle into the impact site using the foam and water on board the truck. I then pushed off the emergency brake and pulled the transmission selector into the drive range and tramped on the accelerator (I still couldn't believe the engine had started.) However, the accelerator would not make the engine run any faster and the truck would not move. (I later found out from Mark then whenever I tramped on the accelerator, the flames on the back of the truck would flare up.) The window in the left door was open and I had left the right cab door open as I entered the truck. There was a lot of smoke coming up along the left side of the truck, and blowing through this open window and filling the cab with smoke, as well as exiting the right door. There was a fire in the left side of the driver's seat back. That must have produced a lot of the smoke in the cab as well. At some point when I was in the cab, I looked to my right and saw Dennis Young walking through the apparatus area, so I knew he was OK. At another point, I called Fort Myer Fire Dispatch on the fire radio and gave the following message:

"Foam 61 to Fort Myer: we have had a commercial airliner crash into the west side of the Pentagon at the heliport, Washington Blvd. side. We are OK with minor injuries. Aircraft was a Boeing 757 or Air Bus 320." It also seemed like I mumbled something else before I removed the head set, shut off the truck engine and began to egress the vehicle.

The fire station was to my right and I noticed it was trashed and there was burning material inside the apparatus area. I see Mark outside the right cab door signaling me to shut off the engine.

(Note: I feel I had the fire truck engine running in 20 seconds after the plane hit the building. This time included running, crawling, checking on Mark and running back to the burning crash truck.)

Just as I was about to get out of the wrecked truck, someone appeared at the cab door asking for a breathing apparatus. He may have been a Pentagon cop. So I handed him one of the S.C.B.A.'s and then handed another one to Mark. Before getting out of the cab, I grabbed my helmet, radio, face piece (for my S.C.B.A.). I carried these items over to the rear of the van, an area I thought would be out of the traffic and easy to find later. Dennis was attempting to use a fire extinguisher on the truck. Mark was removing some of the EMS equipment from the truck. At this time, we all probably thought the truck would be consumed by the damaging fire.

At this point, I went into the fire station through the open apparatus door area and attempted to get dressed in my turn-out gear (coat, pants, boots and helmet.) I noticed my boots and pants were covered with debris, with numerous wood, rock and metal fragments filling the boots. One of my elastic suspenders was on fire, which I stamped out (or so I thought). When I was considering how best to empty the debris from my boots, I heard a voice back outside saying "we need help here". I think it was at this time that Dennis, Mark and I began to assemble at the first floor windows of the Pentagon (behind the crash truck).

I was later told by a civilian rescuer that I helped him climb into the window of the Pentagon where most of the victims exited the building. I don't remember helping him up. But I definitely remember him being there. I feel he was instrumental in organizing the rescue effort at this area of the Pentagon. At the time, I described him as a civilian 35–40 years old wearing black jeans, black polo shirt with a red logo on the shirt.

In April, 2002, I learned that the identity of this 'civilian' was Blair Bozek. He turns out to be a Lt. Col. USAF, (Ret.). He was one of the SR71 Spy plane pilots. Ha! Mark and I always felt 10–15 people may have exited the Pentagon at our location. All were terrified, most were burned. They had had varying amounts of clothing burned from their bodies, and some were missing shoes. We were assisted in rescuing them by several civilians as well as Armed Forces people who, having been uninjured in the attack, had come to aid their fellow employees.

I would like to describe how very hostile the working environment was following the airplane attack. We were directly up against the Pentagon building, which was on fire with smoke pouring heavily from all of the windows. The ground was burning all around us. A magnolia tree was burning, which gave a strange sensation of flaming "things" floating in the air—I later realized they were magnolia leaves. There were several times the heat was so intense that I thought my pants were on fire. It was especially difficult to breathe because of the smoke and fumes. These conditions definitely limited how long we could assist in the rescue.

I do remember helping three men carry an unconscious man all the way out to the guard rail beside Washington Blvd. While carrying him, I noticed the 4 inch fire hose from our Fort Myer Rescue Engine #161. That meant our fellow firefighters were on the scene. This was a relief, because after I called them on the radio, I was certain it would be difficult for them to get to the Pentagon because of traffic. But I learned later that R/E 161, R/E 162 and the Asst. Chief did not have difficulty getting to the Pentagon.

A further comment about my radio message: I should have followed it up with a call from one of the portable radios or possibly a phone call to Fort Myer from the heliport station phone (had it been in service). I had not waited for a reply from Dispatcher Bob Connelly. (More on this subject later).

Unknown to me, before my radio message, Arlington Dispatch was receiving numerous 911 calls from all around the county. Reports were varied: helicopter crash into east side of the Pentagon, tractor trailer on fire on Washington Blvd, possible airplane crash on or near the 14th Street Bridge. Many of the 911 callers could see smoke but could not determine its source. Some likely saw a low flying aircraft or heard the impact of the crash. Arlington Dispatch advised all listening stations about some of these reports, but of course couldn't confirm exact location, etc. In fact, it is quite possible that one of these callers, recalling the flight #90 crash into the Potomac River many years ago, was instrumental in causing National Airport to dispatch the first big crash truck. According to the firefighters from the classroom at Fort Myer, immediately after the communication from Arlington, they heard my radio message. Therefore apparently my message was successful in informing my fellow firefighters of the exact location. After victims stopped appearing at the Pentagon windows, Mark, Dennis and I began assisting the arriving Fort Myer companies on the fire ground. My next task was to get into my "fire turn gear". Returning to the rescue site behind the crash truck, again I looked at my fire boots and pants. They were still full of debris, but now the left suspender had completely burned off down to the end where it had been attached to my pants! I picked up my gear and dumped out the rocks, etc., stepped into my boots and pulled up the fire pants. With only one suspender, I must have looked like Jethro Bodine from the Beverly Hillbillies. I also got on my nylon sock-hood and fire coat. I grabbed a big lantern and two fire extinguishers (one CO<sub>2</sub> and the other 20# PurpleK, potassium bicarbonate).

I pulled the safety pin on the CO<sub>2</sub> and placed the lantern under my left arm, walked around the burning end of the crash truck, sprayed some of the CO<sub>2</sub> on it and under it. The extinguisher seemed only about half full, so it was quickly discharged and I threw it aside.

Pulling the pin on the PurpleK bottle, I walked behind the truck and into the Pentagon. Holding the illuminated lantern in my left hand, I immediately noticed how poor the visibility was. Keep in mind I still had no gloves, no helmet and no S.C.B.A. I do not think I went into the building any further than 20 feet. I would see fire and spray the extinguisher on it. It makes a very loud noise when being discharged and I did so several times. Out of nowhere, I heard the clear voice of a woman yell "hey!" She had heard the sound of the fire extinguisher and realized she was near another person. She did not sound panicked. I yelled back "I can't see you" and she clapped her hands. I was waving my flashlight. I did not go after her, and later I questioned my courage about why I hadn't.

Several days later, I noticed an article in the Washington Post which mentioned me. It also described a woman, Sheila Moody, who heard the swoosh of a fire extinguisher from someone, called out, and was answered by and rescued by a firefighter. I do not remember making contact with her. I believe it was my fire extinguisher she heard, but I also believe she was intercepted by another firefighter. But had I not had the fire extinguisher but had taken the garden hose attached to the fire station, she might not have known she was very near the outside of the building and near rescuers.

I then began to assist the firefighting crews. I got a larger nozzle tip for the attack team and got 50 feet of 4 inch hose off Engine 161 so we could move the deluge gun closer to the Pentagon. Another project I undertook was to begin removing all the equipment off the crash truck: the third S.C.B.A., all the extra air bottles, power cords, floodlights, all the 1½" hose (200 feet of it), tools, and fire extinguishers. At this point, the truck was still on fire and a lot of fire was right behind the truck in the Pentagon. I also noticed the two personnel vehicles that had been parked near the impact site, belonging to the two Army Flight Control Tower personnel. Both had been completely destroyed by flying debris and fire.

About this time hose line crews from Fort Myer were entering the building with a 2½" hose with a 1¼" solid nozzle. We added 50 feet of 4" hose to the deluge gun. Capt. Dennis Gilroy noticed the first collapse of a cornice above the fifth floor windows, just above the impact site. Dennis Young and I were at the deluge gun and were told to pull back and allow the deluge gun to operate un-manned.

About the time Gilroy ordered our people to get out of the building, there was report of another hijacked airliner, allegedly heading toward Washington, D.C. During this period of waiting, Capt. Gilroy was assigning firefighters to hand line teams to attack the fire, which was beginning to spread to the third and fourth floors of the Pentagon.

By now, I was feeling the effects of exhaustion from the frantic pace and severe shortness of breath from the lack of air at the impact site where we had assisted victims. I thought Mark and Dennis were in the same shape. Mark and I both told Gilroy not to count on us for the hand line crew. Our fellow Fort Myer firefighters had become aware of our injuries and Gilroy called an EMS crew to tend to us.

Our injuries were primarily second degree burns on our necks and forearms. In addition, Mark had a laceration on his hand, Dennis had a sprained ankle, and I had left shoulder pain. (Note: Mark, Dennis and I were only wearing T-shirts, work trousers and boots or heavy shoes at the time of the attack.) A medic unit arrived, Arlington, I believe. They bandaged our burns with wet dressings and wrapped them with gauze. I was given oxygen to breathe; the others weren't experiencing difficulty breathing. We were delivered to the triage area at approximately 1100.

There, we three saw Jackie Kidd and Sean Berger from the Control Tower. They looked to be OK. Jackie was really shaking and Sean had his forearms wrapped, much like us. When I saw them, I realized I had not thought once about them after the attack. I felt bad about this. Later I thought I would have at least told Dennis Young to "check on the people in the Tower" but I guess there was just far too much to think about in the immediate response to the attack.

Sean and Jackie were both given a ride home by a nurse-bystander named Victoria Brunner, who had been working in Triage. (She now works at Fort Myer-Radar Clinic as a counselor.)

Mark, Dennis and I had a welcome opportunity to rest in the Triage area, and were given water, bananas, apples and plums. There were probably 50 health care people there. Triage was located in the tunnel under Washington Blvd. on Columbia Pike.

By now our word of our experience had spread to the FBI who interviewed us, as well as Kidd and Berger, while we were in Triage. After our interview, I wanted to return to the fire ground to see all the people from Fort Myer. We did so and spent about ½ hour there. Mark, Dennis and I stayed around Triage for about two hours. During this time, I had a chance to use a cell phone to call my Mother in Ohio. She was very relieved to learn I was OK. I also called Donna Houle at the Women's Memorial in Arlington Cemetery and asked her to contact some of my friends. In the next few days, I think I called everyone in my address book.

After all the other victims had been removed to hospitals, Mark and I were taken via ambulance to Arlington Hospital by Army Chase-Bethesda Rescue Squad #1. A young medic trainee named Sandra Melnick drove the medic unit. There were 6-8 people in the back of the squad, with one patient placed on a cardiac monitor. I sat in the front with her to give directions to the hospital.

cers to request a ride back to Fort Myer. He provided a driver within five minutes. Just as we were leaving the hospital, we were questioned by one of the local TV news channels, Fox I believe. We told them about seeing the airplane approach in time to run away from the Pentagon building.

Our driver took us as far as the Iwo Jima Memorial, just 200 yards from one of the gates into Fort Myer. Of course by now security had been increased significantly since my arrival there at 0530 earlier in the day. (The MP's had shoulder arms, a vehicle with machine gun mounted on top was nearby.) I was wearing a hospital gown, my fire boots and carried my fire pants in a plastic bag and had no I.D. But fortunately one of the MP's recognized me and allowed us to pass. (Mark did have some I.D.)

As soon as we were allowed to pass through the gate, an Air Force Major gave us a ride back to the fire station in his Jaguar. Ha—we were home!

We immediately began to tell our story and help out at the fire station. Dennis was there when we arrived. Soon after, Howard Kelly gave Mark a ride home. Dennis drove himself to his W. Va. home. I stayed at the fire house that night.

I enjoyed being back with my fellow firefighters and helping get the equipment back on the truck. Our people were exhausted, some were still frightened. I think all were glad they were working that day.

Remember the three firefighters who were scheduled off the day of 9/11? Willett, Pine and Thayer all came back in when they heard the news. Thayer told me later "from 25 miles from the Pentagon, I could see smoke, and I knew you three must be dead." He also said he felt bad because he was the person who had assigned us to the Pentagon heliport.

I was grateful—and am now amazed—that my injuries were minor. The burns on my forearms and neck healed quickly. My shoulder pain persisted and ultimately required surgery in November, 2001. The surgery went well and the surgeon and I were pleased with my recovery from it.

I returned back to work in February, 2002, glad to have a good job. I am very proud of Dennis, Mark and myself. I am SO grateful that none of our firefighters were seriously injured or killed.

Mr. DIAZ—BALART. Mr. Speaker, today we remember.

The pain has not subsided. The memories of those lost will not be forgotten. Today we honor their lives and their sacrifice.

The terrorists have failed. Blinded by their hatred, the true result of the attacks on September 11th were things they could never have anticipated. America responded with courage—not fear. America responded with love—demonstrated by the thousands of rescue workers. America responded with resolve—as we continue to hunt evil doers around the globe.

We must pay our highest tribute to the unsung heroes who have labored this past year—our first responders, our men and women in the armed services. I also would like to thank our President for showing true leadership in the face of this challenge thrust upon us.

Our job is not completed. While we have responded to the events of September 11th we have not taken the final step to ensure Americans are safe. We are faced with great decisions. But we do so with great resolve.

We will continue to show that the values and principles America stands for—the values and principles our brave Americans died for—will overcome those who would kill innocent civilians.

God bless and keep those who were lost one year ago today. God bless America—beacon of freedom.

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, a year ago today our nation was brutally attacked, and thousands of Americans were murdered. Earlier today, I shared a moment of silence today with the people of Connecticut's 5th District, in New Milford, Sandy Hook and Waterbury, to honor the heroes and remember the victims of that tragic day.

On this day, the people of Connecticut's 5th District honor the brave firefighters from the Danbury Volunteer Fire Department and the Southbury Volunteer Fire Department. Each engine crew performed search and rescue in the hostile and dangerous environment of the devastated World Trade Center. On behalf of the people of Connecticut's 5th District, I wish to express my deepest thanks to these heroic individuals. The contributions they made to our community and country at the risk of their own peril cannot be measured.

The families and friends of those who perished have endured a year of unbearable loss. They have my deepest sympathy. Rarely have we felt hatred of terrorism perpetrated on our shores, and our response has shown the strength of character of the American people. The sadness that we all felt that day, and in the days since, has hardened into a resolve to honor the memories of those who perished, to heal our wounds so that our nation is even stronger than before, and to bring righteous justice to those who perpetrated the attacks.

Mr. JEFF MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today marks the one-year anniversary of the most horrendous act of terrorism ever perpetrated against any country. Our nation will never be the same after nineteen terrorists took thousands of American lives and declared war on our great nation.

Since the infamous day last Fall, an outpouring of patriotism and love for this country can be felt in cities and towns from coast to coast. The symbol of America, our flag, can still be seen flying with dignity and honor outside homes and businesses, displaying the true pride this nation has in its freedoms and unwavering principles.

As we look back at the tragedy of that day, I know that everyone will remember where he or she was on September 11th, 2001. I am sure we have all contemplated the frailty of life and that God has never promised anyone a set number of days. It is my hope that the citizens of the United States will use this time in our history as a catalyst to advance the nation and to return to the roots to which it was established; faith in God, democracy and patriotism.

Terrorism is still a threat to the civilized world and must be destroyed before it spreads. The primary weapons of terrorism are violence and fear. Those who have no respect for human life and seek terror through these means have no place in civilized society, and must be eliminated.

As President Reagan has said, "We will always remember. We will always be proud. We will always be prepared, so we may always be free." Let us keep the families that lost loved ones in our prayers and continue to support our deployed military personnel who courageously protect our liberties and freedoms. They are the true patriots.

I praise my colleagues and the President for the courage and resolve they have displayed during these trying and difficult times. May God grant us the wisdom to lead this country forward in a manner that would please Him and may He look favorably upon our great nation.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today as a cosponsor of the Patriot Day Resolution, which fittingly expresses the sentiments of this body on the anniversary of perhaps the worst day in U.S. history. In many ways it is hard to believe it has been a year since that awful day—the memories are so fresh, so vivid. I visited the site of the WTC one week after it happened and spent time talking with survivors and rescue workers. That memory is just as fresh as those of last Friday, when we returned to New York City to participate in a wreath laying ceremony at the World Trade Center site, and those of this morning, when we attended the ceremony at the Pentagon to remember the victims and families. America will never forget.

September 11, 2001 has left an indelible mark on the American landscape and on our national consciousness. We will never forget the events of that terrible morning, nor will we forget how America responded. We continue to be inspired by the heroism of firefighters, police officers and emergency first responders, our military men and women and other ordinary Americans who have answered the call for freedom.

The attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon were an attack on all of us—our people, our nation, our spirit, our way of life, our liberty and freedom. The terrorists intended to bring down and destroy the World Trade Center, the Pentagon and other targets—and the people in them. Their real goal was to instill fear, bring about disruption and to bring down and destroy our spirit. But as Reverend Billy Graham observed at a service at the National Cathedral shortly after the attacks—Their actions have done just the opposite. The terrorist attacks of September 11 could have torn our nation apart—but they have brought us together—we have become a family.

Mr. Speaker, the United States is the greatest country in the world! We have been tested before and we will be tested again. Those we lost last September 11 will hold a special place in the history of our great country. As we gather together today in communities, churches and other places throughout our great land we remain one nation under God, indivisible with liberty and justice for all! I urge all of my colleagues to support the resolution, and God bless the United States of America.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to serve in the people's House as a representative of New York City, the greatest city in the world.

For the nation, today is a day of solemn reflection and remembrance. We have all tried to mark this day in our own personal ways. I have just returned from a memorial service at Ground Zero, a sacred place for us all. My thoughts and prayers over this year have been for my beloved city whose residents have been fundamentally affected by 9/11.

Just a year ago, our country witnessed the evil actions of cowards that resulted in more than 3,000 people tragically dead and 2,000 children without a parent.

Mr. Speaker, there may not be another Member of Congress who lost more constituents in the September 11 attack on the World Trade Center than I did. I applaud the House for introducing this resolution celebrating America's resolve and commemorating the lives of those we lost. This resolution, in a small way, can help to continue the process of national healing and renewal.

We will never forget the hundreds of New York City firefighters, law enforcement officers, and EMS who responded to the attacks, and valiantly fought through the terrible conditions to rescue victims and to provide emergency care to the injured immediately after the attack. Tragically, the World Trade Center towers collapsed while these heroes were attempting to save innocent lives—343 firefighters and paramedics and 60 police officers made the ultimate sacrifice.

Over these past 12 months, we have witnessed countless selfless acts by public servants and private citizens, by our friends and neighbors. It is this wonderful spirit embodied by our city and our great nation that gives us hope.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I remember speaking on the House floor the day after the attacks. I asked, "will we forget? Will this sick, sinking feeling fade? Will we fail to follow through on these promises or will we demonstrate unfaltering resolve?" I am proud to say, one year later, that the American people remain determined to fight the war on terror, and though the road ahead will continue to be hard, we will prevail.

We should reflect for a moment on the lessons in the attacks. In my view, there are three. First, America has enemies who resent our freedom and way of life. These enemies are determined and are ignored at our peril. Second, the oceans do not provide as much protection as they did in the past. We have to be aware that threats can come from anywhere. Third, as with Pearl Harbor, first punches can be devastating. We must now allow ourselves to be taken by surprise again.

Even though we have had a year to reflect since last September, it is still hard to comprehend the magnitude of the terrorist attacks and the historic turn of events that they triggered. In our 226-year history, America has never known an assault on our homeland such as that terrorist attack.

As horrific and sickening as the attacks were, however, they brought out the best in us as Americans. They reminded us that despite all our differences, we are one—a united America. Not only a nation of unprecedented strength, but also a nation that exhibits great tolerance and respect for the rights of its citizens as well as those of other nations—a nation of unshaken spirit, a nation bound by our shared faith in the founding principles of liberty and freedom.

America was best exemplified by the actions of our first responders in response to the attacks. On that warm autumn day, the New York City fireman became the symbol of American freedom and American bravery to millions around the world. I believe it is really the one silver lining that shines through the cloud of horror that surrounds 9/11.

It is our job in Congress to honor those who protect us—our defense forces abroad and our first responders here in America—by fully providing the resources and guidance that they need. As President Bush said at the annual fire services dinner in Washington last spring, “There is no substitute for the raw courage of the firefighter.” And we must never forget those Americans who made the ultimate sacrifice in saving the lives of others on September 11.

Mr. MATHESON. Mr. Speaker, when we evacuated our office a year ago, and I could see the black smoke rising above the Pentagon, I knew our country was under attack. The inconceivable was taking place.

The passing days brought more heartache than many of us thought we could bear. The hijackings and plane crashes took the lives of three Utahns—two who were on board the plane that hit the north tower of the World Trade Center and one who was on duty at the Pentagon.

Mary Alice Wahlstrom, of Kaysville, Utah and her daughter Carolyn, died together—two talented musicians whose families still grieve for the loss of their wives and mothers. Brady Howell of Centerville, Utah died—along with 188 others—when hijackers struck the Pentagon. His family—including his wife Liz—had to endure one agonizing week before learning his fate. A year of sorrowful birthdays and holidays has gone by, with a much-loved husband and wife, brother and sister, son and daughter, missing from the family pictures. Their names and their lives will always remind us of the goodness that is America—goodness that the terrorists sought to destroy. But we know that the terrorists will not succeed. Their cowardly attack took the lives of 343 members of the New York City Fire Department, but not the determination of 62 search and rescue team members from Salt Lake County. They rushed to New York, working 12-hour shifts, searching the rubble at Ground Zero for more than a week.

The terrorist attacks left many children without parents—but couldn’t destroy their future, as Americans rallied to support a $100 million scholarship fund to someday send these children to college. We stand for everything that the terrorists hate—courage, freedom, compassion, democracy and hope. Even as our memorials and reconstructed buildings rise from the devastation of that day, those values emerge unscathed. We have suffered a loss, but not a defeat. We still mourn, but our faith has not faltered. The wounds are still fresh but the spirit that is America shines through—a beacon of hope for better days ahead.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, we gather today within this citadel of freedom. This room is where America unites in defense of enlightened self-government. From this place our Nation draws from the strength and wisdom of our Founders.

For this reason, the terrorists targeted this temple to justice as they set out to strike a blow against self-government. And, as the terrorists attacked symbols of might and prosperity, they attacked the spirit of this building. In this way, the Capitol, the Pentagon, and the World Trade Center were all one and the same. This is where the American people exercise the fullest measure of freedom. So, we come together in this hallowed chamber to honor the brave Americans of September 11. As their Representatives, and on their behalf, we launch the debates that chart the course for this country. And, make no mistake, it was the exercise of freedom that terrorists wished to extinguish a year ago.

The terrorists failed. And, if their objective was to compel us into abandoning our principles, there may have been no more spectacular a failure in recorded history.

My friends, the flame of American freedom is burning brighter and hotter on September 11, 2002, than at any moment in our history. And that flame is sustained by the magnificent heroism in Manhattan, in Virginia, and in the air over Pennsylvania. Freedom continues unabated in many countries around the world. Americans are doing extraordinary things in dangerous places that are known and some that we can’t talk about. But when we speak of the men and women defending us at this moment, we can say this for certain: The present generation of Americans stands shoulder-to-shoulder with our proudest generations. And we saw, in Pennsylvania, a stirring example of what it means to be an American: Out of many, one.

Strangers, thrown together by Providence, facing certain death, refused to yield in the face of raw evil. Their courage, in the moment of maximum danger, is the essence of what it means to be an American. That’s why anyone in the world can become an American. All it takes is a willingness to subordinate our own individual interests to the greater good of the United States. It’s a proud tradition of love, tolerance, pluralism, and determination. But we would do a great disservice to the legacy of America’s September 11 heroes by casually accepting the passive posture of complacency in the face of danger.

The great lesson from 9/11 is the moral imperative to address dangers before they claim the lives of additional Americans. For that reason, we must stand with President Bush as he marshals freedom-loving people to confront gathering evils. We must actively deny the aspirations of evil groups and dangerous regimes. We must bring justice to the most remote caves where terrorists plot. We must protect America by striking our enemies before they can carry out their schemes within our borders.

This is the great decision before the Congress. This is the defining measure of our future security. And on this question, all of us will be accountable to the people.

Mr. Speaker, we offer our deepest sorrow and solidarity to the families of those who lost loved ones at the hands of evil, 1 year ago. Those who now struggle with grief and loss should know, above all, that they do not stand alone. They should take heart because every American stands beside them. We offer our love and gratitude for the sacrifices and unknown acts of heroism carried out by their relatives and friends. We’ll never forget them or what they did for our country.

Thank you and God bless America.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support and as a proud cosponsor of H. Con. Res. 464 expressing the sense of the Congress on the anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001.

Nearly three thousand American lives were lost exactly 1 year ago today when the United States was suddenly and deliberately attacked by al Qaeda terrorists bent on suicide and destruction of human life. By targeting symbols of American strength and success, these attacks clearly were also intended to assail the principles, values, and freedoms of the United States and the American people, intimidate the Nation, and weaken the national resolve. Although New York, Virginia, and Pennsylvania suffered the overwhelming burden of the terrorist attacks, every state and all Americans were affected and continue to mourn that day. We are united by the events of September 11, 2001, and while passage of 1 year has not softened our memory, resolved our grief, or restored lost loved ones, it has clearly demonstrated that Americans will not succumb to terrorists.

We observe September 11 not only to recognize the tragic deaths of the innocent souls who perished or who were gravely injured in Lower Manhattan, Shanksville, Pennsylvania, or at the Pentagon, but we also recognize this date to honor the firefighters, police officers, rescue workers and those intrepid eyewitnesses of this tragedy who selflessly faced grave danger in order to aid the wounded and dying in the immediate aftermath of the attacks. As the gravest moments came, many regular Americans, relying on courage, instinct, and grace, rushed toward the flaming buildings in order to rescue people or toward terrorist-controlled cockpits in order to resist their destructive plan. Today we honor the sacrifices and continuing heroism demonstrated by our brave servicemen and women who left family and friends in order to defend our nation. A year later, many servicemen and women remain abroad, shielding the homeland from further terrorist attacks.

As a member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, I am proud to serve on the ongoing Congressional Joint Inquiry. My distinguished colleagues and I have spent considerable time reviewing the material and circumstances relating to the events surrounding last year’s attacks. However, many important questions about September 11, 2001 remain unanswered. That is why I support the establishment of an independent, blue-ribbon commission to conduct a thorough investigation and to make recommendations based on its findings so that we never again experience another staggering loss of life on U.S. soil. The American people deserve a more thoughtful investigation and the families of the victims of September 11 are entitled to answers about exactly what went wrong and why.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the first anniversary of 9/11, a day which changed America’s history.

For the past 12 months, this Nation has collectively experienced a full range of emotion, from the initial fear and uncertainty of that fateful day, to anger and outrage at the loss of American life and the violation of two of our nation's most recognizable symbols. We have mourned and continue to mourn for the victims of this horrible attack. Their families and friends are constantly in our thoughts and prayers. Embedded firmly in my mind is the image of streams of people who came to the ridge overlooking the Pentagon to pay their respects and sanctified that hill with flowers, candles and notes of remembrance.

Yet, in the midst of all the sadness, Americans have sought an outlet for their grief by renewing their sense of community service and patriotic pride. Our country, which has a strong history of bridging many differences, has become one. In Northern Virginia alone, we witnessed friends, neighbors and colleagues coming together to help rebuild and unite. With the round-the-clock dedication of the Pentagon Renovation team, the revival of the Pentagon has served as the quintessential symbol of our country's resilience and renewal. A special debt of gratitude goes out to those workers and planners who orchestrated this rebuilding.

As we bear witness to the powerful images and experiences of the past year, we are proudly reminded of what it means to be an American. The heroic acts of the firefighters, police officers and emergency responders who rushed into the inferno of the Pentagon and World Trade Center Towers to save lives, touches a special place in all our hearts. It is a place where love of country and for our fellow man is second nature. This unique American spirit is what wills us to go the extra mile and put our lives on the line for what we know is right.

So, Mr. Speaker, on the one year anniversary of September 11, let us honor the many sacrifices that have been made by our police, firefighters, emergency responders and our men and women in uniform. Their efforts to heal, protect and preserve this great nation deserve the utmost respect and admiration.

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I in rise support of H. Con. Res. 464, a resolution to commemorate the passing of one year since the cowardly, brutal attacks of September 11. I would also like to express my condolences to the families who lost a loved one, along with my reverence for the heroism of New Yorkers, and the American people.

On September 11 as the horrific events unfolded, I watched brave firefighters, law enforcement and rescue personnel from New York and around the country risk their lives to save others. I watched hospitals prepare for the wounded and our armed forces go on high alert. I watched a stricken nation respond by rushing to donate blood and volunteer their time to help the injured. These are acts of honor and bravery that no barbaric act of violence can penetrate. The citizens of New York, and all of America did everything within their power to respond unselfishly and effectively to the attacks. More often than not, the very last fiber of human strength was tested. New Yorkers and all Americans rose to the daunting challenge as one proud, resolute nation.

Throughout the past year we have witnessed the rebirth of a new America. A stronger more resilient nation that is determined to eradicate all forms of terrorism. Those who oppose our way of life may try to destroy our buildings, but they will never destroy the sense of pride and love for this country cherished by Americans.

Although the tragic events of September 11 will forever bring sorrow to the families who lost loved ones, they will also serve as a reminder of how Americans unite during difficult times. This Resolution reminds us all how difficult it is to kill the American spirit. Honoring the lives lost, as well as thousands of rescue workers that worked tirelessly and bravely throughout this difficult time, is a fitting reminder of what this country stands for. We never forget our own, and we will always fight to continue our way of life.

Mrs. WILSON of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my support for the concurrent resolution in honor of Patriot Day under consideration by the House today.

On this solemn day of remembrance, it is important to gather with our families, our friends, and our communities to reaffirm our love of country and our dedication to upholding the values of freedom and democracy that we hold so dear.

Today, in Albuquerque and across the nation, we will take the time to honor those who faced danger bravely to save others: firefighters, police officers, and our soldiers overseas that now risk their lives to protect the freedom we enjoy.

In this spirit, I will be in Albuquerque on September 11 with my family and neighbors to honor the heroes, to pray for those lost and their families, to comfort the hurting and to reassure the children.

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, our nation was irrevocably changed that Tuesday morning, a year ago today. The past year has not been an easy one, but the American spirit has carried us through, and our democracy stands strong.

Whether it's Bunker Hill, Pearl Harbor, or September 11, Americans have a tradition of turning disasters into launch points for a better future. Americans' and Oregonians' response on September 11th underscores the strength of our democracy and our commitment to community and freedom. One thousand Oregonians went to NYC soon after September 11th to show that we stand shoulder to shoulder. Hundreds of Oregonians are there today.

Our nation has endured, and will, in spite of everything, thrive. Today, as we look back and remember who and what we have lost, we feel keenly the sense of security that we no longer take for granted. But we will not trade freedom for security. We will move forward together and build a future worthy of our courageous forbears, and all that they did to bring us to where we are today.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today not only to commemorate the lives lost September 11, 2001, but also to celebrate the indomitable American spirit that has been displayed since, and finally to remind our enemies that we are not finished with them. It has been a year to the date since an organization of men decided to test the resolve of the American people. With blind faith, unabashed cowardice, and intentions of terror, these men, these terrorists took the lives of over 3,000 men, women, and children. Through this evil act these men hoped to strike deep at our security, to impact the very fiber of our country's spirit. But as the towers fell, American flags rose, defying those who would attempt to shake the balance of freedom and power that we enjoy in this country. On that day the most diverse country on the planet was attacked, and from the twisted and smoldering wreckage arose the bond that has connected us all.

Many claimed that we would never be the same; that an inescapable change had come over our country. On the contrary, I feel that we have changed. We are a stronger country, united in the face of tragedy. The terrorists failed to realize that there is no changing the American spirit, only revealing it. After the 11th, the spirit of America revealed itself all across this country. From the thousands who donated blood, to the thousands more who donated time, resources and love to the task of not only repairing buildings but also repairing the hearts of those who lost loved ones on that tragic day. In the few days following 9/11 we wondered how we would respond to these cowardly acts. It has now been a year since that day, and I feel we have responded quickly and accurately. In the past year we have been able to witness as a country the power and resourcefulness of our armed services. Combining both new and old world tactics we have seen special forces mounted on horse back calling in the amazing payload of a B-1 Bomber. In a foreign and alien terrain we have seen the men and women of our armed services perform and adapt in outstanding fashion. Mr. Speaker, as co-chairman of the Air Force Caucus I realize the increasing importance of our Air Force in current and future campaigns. Nowhere has this importance been more felt than in the precision strikes made in Afghanistan in our war against terror. As we continue to hunt down those responsible, we also continue the rebuilding process both home and abroad. As voices rise today in freedom from the sites of these grizzly attacks, soon also shall memorials rise, as a continual reminder of that day and the way in which we, as Americans have reacted in the years since.

And, as America has reacted this year, we have struggled with the tender balance between security and freedom. While we of course must gird our nation for safety, are we eroding freedom and curtailing civil liberties and privacy in the process? Our federal buildings, once the most open of any nation, are becoming barricaded fortresses, with streets closed for blocks around, and loss of access. Airport travelers shed clothing, common tools in their toiletry kit, and their patience in the name of passenger screening. Future airport security measures may chillingly include smart-technology that scans a traveler's identification or body feature, and searches a database including information as personal as financial stability or neighborhood involvement, in the name of determining who is a trusted traveler. State legislatures ponder the Model State Emergency Powers Act, wherein a governor might be granted powers to quarantine citizens, force immunizations, and seize medical records, in the name of public health. I hope that as we strengthen our nation, we keep sight of the sublime principle of liberty on which the nation was founded, and think about the over-reaching consequences of binding the cords too tightly. The terrorists attacked our freedom; we should not attack our own freedoms.

Turning from thoughts of ourselves to those of our aggressors, I remind my colleagues that we are facing an enemy who despises our very existence. They are consumed by a hate of a country that, despite its faults, is open to all people regardless race or religion. We operate under principles of freedom, the ability to pursue life, liberty and happiness. As such, our country is fighting with hope against terror, and freedom against oppression. Our enemies will never know freedom, because they are imprisoned by hate, and for that, they have already lost. Former U.S. Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger stated that "The will of the American people once aroused . . . is capable of accomplishing all the things that have to be done." As long as we continue to maintain a moral high-ground in this campaign and take the appropriate and precise responsive measures, the will of the people of this country will know no bounds.

Much has been said and will be said today about what happened a year ago. As observers, we have an obligation to the families and the victims. We must remember our fellow sufferers; that is the salve we offer the families. We also must remember those who terrorize us, as it is judgment on our enemies. Do Not Forget: It was a massacre—a cold-blooded, well organized, well executed, carefully plotted massacre of thousands of Americans. It was perversion—of a faith that preaches peace and tolerance. It was a message—delivered by maniacal men in possession of a perverse theocratic ideology. It was a crime—that must be paid for. It was an invasion—which damaged every sense of safety in every person who tried to sleep that night. For all the many things it was, it was also the beginning of a war that is not yet over.

And as much as there is to say about this day, one thing we have learned is painfully simple. We have learned that whatever false sense of isolation we felt was an illusion. We must remain vigilant and remember that "freedom is not free".

I conclude that we have learned that our lives are but a breath. That our families are more important to us than we ever knew and that protection of our lives and our families may cost us dearly. But we are Americans, and we will prevail.

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution. Today, we mourn, cry, and with clenched fists restrain the raw emotions that are pulsing through our hearts. We look to the ground in sorrow and to the sky in prayer, trying to understand this senseless tragedy. More times than I can remember, I have bowed my head and prayed, asking our heavenly father for spiritual and emotional comfort, for those of us that still cannot understand why. We know the names and details of the actions of those terrorists, but that still does not fill the void in our hearts. To the families of those who died last year I can only say, you have the heartfelt sympathy of an entire nation. And, to our heavenly father I would ask to please guard the souls of the dead and let the comfort of His love ease the pain in the hearts of the living.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to cosponsor this resolution because it accurately captures the emotions in our hearts. We all desperately wish it could be September 10th forever. Yet,

I take solace in knowing that nothing endures but change. Things will get better. We have punished those responsible and exacted that punishment with judicious caution, and not unmeasured rage. America has proven that power in defense of freedom is greater than power on behalf of tyranny and oppression. We have demonstrated that power with spirit and resolve.

One year ago, for the second time in our modern history, our nation was attacked. War was thrust upon us. Undoubtedly, this day will forever live in our memories. Three of my constituents lost their lives on September 11, and my community will never forget their sacrifice: Cora Holland, Mother of three and grandmother, Rhonnda Sue Rasmusen, who died at the Pentagon, and Navy Yeoman second class Melissa Rose Barnes, who remains unaccounted for at the Pentagon. We as a nation have pulled together to build our courage and strength, for we are united and our faith will guide us.

I salute those brave individuals, police, firefighters, emergency medical personnel and others who sacrificed of themselves for their fellow Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the prayers of the American people for those whose lives have been lost. May God grant us the wisdom to continue to steer our great nation.

God Bless America!

On behalf of the people of the Inland Empire of California, I join my colleagues in full support of this resolution.

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in remembrance of those who perished as a result of the terrorist attack on September 11th. It is impossible to forget the events of that dark day and difficult to comprehend the grief of the families who lost loved ones in an instant. My deepest sympathies are with them on this first anniversary of the attacks. The loss of so many innocent lives and the bravery of the rescuers will never be forgotten.

Since September 11th, Americans have adapted to a new reality—a reality with additional security, higher unemployment, economic insecurity, anthrax and the ongoing war on terrorism. But with this new reality we are also witnessing renewed sense of American pride. September 11th reminded us all to treasure our freedom. American flags fill our streets. Patriotic anthems play on the radio and in stadiums from coast to coast. The principles upon which this country was founded brought us together and the strength and spirit of our nation will endure this challenge.

Today, in every corner of this great country, vigils, prayer services and memorials will be held to honor the victims of the attacks. As we reflect on the events of a year ago, let us honor the emergency workers, firefighters, police officers, hospital employees and grief counselors who went above and beyond the call of duty that September morning and during the months that followed. We must also remember the airline employees and postal workers whose jobs were changed forever on September 11th. Finally, our hearts should also go out to the thousands of children and families in New York, Virginia, and in communities across the nation and around the world who lost mothers, fathers, brothers and sisters on that tragic day.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in remembrance of all those who sacrificed their lives on September 11, 2001 and I honor their memory.

Mr. LUCAS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to reflect on the events of the past year. As I do so, I am reminded that the spirit of America is unbreakable, unwavering, and unshakable. September 11th and the actions that followed have affected all of us. As a nation, I see we are strong—if not stronger—since that great tragedy struck our homeland. The terrorist tried to break the spirit of America but they failed. As Americans, we are united and we will work together to fight the war on terrorism, to improve our lives, and the lives of our neighbors.

We will always remember the casualties of September 11th, the brave firefighters, police officers, and civilians that fought to save the lives of so many Americans. They were the first casualties in the war on terrorism. The heroes of September 11th are not just located in New York, Washington, DC, and Pennsylvania, but also they can be found all over this great nation and in the military serving our country overseas. For the Americans that donated time, blood, money, and prayers, they are also the heroes of September 11th. These deeds and sacrifices will not be forgotten.

I recently had the opportunity to visit our troops in Afghanistan and I am more confident than ever that we are in capable hands. There is no doubt that we have the best and most professional military in the world. And last week, I participated in a Joint Session of Congress in New York to honor those who lost their lives on September 11th. During our visit we laid a wreath at Ground Zero. From my perspective, both events clearly demonstrated America's renewed sense of solidarity, patriotism and pride.

Although September 11th will be a difficult reminder for all Americans, this is also an opportunity for the nation to show its strength and its unity. God bless America.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this resolution honoring the patriots of September 11, 2001. A year ago, our nation suffered a terrible blow. Thousands of our friends and neighbors were lost in an attack by terrorists who despise America and all it represents.

This morning, many of us in Washington came together at the Pentagon Observance to comfort and pray for all of those who are experiencing renewed memories of the pain and anguish of that tragic day.

This afternoon, we come to reaffirm our resolve to stand strong for the ideals of liberty and unity.

September 11, 2001 was one of the worst days in our history. It was also one of our finest hours. That day, America showed the world that, through the spirit and courage of the American people, this great nation did not and will not crumble despite those who try to tear it down.

Many people were heroes that day. Some of their stories have been told, but many acts of courage will never be known. Emergency responders braved fire and flames to climb the stairways of the World Trade Centers in New York City to help people evacuate. Ordinary office workers carried strangers down hundreds of stairs to safety.

At the Pentagon in Washington, DC, military and civilian personnel went into the inferno over and over again to rescue their coworkers who were trapped.

Heroic passengers aboard Flight 93 sacrificed their lives on a field in Pennsylvania to prevent the deaths of hundreds more of their fellow Americans.

Yet even while the Pentagon burned and the World Trade Center towers fell, we were already preparing our response to this act of war. On the other side of the Pentagon, the military was making its plans. Within an incredibly short time, Congress came together in a bi-partisan manner and quickly passed historic legislation to secure our homeland and our skies.

Many of our allies pledged to stand with the U.S.A., in our war against terrorists. We will always remember those nations who have fought by our side in this war.

A year later, we have accomplished much. The Pentagon has been made whole. The rubble at Ground Zero has been cleared. Al-Qaeda has been defeated and stripped of its power base in Afghanistan. Our brave servicemen and women, together with Allied Forces, are far from home, but are proudly carrying out their mission of destroying what's left of Al-Qaeda's terrorists.

Today, as we remember the patriots of September 11 and mourn their loss, let us never compromise the ideals of liberty for which they, like so many Americans before them, have died. Let us honor them by remaining strong in our unity and in our diversity. Let us always remember that good overcomes evil and darkness is always followed by light.

The American flag represents freedom and still proudly waves. With our strength and resolve, we shall remain united in freedom . . . "one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, today, all across this great land, we honor the memory of those who lost their lives as a result of the terrorist attacks of September 11th, 2001.

We honor those who were taken from us by cowardly murderers, the very worst of human kind, simply because we are a free people. This 1-year anniversary is indeed a day of deep reflection and remembrance. I am not sure if the American family will ever come to terms with the visions of our brothers and sisters, our sons, and daughters, our mothers and fathers, being victimized by the despicable acts perpetrated by the evil and the cowardly. But I am sure that our love of country, our love of each other, will help us continue to recover and respond.

We remember and we mourn today. Those we lost will forever be in our hearts and minds. Our lives now are about making sure theirs were not lost in vain, about ensuring their values, their ideals, and their spirit always endure. We will also never forget what we saw in the immediate aftermath of the attacks. We saw—amid the carnage, amongst the destruction—the amazing heights of benevolence and decency and courage that mankind can offer.

What we saw was America.

Within moments of the first attacks, our first responders entered buildings without reservation in an attempt to save others—and they did so knowing full well that they themselves may never exit. Everyday Americans became extraordinary heroes to people they had never met before. Our eternal gratitude will also be extended to the passengers of United Flight #93 who prevented it from being used as a weapon against America.

As we mourn the victims and honor the heroes of September 11th, we must be resolute in our efforts to ensure that we protect and defend this nation against all those who would do us harm. And we must never forget what it means to be an American—to cherish the principles of freedom, democracy, and human rights for all. It is what separates us from them.

Across our nation, in synagogues, Roman Catholic Churches, Presbyterian chapels, Baptist meeting houses and mosques, words of comfort, hope and grief will echo from pulpits. At dinner tables across this nation, families will grieve, and they will love each other. It is what we should do on this day.

America is vast and diverse, but today we are united as never before in our history. The victims of September 11 came from 735 towns and cities in 40 different states, all members of one American family. My district lost wonderful people, brothers and sisters, fathers and mothers, dear friends. As our nation pays tribute today, I think it is appropriate to enter the names of the 54 individuals from my district who died a year ago today.

You will never be forgotten.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise as one of the hundreds of cosponsors of this resolution today to commemorate the victims of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, and to honor the families who grieve and the heroes who served on that terrible day in American history.

American Airlines Flight 11 and United Airlines Flight 175 took off for the West Coast early in the morning from Logan Airport in Boston. The Al Qaeda terrorists hijacked and redirected these planes into the Twin Towers of the World Trade Center, a crossroads of international trade and commerce.

In Newark, New Jersey, and in Washington, DC, similar teams of terrorists aimed Flight 77 towards the symbol of American strength, the Pentagon, and took Flight 93 toward the symbol of American democracy, the Capitol dome.

We remember and honor the brave men and women aboard Flight 93, who overwhelmed the Al Qaeda operatives of Flight 93 to prevent a devastating fourth blow to America—an attack on this very Capitol Building. Instead, they crashed that plane into a field in Pennsylvania and saved thousands of others from the tragedy that was visited upon the Pentagon and the Twin Towers.

The resolution we will pass today commemorates this day in American history and the more than 3,000 lives lost—some 93 from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts alone. But the resolution also honors all those who became America's new heroes—the policemen, firemen, rescue workers, medics, and volunteers who toiled that day and days afterward to pull victims out of the wreckage.

President John F. Kennedy said at his inauguration, "In the long history of the world, generations have been granted the role of defending freedom in its hour of maximum danger. I do not shrink from this responsibility—I welcome it! I do not believe that any of us would change places with any other people of any other generation. The energy, the faith; the devotion which we bring to this endeavor will light our country and all who serve it and the glow from that fire can truly light the world."

Our new American mission is clear—we must never forget those who died a year ago today on September 11. We must not rest until those who committed these terrorist acts are brought to justice. And we must protect our country, all its citizens, from all that threatens democracy and freedom—for these are the fires that have lit the world.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, on this day I believe we have the duty to remember all the ones who died on 9/11 and all the ones who have died in Afghanistan and elsewhere as a result of this war on terrorism.

As one stares at Ground Zero today, it looks like any other large building construction site in any other large city in America. There is raw dirt, a fenced perimeter, earth moving equipment going about and hard hat workers milling to and fro, and if you didn't know better you'd keep driving by. But upon close inspection, you notice all the buildings around it have brand new facades, you notice also a new bike path, you notice the road has been redone and much of the surrounding infrastructure. Then you notice another building, an historic building, that was located right next door; it's covered with soot, its windows are cracked and it's still boarded up. This building makes a quiet but solemn statement that sets the tone because as you look at this site you know that it's not just any other construction site, there is an eerie stillness about it. Rudy Giuliani has called it a cemetery but it's more than that; it's a battleground, just like Manassas or Gettysburg. A great battle has been fought here and the feeling of reverence one gets is universal.

Like all Americans, I remember that morning's events. I was in Washington, DC. As we watched in disbelief the horror of New York City, we were soon disrupted by an explosion at the Pentagon. We evacuated our building, and went onto a chaotic street scene, where we were told that the Capitol was under attack, that the Mall area had been hit, the State Department and the Sears Tower. Later that night, Congress gathered on the steps of the Capitol and sang "God Bless America." It was a moving American moment. Later in the week, Congress attended a church service at the National Cathedral with Presidents Carter, Ford, Bush, and Clinton. President George W. Bush spoke, as did Billy Graham. Then, on Sept. 20, President Bush addressed the nation. The sense of Americanism had never been stronger.

But of all these moments and all these experiences, none struck me, nor it seems anyone else in America, as deeply as the photos and images of the firefighters and policemen rushing up the steps of the World Trade Center at 9:30 the morning of the attack. It was there and then at that moment that Osama bin Laden was defeated. He had underestimated the American spirit as these brave men rushed to rescue people that they did not know, people who they did not see socially, people who probably would not even eat lunch with them, and yet they were Americans, and that was all that counted to the hundreds of firefighters, police officers and public safety workers who put their lives on the line.

Of the hundreds that died, many people don't know that sixty of them were off-duty. One such fireman had a nine o'clock tee time on the golf course. He was already on the golf course, in anticipation of a joyful day of golf, when he heard the news. Without even calling in, he threw the clubs in the trunk of his car and drove to the precinct to report. His body was found at four o'clock that afternoon.

At another fire station, six men were getting off duty having pulled an all night shift. Their fresh replacements were just finishing up with breakfast when the alarm sounded. The six new ones and the six off duty all jumped on board the fire truck and, of the twelve of them, not one made it back. Such was the spirit the of volunteerism that day. In fact, one precinct asked the Mayor's office to quit sending the call for more recruits since they were already too crowded with men and women who had stepped forward to answer the call.

On this day of observance, we should remember this lesson about being on and off-duty. For freedom does not wait for the on-duty only. If you and I are to preserve and protect freedom for the generations to come we must do it 24 hours a day 7 days a week. That is the best way to commemorate those who died on September 11, and our soldiers who have died in Afghanistan and everyone else who has suffered and sacrificed for this great land of liberty.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to thank the city of Leidschendam-Voorburg in the Netherlands for their act of friendship towards their sister city, Temecula, California.

As a way to express their sentiments of sorrow and sympathy for the events that occurred on September 11 the citizens of Voorburg have graciously donated the Statue "Singing in the Rain" by Frans Kokshoorn to the city of Temecula. The residents of Voorburg donated thousands of dollars to have this statue built and shipped to Temecula for its installation on this day of remembrance.

Mr. Speaker as we reflect on the events of 1 year ago, I would like to join the city of Temecula in thanking the city and citizens of Leidschendam-Voorburg for this genuine gesture of kindness during a difficult time for every American.

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, today we gather together as one people united in observance of the greatest tragedy in American history. We do so mournful of the staggering loss of life we suffered that terrible day one year ago and humbled by the heroes whose courage lifted the spirit of a grieving nation.

The attacks of September 11 offered us a grim view of the evil capacity of mankind, just as it showed us the triumph of the human spirit and the resilience of the American people. In the heroism of the firemen and policemen of New York, who rushed into burning buildings without regard to their own lives, we saw barbarism met with humanity. In the bravery of Pentagon personnel, who pulled their wounded comrades from the fiery ruins, we saw wickedness met with honor. And in the defiance of the passengers of Flight 93, who sacrificed their lives to deny victory to murderers, we saw cowardice met with valor.

While a year has passed since the Twin Towers fell and the symbol of America's military strength was breached, we remain numb to the magnitude of the suffering wrought by evil men. And while our grief subsides with time, it never leaves us completely. The emotions that swept over us that awful day—horror, sadness, fear, and anger—still come creeping back to remind us that the scars of September 11 will never fully heal.

But just as the terrorists dealt us a grievous wound, they also succeeded in uniting the American people like never before. We have renewed our faith in our system of government and reaffirmed our commitment to the spread of freedom and justice around the globe. And we have been reminded that whatever differences separate us, we remain a profoundly unified people.

Mr. Speaker, in the years ahead, the attacks of September 11 will be remembered not merely as an unspeakable tragedy, but as a date that triggered a renewal of the American spirit. As we move forward in our battle against the perpetrators of evil, we will proceed with the unshakable certainty that America's brightest days lie ahead. God bless you, and God bless America.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with you and all of my colleagues a poem written by Mr. Bruce Starr of Warfordsburg, Pennsylvania in remembrance of the tragic events of September 11. Mr. Starr's poem eloquently speaks of the spirit and the sense of unity that is America.

I AM AMERICA

(By: Bruce A. Starr, Warfordsburg, PA)

I AM a most magnificent land of dreams with wondrous opportunity of fabulous wealth.

I AM holding a vision for all of happiness and radiant health.

I AM loving and caring for children of God everywhere, and my generous sharing is beyond compare.

I AM bringing hope and courage to many for a really fresh, new start.

I AM the joy of freedom that beats from my heart.

I AM a powerful light of spirit which gloriously illumines the earth.

To peace in the valley, I am graciously giving birth.

I AM patiently awaiting everyone's communion, for our gentleness and strength abides in union.

I AM the truth and beauty that sets souls free, and I AM guarding and protecting your God-given right to be!

For after all, "I AM America!"

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of the Bayshore Patriots, a group of four proud Americans from Tampa whose patriotism inspired thousands of people from across Tampa Bay to join together this morning for "Flags Along Bayshore: Tampa Remembers 9-11," an event to remember those lost in the September 11 attacks and honor those who protect and serve our nation every day.

The Bayshore Patriots—Linda Alfonso, Julie Sargent, Julie Whitney, and Bill Hamblin—have gathered every Friday afternoon since September 11th to wave flags on Bayshore Boulevard in Tampa, a major route for service men and women who work on MacDill Air Force Base. Through their simple act—the waving of a flag—this group has shown their support for troops in the Tampa Bay area and sent a message that terrorism will not destroy Americans' love of country. The Bayshore Patriots' spirit and dedication has invigorated the Tampa Bay community as more and more flag wavers join the group each week and passing motorists honk their horns in support. General Tommy Franks, Commander in Chief of U.S. Central Command, based at MacDill, has seen the group on this way to work and stopped to show his appreciation for the group's efforts.

When the Patriots decided to organize a September 11 tribute, with the hopes of having all 4.5 miles of Bayshore Boulevard lined with Tampa residents all waving flags, they were overwhelmed with support. Local businesses volunteered time, money and services to make the event possible, and people from every corner of our community signed up to wave flags and participate in the event, which was scheduled to include a keynote address by General Franks, patriotic songs, and remembrances. A steady downpour may have interrupted the program, but nothing could have dampened the resolve of the participants.

The Bayshore Patriots have taught us that we all can make a difference in the war on terrorism. They started as just a few voices calling out in patriotism and support for those impacted by September 11, but today, they were joined by a giant chorus of voices—men, women, and children from all walks of life singing in harmony. On behalf of the Tampa Bay community, I thank Linda Alfonso, Julie Sargent, Julie Whitney, and Bill Hamblin for their inspiration.

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in the strongest support of this resolution. Our nation has endured so much pain—so much hardship and grief since we were attacked a year ago. Simply put, our world changed irrevocably. More than three thousand lives were lost, and today, America remembers their powerful legacy of courage.

Today, there remains a profound sadness in America, a sadness that will surely endure as spouses, parents, and friends across the nation continue to mourn their unfathomable loss. But in these last twelve months, Americans have begun the healing process—a process that continues to this day, inch-by-inch, hour-by-hour. That resilience is, perhaps, the

All of us were touched by the tragedy of September 11th, including so many from my home state of Connecticut. It was something that once again hit home for me two days ago, when I attended a ceremony dedicating a garden to the memory of three brave men from Milford, Connecticut, who perished in the World Trade Center. The ceremony was particularly moving because, in the World Trade Center bombing of 1993, one of these men, Seth Morris, had carried a pregnant woman 103 floors to safety. His was the kind of bravery we now understand is at the core of what it means to be American. It was the same heroism we saw in the firefighters and police officers who ran into the burning buildings while others ran out, and in the heroes on Flight 93 who made the ultimate sacrifice to save others. These personal stories are now a part of our ongoing national story.

The anniversary of September 11th serves as a reminder to all Americans that our nation has changed forever. We are now so much more aware of our freedoms and liberties, our strength of diversity and collective purpose. Our commitment to freedom and our strength as a nation has never been on fuller, broader display.

As our world has changed, so too has the workings of this great body in the last year. When it comes to protecting our people, Congress has spoken with one voice—powerful, determined and compassionate. Many here will remember when this body joined on the steps of the Capitol to spontaneously sing “God Bless America” on this day a year ago. Then, we said to those who had attacked us, “You will not dampen our spirits, you will not break our will.”

And now, after a year of grief, unbearable sadness and the beginnings of the healing process, we have a similar message to share with the whole world: our spirits have not been dampened, and our will will never be broken.

That is what this resolution is about—reaffirming that commitment to protecting our American way of life and our dedication to making our nation not only safer, but stronger. For representatives of the American people, there truly is no higher calling.

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, as we pause to remember the horrific and tragic events of September 11, 2001, let us honor the memory of the innocent men, women, and children whose lives were lost on that fateful day. The families, victims, and survivors are in our hearts and prayers as we support efforts to rebuild and recover from such senseless, inhumane, and inconceivable attacks.

We are filled with admiration for those who willingly rushed into danger to try to save others—the firefighters, police officers, rescue workers, and ordinary Americans who proved to be most extraordinary. They raced up stairs, they ran into burning buildings, and they brought down a plane to save others.

We pray that our young men and women in our armed forces who are putting themselves in harm's way will return safely to their families and friends. In the last year, they have stood watch to keep us safe, and we are profoundly grateful.

To say America suffered a terrible blow is an understatement. Since that terrible day we have slowly been recovering from our profound sense of shock. The walls of the Pentagon have been reconstructed. The terrible devastation at the World Trade Center has been gradually, painstakingly cleared away.

Out of the ashes of loss, we must reshape a future, a world free from horror and hatred, one that offers security for our children and future generations. To shape the future, this better world, let us recommit ourselves to justice and peace. As we rebuild the Pentagon, memorialize the World Trade Center, and journey to a pasture in rural Pennsylvania where the men and women of Flight 93 gave their lives so that others might live, let us emerge more dedicated to peace, more aware of the world around us, and more secure.

Let us maintain the spirit of unity, of neighborly concern, of friendliness toward others, and of service that was so profoundly displayed in the aftermath of 9–11 and keep it alive and well. Let us hold on to the spirit that led us to stand in line for hours in order to donate blood because we so wanted help. Those values exemplify true patriotism and demonstrate what is best about America.

I am reminded of the words of a song, which has been sung so often, by so many, which beings, “Let there be peace on earth and let it begin with me. Let there be peace on earth, the peace that was meant to be.”

Let us remember that hymn as we remember those we lost. Let us keep them as a constant reminder to be our own best selves, to stand up for democratic ideals, to work for peace, disarmament, and security, and to continue to display the love and courage that they shared with us one year ago.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, the devastating acts committed against the United States on September 11th will never be forgotten. Today we remember those who perished in the attacks and extend our continuing support to their families. We honor and thank thousands of individuals—doctors and nurses, police and firefighters, military personnel, volunteers and blood donors and others—for their incredible acts of valor and courage and service to our nation. We salute postal workers and letter carriers who were threatened and felled by a threat they never saw. They, too, were innocent victims of these horrific acts.

Our thoughts this day are with the men and women in uniform half a world away. They are on duty to preserve and defend our nation against the scourge of terrorism. We honor their service and thank them from the bottom of our hearts.

Since September 11, our country has stood united in its resolve to overcome these horrific acts. I and fellow Members of Congress have joined together and supported President Bush in the war against terrorism. We have taken steps to make our country safer, assist those who have been affected by these acts of terrorism, and give law enforcement and the military the resources necessary to protect us from further acts of violence.

Those who carried out these acts can try to attack our way of life and democracy, but they cannot and will not defeat it or destroy it. We will continue to work together to ensure that these acts will never be perpetrated again.

Terrorism can never undermine our national spirit and character. We are a great nation.

We are brave and courageous people. The values that guide us remain unbent and unbroken. They will endure.

Throughout our history, we have met great challenges. In every instance, we have overcome every test, every danger. And each time we have moved forward a stronger, greater nation with a brighter future.

This solemn anniversary reminds us of a great tragedy. But it also helps reinforce our national strength and what it means to be an American. Our purpose and resolve are undeterred.

Mr. LUTHER. Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of September 11th is a stark reminder of the dangerous world in which we live and the risks faced by people who are firmly committed to democracy, freedom and opportunity for all, as we Americans are.

As we recognize the one-year anniversary of these attacks, it is important to remember and honor the victims and survivors, their families and loved ones. But we should also remember the amazing acts of bravery, kindness and self-sacrifice that took place on September 11th: citizens helped each other, firefighters risked their lives to save those of others, Americans participated in food and blood drives and other efforts across the country.

The day was one of unspeakable horror, but also one of triumph. We Americans committed ourselves to gaining from this tragedy. As difficult as the time was, we resolved to work together to become stronger as a nation.

Events of this past year since the attacks remind us that we can easily lose the spirit of September 11th as we go about our daily business. At times we may have forgotten the feelings of national unity and pride that came in the immediate aftermath of September 11th. But in order to continue America's mission in the world, we must continue in that spirit and work together as Americans every day.

I along with my family and staff join all Americans in remembering the loss of that day and in thanking Americans for their many contributions in the face of tragedy. To truly honor them and the nation we love, we must continue in the spirit that followed September 11th and work together to ensure peace, justice and prosperity for all.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, whereas, September 11th was a day that impacted everyone in the United States of America in a shocking and terrible way; and,

Whereas, September 11th also became a pivotal event that unified all Americans, strengthening our communities and nation in amazing and inspiring ways; and,

Whereas, the committee of Phil Wallace, Marian Klier, Dorothy Powell, and Marian Martin are to be commended along with the community of Martin's Ferry for seeking to honor and remember those who lost their lives that day; and,

Whereas, this anniversary of September 11th calls for solemn remembrance, gratitude, patriotism, and most importantly a celebration of the indelible American spirit;

Therefore, I join with the residents of Martin's Ferry and the entire 18th Congressional District of Ohio in remembering those who died and thanking those who became heroes with perseverance and American pride.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the first anniversary of 9/11, a day which changed America's history.

For the past 12 months, this nation has collectively experienced a full range of emotion, from the initial fear and uncertainty of that fateful day, to anger and outrage at the loss of American life and the violation of two of our nation's most recognizable symbols. We have mourned and continue to mourn for the victims of this horrible attack. Their families and friends are constantly in our thoughts and prayers. Embedded firmly in my mind is the image of streams of people who came to the ridge overlooking the Pentagon to pay their respects and sanctified that hill with flowers, candles and notes of remembrance.

Yet, in the midst of all the sadness, Americans have sought an outlet for their grief by renewing their sense of community service and patriotic pride. Our country, which has a strong history of bridging many differences, has become one. In Northern Virginia alone, we witnessed friends, neighbors and colleagues coming together to help rebuild and unite. With the round-the-clock dedication of the Pentagon Renovation team, the revival of the Pentagon has served as the quintessential symbol of our country's resilience and renewal. A special debt of gratitude goes out to those workers and planners who orchestrated this rebuilding.

As we bear witness to the powerful images and experiences of the past year, we are proudly reminded of what it means to be an American. The heroic acts of the firefighters, police officers and emergency responders who rushed into the inferno of the Pentagon and World Trade Center Towers to save lives, touches a special place in all our hearts. It is a place where love of country and for our fellow man is second nature. This unique American spirit is what wills us to go the extra mile and put our lives on the line for what we know is right.

So, Mr. Speaker, on the one year anniversary of September 11th, let us honor the many sacrifices that have been made by our police, firefighters, emergency responders and our men and women in uniform. Their efforts to heal, protect and preserve this great nation deserve the utmost respect and admiration.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, although the scope and severity of the terrorist attacks on America make it difficult to know how best to memorialize those who were lost on September 11, 2001, I rise today to pay tribute to the passengers of United Flight 93 who courageously thwarted an attack on our nation's Capital.

To the firefighters of New York City who gave their lives to rescue others, I join with my colleagues in saying that you will always be our heroes. To the World Trade Center victims, we mourn your passing. To those who died at the Pentagon, we will not forget you. To every man and woman serving in the U.S. Armed Forces, we stand by you. To our friends and neighbors across the globe, we thank you for supporting us in a time of need. For every American who has made the ultimate sacrifice and those who continue to risk their lives in order to save others, our Nation stands forever grateful.

We are one Nation, under God, united in our resolve to defend freedom in the aftermath of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on America. As President Franklin Roosevelt said, "We will not only defend ourselves to the uttermost but will make very certain that this form of treachery shall never endanger us again. With confidence in our Armed Forces, with the unbound determination of our people, we will gain the inevitable triumph, so help us God."

Mr. Speaker, I commend President George W. Bush for his leadership in securing our homeland and strengthening America's resolve to triumph over terrorism. I also commend the Honorable Colin L. Powell, U.S. Secretary of State, for his untold achievement in strengthening our alliances. I commend the Honorable Donald H. Rumsfeld, Secretary of Defense, for mobilizing our troops and protecting U.S. interests overseas. I commend the Secretary of Transportation, the Honorable Norman Y. Mineta, for his decisive action to ground all planes and avoid further tragedy on September 11, 2001.

I also commend my colleagues in both the House and Senate. I commend both Republicans and Democrats. I commend all Americans united in their resolve to end the threat of terrorism for future generations.

On behalf of the people of American Samoa, I rise today to say that we will always remember the heroic actions of those who gave their lives so that we might live. We stand united in our resolve to defend freedom. Like all Americans, we join in prayer and proclaim September 11, 2002 as a day of Solemn Observance.

I commend the Honorable Tauese Sunia, Governor of American Samoa, for proclaiming Wednesday September 11, 2002 to be a Day of Solemn Observance throughout the Territory. All flags will be flown at half-mast. Memorial services will start in the Territory at sundown on Tuesday, September 10, 2002 and will end with the last service set for 6:00 p.m. on September 11, 2002.

During this time, American Samoa will participate in a worldwide choral event. Choirs in every zone around the world will perform Mozart's Requiem at 8:46 a.m., the exact time of the first terrorist attack on America. American Samoa will represent the last time zone on the globe and the American Samoa Community College Choir will be the last choir on earth to sing Mozart's Requiem during this worldwide, commemorative service.

I applaud the volunteers from the Seattle Symphony Chorale who organized this worldwide event to pay homage to the victims, survivors, and heroes of September 11, 2001. I also commend the students, staff, and faculty members at the American Samoa Community College for representing American Samoa on this historic and solemn occasion.

I also express my deepest gratitude for those serving in the U.S. Armed Forces during this critical time in our nation's history. I am pleased to say that the sons and daughters of American Samoa serve proudly in the U.S. military and, per capita, there are probably more soldiers in the U.S. Army from American Samoa than any other State or U.S. Territory.

I thank the sons and daughters of American Samoa for answering the call to serve. I pray for them. I pray for their families. I am painfully aware of the sacrifices they are making. I am very mindful of the dangers they are facing. Some thirty years ago, I served in the Vietnam War. As a Vietnam veteran, I remember all too well what it is like to be separated from loved ones. Each day, I wondered if I would ever see my loved ones again or if I would be among the thousands to return home in a body bag.

By the grace of God, I returned home safely. I now pray that the good Lord will watch over the brave men and women of American Samoa who are also willing to pay the ultimate sacrifice so that future generations may live in peace.

On this day of Solemn Observance, in this sombre time of remembrance, my thoughts and prayers also go out to all those whose lives have been changed by the tragic events of September 11, 2001. May we always stand together in the defense of freedom and may God bless America.

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in remembrance of one of the most horrific events in our Nation's history.

Today we honor the thousands of innocent people who lost their lives in the World Trade Center, at the Pentagon and aboard Flight 93 a year ago and salute with great pride the many rescue workers, medical personnel, and firefighters who risked their own lives to save the lives of others.

September 11th is a very emotional day for Americans of all walks of life and it is especially difficult for those who were directly impacted in one way, shape or form. My heart goes to out the survivors, their families and all who were affected—emotionally or physically—by this event. I know it has not been an easy pain to bear.

Last year's terrorist attacks shook the sense of security we have come to take for granted in our daily lives. Although our country will never be the same, we have a renewed sense of commitment and are dedicated now, more than ever to upholding our freedoms and liberties. Our country, with all its diversity, stands united to prevent such a tragedy from happening again.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a moment of silence in remembrance of those who were lost. May God bless America today and ever more.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in remembering the terrorist attacks of a year ago and paying tribute to the victims, the survivors, and the American spirit.

One year ago today, almost three thousand Americans lost their lives in a series of despicable attacks. These acts were carried out by a group of people who hated everything our Nation stands for, and who sought to destroy the symbols of our freedom and prosperity.

Despite the destruction they were able to inflict, these terrorists actually achieved the opposite of their intended goal. Instead of dividing us, they united us as never before. The evil of a few was met by the courage of thousands, and the generosity of millions.

The day of the attacks witnessed countless instances of unflinching, selfless courage at the sites in New York, Pennsylvania, and the Pentagon. Workers in the towers and at the Pentagon helped each other through the evacuation. Firefighters, law enforcement officers, and emergency personnel rushed to the scene, heedless of the danger to themselves.

Teachers shepherded children to safety; not a single child at the World Trade Center or Pentagon day care centers was harmed. And no one will ever forget the heroism of the passengers who crashed Flight 93 rather than allow it to continue to its intended target. The world watched in humbled awe as ordinary Americans performed extraordinary acts.

The following days and weeks saw another quintessential American trait expressed: our generosity. Millions of Americans contributed goods, services, and funds for the rescue effort. Equipment, food, and supplies poured into the City of New York. Over a few short weeks, millions of dollars were donated to the families of the victims of the attacks. Children held penny drives and car washes; businesses had fundraisers; corporations opened their coffers. No sooner was any need made known than it was met, often to overflowing.

The trials of September 11 proved that our Nation's motto still holds true—E pluribus unum. From many, one. From many individuals, many cultures, and many ideals we stand together as a single nation, united in purpose and resolve. Like steel tempered in fire, the challenges of this ordeal have made us stronger.

Today, we pay tribute to all those who were lost a year ago, and to those they left behind. My district of Monroe County, New York, bears its share of the collective grief. Pittsford businessman Thomas Duffy was at an early morning meeting in the towers and perished. The Vincent family lost their 24-year-old daughter, Melissa, who had just begun a career with Alliance Consulting. Several other constituents lost children, brothers, and sisters. Many lost friends and loved ones. None of these families will ever be the same again.

The best homage we can pay is to ensure that these people did not die in vain. We have already taken significant steps by removing the Taliban regime in Afghanistan, pursuing terrorists across the globe, and improving homeland security. But we can and must do much more.

Many vital security needs still must be addressed. We must pursue a long-term strategy for rooting out terrorism and eliminating the conditions that allow it to thrive. Our public health infrastructure must be rebuilt and strengthened. Perhaps most of all, however, we must rededicate ourselves to principles of freedom and democracy. Our precious liberty can never be taken for granted. We must find the delicate balance between protecting our security and preserving our freedom.

Finally, we must pay special attention to the needs of our children in these difficult times. Too many of our children across the Nation were traumatized by the terrorist attacks, and many remain anxious and fearful. These events must not be allowed to poison an entire generation. We must ensure that our children receive the aid they need to face the future happy, healthy, and secure. Terror is indiscriminate, and the young are especially vulnerable.

I join my colleagues in paying tribute to all the heroes of September 11. Our honored dead will not be forgotten. Their families shall not be alone. We, the survivors, will carry their memories in our hearts and live their legacy through our actions.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, it was one year ago that we first shared that sense of inimitable sadness upon learning that thousands of our fellow Americans were suddenly and unexpectedly lost to us forever. They met their ends in the fields of western Pennsylvania; at our national military headquarters in Washington, DC; in two of the world's tallest office buildings in New York City. Some were sitting down for work, or simply taking a plane trip when the unthinkable occurred. Hundreds of others, heroes, were taken from us as they selflessly struggled to bring others to safety.

We came together today to honor their memory. In churches, synagogues, mosques, schools, homes, and workplaces across the land and around the world people will observe moments of silence in solemn remembrance. We pray for those left behind, whose lives are scarred forever with the loss of loved ones. We ask God for healing for them and for our country.

We also gather as a nation to lift our voices in song. While uniting us across the miles, our shared music today not only pays homage to the lives lost, but reaches out to embrace the grieving. The songs give us a shared strength by allowing us to publicly reaffirm the triumphs of our humanity over terror, of community over hatred, of rebuilding over destruction.

May today's remembrances bring honor to the memory of those who died one year ago, healing to the wounded of body and spirit, and the blessings of courage and strength for all who remember.

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, on this fateful day last year, the cowardly acts of terrorists tried to divide this Nation and destroy the American way of life. Instead they united us, and Americans rose above the ashes to show the indomitable spirit that makes this Nation so great.

Thousands of lives were lost that day, but millions of us answered the call of a nation under attack. The volunteers who helped the victims and families, the outpouring of donations—these are the shining examples of what we are capable of when our country needs us most.

President Bush asks us to honor the memory of those lost “by pursuing peace and justice in the world and security at home.” While September 11 was a tragic day, we must also acknowledge the historic outpouring of charity and sacrifice by all Americans to those in need.

The war on terrorism is not concluding; it has only just begun. President Bush made it very clear that whenever there is terrorism in the world, the United States cannot rest. This is a war that we must remain united in—united and prepared for the challenge to defeat those who use terror and fear to oppress and destroy.

Those who perished on September 11 will forever remain in our memories and in our hearts. It is up to us to protect liberty and freedom for all future generations.

God Bless America.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, on the night 9–11–2001, when all the Members of the House and Senate gathered for that historic press conference to assure the American people that we had not run from the terrorists and were doing the business on behalf of the American people, that which we were elected to do, I was inspired to write these words and set them to music.

I believe my song expresses much of the sentiments of the American people that we will and must respond when threatened or harmed. We will defend the deepest principles of freedom and our Nation's heritage.

Especially on behalf of those brave people, our heroes: the firemen, policemen, emergency medical teams, our postal workers, the Pentagon workers, and those who were aboard the hijacked planes, HERE WE COME! With you in our minds, and in our hearts, and for everything which this country stands!

“HERE COMES AMERICA!”

The greatest of all nations, where freedom was born through wars and sacrifices tested, tried and weary worn.

We stand for truth and justice, and our aim is strong and sure.

The red, white and blue waves on for freedom we shall endure

Here comes America on strong.

God bless America's her song.

United more than ever now.

In prayer to God we humbly bow for freedom's cause we will not fail.

Over fear we shall prevail.

Let Old Glory Wave.

HERE COMES AMERICA

When liberty is threatened, we'll defend the people's will.

Though heroes have fallen, our resolve we shall fulfill.

A forgiving, loving people, pursuing peace and happiness

but if harmed or terrorized, Comes the Eagle From Her Nest.

Mr. GRAVES. Mr. Speaker, on September 11, 2001, America awoke to the worst terrorist attack in history. As we went to work and school, we left with a feeling of security that we have long since forgotten. By the time we returned to our families, our lives and our Nation had forever changed. It had been many years since America felt so insecure, so vulnerable. On that morning, the American people's resolve was put to the ultimate test. Everything appeared to be so uncertain that day. Who would do such a thing? Why would they do it? Is there more to come? How can I protect my family?

But there was much that was certain that day. America made a promise to the victims and their families, to future generations of Americans, and to the world. The American people promised that this action would not go unanswered. We promised that this action would only strengthen and unite us, not divide us. We would respond forcefully to those who were responsible while tending to our neighbors, our fellow countrymen. Together, you and people across northwest Missouri and our Nation donated blood for the victims, and donated money for their families. Together, we prayed for those who lost so much that day. We prayed for our soldiers who stood ready—preparing to defend our freedom.

As we stop to remember that terrible day, some of the pain and fear has subsided. But our determination to defeat those who seek to terrorize us must never fall victim to the passage of time. In the coming months, the American people will face a choice: live up to our responsibility by making tough choices and sacrifices to continue our assault on terrorism, or quit now and hope that they choose to stop planning future attacks. The American people should never have to endure such a tragedy again. As we have learned over the past year, we can do something about it. We must never mislead ourselves that we have to wait to be attacked again to continue our defense from terrorism. The more than 3,000 lives lost is all the justification we need to have to defend against a certain threat of terrorism. The United States must remain vigilant and prepared, so that we remain forever free.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, the United States of America is founded on the fundamental principle that all citizens have the inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

The United States of America stands as a beacon of freedom and opportunity for everyone regardless of race, creed or religious belief.

The strength and vitality of the United States of America is in the diversity of its people, the diversity of its ideas, the freedom to express those ideas and the opportunity to achieve one's potential and direct one's destiny.

Mr. Speaker, these ideals and principles are absolute and will not be surrendered or weakened by the cowardly acts of terrorists who fear the sunshine of freedom and the responsibility it brings.

Let us forever remember that the date September 11 reaffirms the principles for which the United States of America was founded and that on this day each year freedom shall ring from every community in this great land and the Voice of America will be heard around the world.

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, a year ago I stood on this same floor of the people's House as the ruins still smoldered, the families still prayed and hoped, and all of us searched for ways to explain and prepare for the events that were to unfold. I will never forget that feeling of collective will which permeated this Congress to act to bring to justice those who committed these heinous crimes.

America will never forget September 11th, 2001. In its tragedy, in its despicability, and in its lessons and impact on our way of life, it represents a singular moment of history. But what really do we remember about this event? And for today, the first anniversary of 9/11, perhaps the best question is: What should we remember?

Mr. Speaker, my answer to that is: Let us remember the mothers and sons, the brothers and sisters, who perished on September 11, by remembering, today, to touch our own mother or son, our brother, our sister.

We will never forget the firefighters, police officers, and volunteers—the heroes of September 11th. Let's prove that by not forgetting to extend a hand to our heroes in uniform, who protect us today.

And let us commemorate 9/11 and honor our fallen by forever defending and living up to the ideals embodied in our Constitution. Our way of life may have been challenged, but it has not been compromised. We can prove to the world that in triumph or tragedy, we shall be a nation of laws.

As I stood on the Floor of the House a year ago I asked: How do we explain this barbarous act of terrorism to our children? I did not believe then, nor do I believe now, that it is possible to really explain—to make sense of what happened—to our little ones. But I remember my words that followed and they ring so very true to me today: "From my words and my deeds, from the way our country prosecutes this unconscionable crime, I hope [our children] will learn and they will remember how this country lives and breathes its freedom and relentless search for justice. Perhaps, then, as our children grow older and wiser, they will be better prepared to preserve life and defend America's values."

So, Mr. Speaker, as we move forward to complete the unfinished business of 9/11, let us remember our fallen, let us reflect on our tenacity and perseverance, and let us be the heroes in life that the victims of that day are in death.

I remember that feeling of hope and justice back then, and I believe it will guide us through our mission now. May God bless America.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the commemorative resolution honoring those who died last September 11, those who came to the rescue, and those who served, and continue to serve, in the fight against terrorism.

Our minds are still seared with the images of last year's tragedy. Members knew some of the individuals who died in the attacks. In California's 36th district, where LAX—the destination of three of the four hijacked planes—is located, four of my constituents were killed.

They are: Anna Alison of Torrance, Chandler "Chad" Keller of Manhattan Beach, Stanley Hall of Rancho Palos Verdes, and John Wenckus of Torrance.

Today, we remember these individuals and join with their families in commemorating their lives and their contribution to our community and nation.

We also remember several other individuals who worked in the 36th district but lived elsewhere. Their coworkers remember them fondly: Ruben Ornedo, who worked at Boeing, and Peter Gay, who worked for Raytheon Electronics and commuted to El Segundo weekly from the east coast.

Mr. Speaker, our hearts are still broken and we continue to grieve. The remembrance ceremonies I attended—last week at Ground Zero and this morning at the Pentagon—were incredibly moving and heartfelt.

But as we work together to rebuild the lives shattered by the events of September 11, we also look to identify the actions we need to take at all levels of government to ensure maximum preparedness and protection against this threat—beginning with a reorganization of our government's resources.

We have learned from this horrific experience.

Sadder, but wiser and stronger, we are aided in our efforts this past year by the testimonies of those who walked through hell and by those who are prepared to do the same.

I am reminded of the words of Tennyson—
Tho' much is taken, much abides; and tho'
We are not now that strength which in old

Moved earth and heaven, that which we are,
we are—

One equal temper of heroic hearts,
Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will

To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield.

New Yorkers, the workers at the Pentagon and the passengers and crew aboard American flight 77 did not yield.

Nor will America.

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, September 11, 2001, is a day you will always remember where you were, who you were with, and what you were doing. My personal experiences that day are vivid: going to a press conference in the Capitol at 9:30, moving fast to get out when we saw the reports of smoke at the Pentagon and seeing the monitor in the House radio-TV gallery flash, "White House being evacuated." Nothing can describe the feeling of rushing out of the building you love, hearing the attack was not concluded and seeing the smoke from the Pentagon rising behind the building in which my Congressional office is located.

I went to the Pentagon 2 days later to thank the emergency workers and was struck by the smells that were still so strong there, the stench of the burning building and literally the smell of death. I'd been to that building so many times and it seemed so impenetrable. This attack served to illustrate how vulnerable we are in this country. We live in a wildly dangerous world; the security increases we see here now have been the norm in Europe and around the Middle East for decades. Our world is dangerous. We live in this world; now we appreciate that danger every day.

Our nation was founded on the belief that God is great, that He is watching out for us. While the fear and hurt was apparent that day and the days that followed, so too, was the strength and courage of men and women who risked their own lives for their country and their American family that day. The passengers in the plane that crashed in Pennsylvania jumped into action, fighting a battle that eventually saved a Washington-area target, quite possibly the building where Congress meets.

Our legacy, our duty, today is to ensure that those who died on the planes, in the buildings, and on the battlefield, did not die in vain. Our respect for their memory must be to recommit ourselves to our nation, our freedom and each other. Today we mourn anew the lives lost in the attack one year ago, and the lives lost in battle since then and we offer our sympathies again to those they leave behind. We also honor the police, firefighters and rescue personnel who risked their lives to help those hurt in the attacks.

Our challenges are huge. Many people in this world carry evil in their hearts and minds. We can never change the hearts of humans, but great American men and women are doing their best every day to prevent that evil from finding its way here to our shores again. The United States is a beacon of light around the world. There are thousands of freedoms and privileges in this country that we enjoy every day but those privileges come at a cost, at a sacrifice. Our way forward will not be easy, for this is not over.

Ask God for wisdom and strength to protect us here at home and those around the world who love freedom and democracy. Always remember those service men and women serving in the military. They are doing difficult, dangerous work on our behalf, and on behalf of freedom and democracy. Our test is to be united at this hour of crisis in our nation and in our world. Congress will honor the memories of all those we have lost to the war on terror by defending the United States in the face of future attacks.

Mr. NETHERCUTT. Mr. Speaker, one year ago on September 11, our country suffered unexpected and unjustified attacks that killed and injured innocent people from many nations of the world. While the attacks occurred in the city of New York, a peaceful field in Pennsylvania and at the Pentagon in Virginia, the effects of terrorism were felt in every corner of America and throughout the world of nations that shared our sorrow.

The resulting war on terrorism has called together the people of America to unite behind a commitment to defend our homeland and preserve our way of life against all enemies of freedom and liberty. In doing so, America has witnessed a heartening resurgence of patriotism, a deep appreciation for the ordinary heroes among us, a fervent call to prayer, and a thankful devotion to the simple blessings of family, community, faith and friendship. We are indeed a blessed people, committed to liberty for individuals and nations everywhere, but mindful that freedom too often comes with great sacrifice.

Who can doubt our American faithfulness and resolve as we grieve for those who lost life on September 11, applaud the brave government servants and military might of our great nation, strive for economic stability and quietly pray for a peaceful world free of tyrants and violence.

The United States is no stranger to evil—our forefathers have overcome it through 225 years of proud but difficult history. The challenge for this and future generations will be to never succumb to the temptation of withdrawing from our national obligation to resist evil and fight for freedom for future generations of Americans. The war against terrorism, memorialized in those who died one year ago, is only the latest test of our national resolve. In lasting memory of September 11, let the legacy of this new century be one of victory for mankind as the United States of America leads the world to liberty and justice for all.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, one year after the terrorist attacks on our nation, as we collectively pause to reflect, remember, and memorialize those who lost their lives on September 11, 2001. We proudly remember those heroic acts of bravery and courage selflessly performed by citizens that day. It was a day when ordinary people performed extraordinary deeds.

The nation was struck by terror, but responded with the courage and the conviction that makes us free. As we pause to recognize our precious freedoms, we will never forget September 11 and what happened in New York City, the Pentagon or in the fields of Pennsylvania.

The terrorists failed in their attempts to bring down this nation because the United States responded with love of country and the resolve to bring them to justice, ensuring that those who gave their lives will not have perished in vain.

With great compassion and understanding, our hearts go out to the families of those who lost their loved ones, knowing life will never be normal for them. As we pause today in remembrance, we are resolved to go forward protecting and cherishing the freedoms that sustain us all.

Mr. Speaker, H. Con. Res. 464 appropriately recognizes the one year anniversary of September 11 and I urge my colleagues to unanimously support this resolution. God bless America.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, a year ago today our nation was attacked by terrorists intent on destroying the most enduring symbols of our success and our way of life. On this solemn occasion, the anniversary of those horrific attacks, I rise in strong support of the resolution recognizing September 11 as a national day of remembrance.

On this day, we mourn the loss of thousands of innocent lives, we honor the selfless acts of those who came to the victims' aid, and we pay tribute to those who willingly put their lives on the line to stop the terrorists from wreaking further destruction on our land.

9-11 will forever be remembered as one of the darkest days in our nation's history. Today the horror of that event is still fresh, and the pain is still raw. And just as it is today, it will always be one for sadness and reflection. But the response it inspired in our nation was uplifting. As we shudder at the recognition of devastation on this day, we can also take heart in the greatness and strength it inspired.

Time will ease our sorrow, and we will continue to prosper as a nation. But we must never forget the lesson we were forced to relearn on September 11, 2001: there are those who are threatened by our strength, our freedoms and our way of life, and they want to destroy our nation. We must remain united in our commitment to pursue those who threaten us, to ensure our way of life and to uphold the hope of freedom around the globe.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, one year ago today our nation endured an attack by a dedicated and dangerous enemy. Since that day we have seen that the principles and ideals that are the foundation of America are far stronger than any of the steel and concrete that fell that day.

We are gathered to remember the innocent lives that were taken. The district that I represent, the Second District of Connecticut, lost a number of wonderful people on September 11th. The names of some of them follow:

Josh Piver, of my hometown of Stonington, worked at Cantor Fitzgerald on the 105th floor of the World Trade Center. Josh loved jazz, loved living in New York City and had an exuberant passion for life. He was a fine young man with a bright future.

Madeline Amy Sweeney, a flight attendant for American Airlines Flight 11, the first jet to strike the World Trade Center. Displaying a courage while under tremendous pressure, she proved that on that day a loving wife, and a caring mother and daughter, could also be a hero. She used her cell phone to report what was happening and the information she provided helped us identify the attackers. She jump-started our investigation. Her parents live in Norwalk, Connecticut.

Ruth McCourt, a homemaker from New London, Connecticut, and her four-year-old daughter, Juliana, were on United Airlines Flight 175 bound for Los Angeles. They were on their way to enjoy a vacation at Disneyland. Their jet crashed into the south tower of the World Trade Center.

James Greenleaf, Jr., a 32-year-old history buff, was a football star in high school. He worked on the 92nd floor of the World Trade Center. His friends said he was the type of individual who would spend a week's vacation helping an old friend build a new house.

Ed Calderon, 43, was a security guard for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey. He loved to dance and especially loved the salsa. He had worked at the World Trade Center for 22 years and was last seen running toward the north tower after helping dozens of workers reach safety. He was hoping to help a few more people just before the building collapsed.

Bruce Eagleson, 53, a vice president of the Westfield Group, was at a meeting on the 17th floor of the World Trade Center when a jet struck the building. His oldest son called after the first plane hit and urged him to leave. He told his son he was helping to evacuate people and promised he would get out. Mr. Eagleson had hoped to retire within seven years. He loved fishing and golf.

Eric Thorpe, 35, was the star quarterback of his undefeated high school football team. He was one of the top salesmen at Keefe, Bruyette and Woods. But he kept success in the business world in perspective. He helped run a soup kitchen during college, worked as a Big Brother and participated in Hands Together, an anti-poverty program in Haiti. His friends knew him for his nonstop sense of humor.

Eric Evans, 31, was an easy-going individual who was determined to succeed in business. He also loved to garden and enjoyed tending his tomato and basil plants. His friends said he loved animals, except for the squirrels that would get into his tomatoes.

These fine people, and all the others who were taken from us on September 11, 2001, leave behind families and friends and lives that were full of the promise of tomorrow. Today it is appropriate that we honor their memory.

But this is more than a day of remembrance. This is a day to recommit ourselves to the values that are the foundation of America. Freedom, justice, honor and an unwavering belief in self-government—those are the values we believe in and they are the values that those we remember today believed in as well.

This is a day to keep in mind that there is a great and profound difference between the use of force to liberate and the use of force to enslave.

And this is a day to recommit ourselves to our love of our country. Let us join together and appreciate America's history and stand firm in support of our institutions and the duties of citizenship. This is a day to look to the future.

A great deal of learning in our nation has traditionally taken place when families gather around the kitchen table at mealtime. I hope that beginning tonight all American families will take time to discuss today's events around the dinner table. Talk together about what it means to be a citizen of this great nation. Share your thoughts with each other about what the events of today mean to you, your family and friends.

John Winthrop, one of the Pilgrims who came to this new world, described it as a "shinning city upon a hill."

Today, with our prayers, we remember those who are gone. Let us also direct our efforts to ensure, for our sake and for the sake of those yet to come, that this shining city on a hill will remain a beacon of freedom and hope that will forever reach out to embrace the aspirations and dreams of all the people of the world.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a year ago today, a radical, Islamic terrorist group seized four aircraft, turning them into deadly weapons and killing thousands of defenseless people. Today, we continue to mourn the loss of those victims, and honor those who, with great bravery and instilled sense of duty, risked their lives to protect our people.

Yet while we reflect on this day, one year ago, we cannot look back. Throughout the history of America, we have been a forward-looking Nation, striving for excellence and finding strength in our love of country. America is a God-fearing land, and because of this, our Nation has been blessed mightily.

These attacks have been compared to December 7, 1941, when Pearl Harbor was also struck from the sky. At the end of that day, America was devastated and struck with the great sorrow of this tragedy. Yet as history so aptly tells us, America's resurgence brought forth the liberation of the world, and global peace for decades.

Today, as we look out across our land, we will see America at its most glorious hour. We will see the spirit of America at every ceremony, in every city and on the face of all Americans. It was the spirit of America that got us through that fateful day one year ago, and it will be this spirit that will carry us through for years to come.

It is contagious, this American spirit. Last year, as our firefighters, police officers and rescue workers sacrificed to save lives, the American spirit shined. As our military men and women headed overseas to defend our country, the American spirit shined. As Americans across our land joined together in unity and with a renewed sense of patriotism, the American spirit shined.

This is America, and faith and freedom will always be our call. That is what makes us unique. That is what makes us a people of great pride and resiliency. And that is what makes us a target. Yet in the end, America endures.

Today the war on terrorism is progressing, but it will take time. As the President has said many times—this is a faceless enemy that we fight, and determination and perseverance will be our keys to victory. In the end our victory will once again bring about global peace.

So as we reflect on that tragic day, one year ago, and mourn the loss of so many of our fellow Americans, be rest assured that our brave military men and women overseas are getting the job done, and making America proud.

I commend and thank our military men and women for their sacrifices and bravery as they protect the Homeland. They are picking up where the heroes of September 11th left off—defending America, and fighting for the freedoms that we are willing to die for. The terrorists who attack us operate out of hatred—hatred of our freedom, hatred of our faith, and hatred of our liberty. Yet in the end, it will be our faith, freedom and love of liberty that will ultimately defeat them.

May God Bless the United States.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OTTER). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the concurrent resolution.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

COMMEMORATING 9-11

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without prejudice to the resumption of legislative business, under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, today America is reflecting on the events of 9-11, as we should; and it is a time to remember. It is a time to remember those who lost their lives and to remember those, like the firemen and the police, who gave their lives trying to save others. It is a time for rage, as we have heard, and a time for reflection, a time for pride and a time for anger. What it is not, however, is a time for mourning. That time is over.

Today, I join with all of those who solemnly commemorate this anniversary. Heartfelt commemoration, I suggest, is not enough. We must consider not just what happened a year ago, as we have been hearing for the last hour; but instead we must find and discover and talk about and we must make determinations about why 9-11 happened.

As a Nation, we are now engaged in a historic global conflict with a vile enemy who slaughters innocent people by the thousands and then makes sanctimonious references to God. Talk about blasphemy. I do not know if bin Laden is dead or alive; but I do know that when he dies he will burn in hell, and it is our job to get him there as quickly as possible.

stan and will soon rid the world of threats like that of Saddam Hussein. This is a result of 9-11 one year ago, but it did not start one year ago.

The first order of business is for us to recognize that the murderous attack on us in New York and at the Pentagon was not an act of God, nor was it a natural phenomenon. It did not just happen; nor, let me add, was it just a case of bad luck.

The slaughter of our fellow citizens need not have happened. It was something that would not have happened had certain people done things differently, had certain government policies been different, had certain Federal agencies and Departments been given different marching orders. In short, 9-11 need not have happened, and it is imperative that the American people look closely at the policies, the systems, and yes, the people which led to 9-11 to ensure that something like this never happens again.

What policies am I talking about? Let us start with the fundamentals or, if you will, the fundamentalists. Of the 19 hijackers on 9-11, 16 were Saudis or held Saudi passports. America's relationship with Saudi Arabia is complex but not as unfathomable as some would have us believe.

In the Cold War, we worked closely with the Saudi royal family; and to be fair, they were our loyal allies. They helped us finance anti-Communist projects that were of immense importance to our national security in the days when the Soviet Union was spending billions of dollars to bury us. Saudi help was vital on a number of fronts so there was reason for us then to be grateful; and, yes, there is reason today for us to be grateful.

What they did to help us in the past, however, does not excuse what they are doing today that threatens us. Times have changed, and dramatically so. If our policy towards Saudi Arabia does not change significantly, there will be a heavy price to pay in the future, if we have not already paid enough.

Relying on low oil prices and on Saudi largesse for special Cold War projects left us dependent upon them, and who is them, who are we talking about? We are talking about the royal family, the royal family of Saudi Arabia that is autocratic and over the years has become fat and incompetent and in many ways cowardly. However, again, they helped us defeat an enemy intent on destroying us, Communism. So we paid special attention to the Saudis.

Instead of pushing for democratic reform and human rights, we let the Saudis, and because of their influence much of the Muslim world in general, we let them off the hook in our push for democracy and human rights.

In the short term, it makes sense. In the long term, it has had a dramatically bad impact, negative impact.

Young people in that part of the world have suffered under despots and crooks; yet we Americans in that part of the world continually talk about stability, when what we should be pushing for is democratic reform and the opening of closed societies.

Entrenched regimes, royal and secular, have been brutal and corrupt. Is it any wonder that young people in a large chunk of the world turn to Islamic fundamentalism as their idealistic alternative? In their corrupt world, radical Muslims have been the only ones offering a morally based alternative, but radical Islam is not a positive force. It is tyrannical, arrogant and malevolent.

Right here we should note that most forms of religious extremism are equally reprehensible and that radical Islam should not be singled out. Although limited to a few loud voices, a drumbeat started right at September 11 to paint all Muslims as the enemy of the United States and of the West. That drumbeat started the moment those planes hit the World Trade towers; but thanks to our wise President, we did not succumb to a strategy of hate.

bin Laden wanted us to retaliate against Muslims in general, which would have polarized hundreds of millions of people against us, many of whom would have ended up supporting bin Laden and his terrorists as their saviors. As I say, we did not fall into that trap.

By the way, just to put things in perspective, in the decade leading up to 9-11, Muslim people saw their fellow Muslims being ethnically cleansed, raped and murdered in Bosnia by thugs calling themselves Christians. They saw their fellow Muslims repressed and murdered by the tens of thousands in Kashmir by people who called themselves Hindus and cut down in the Middle East by the Israeli Army. Hundreds of thousands of non-combatant Muslims have lost their lives due to the actions of governments controlled by people of other faiths. So from their perspective, Islamic people are no more terrorists than others.

In the West, all we see is the frightening picture of planes flying into buildings and suicide bombers blowing up Pizza Huts in Israel. So the first policy we need to change is that which has us tolerating dictatorship and corrupt governments in Muslim countries in order to maintain stability. Working with Russia, which is now our friend and trying to build a democratic society, let us break our dependency on oil from unfriendly and democratic and undemocratic anti-Western governments. Let us seek out reformers in the Arab and Muslim world. Let us demand free elections and freedom of speech and press as well as religious tolerance in those Muslim countries.

dealt with the rise of their homegrown religious extremists by ignoring them, giving them a free hand overseas and by sending them to Afghanistan.

Their extremists are called Wahabis. Those folks are on the outer limits of Islam. They are the ones who insist that women must cover themselves from head to foot. Now, that is okay if women voluntarily accept this religious mandate. Instead, however, the Wahabis act as if they have the right to control everybody, even those who do not accept their particular view, claiming to have an infallible insight about the wishes of God. They beat women with sticks if so much as their ankles are showing. They feel free to commit violence against people of other faiths and to prevent anyone with a different belief in God, even other Muslims, from worshipping and living their lives as they see fit.

This is the most radical of all Muslim sects. Instead of standing up to this religious gangsterism, the Saudi royal family allowed them to establish their base of operations in Saudi Arabia and to export Wahabi radicalism throughout the world, with the help, of course, of billions of petrol dollars.

One of the places not just influenced but under the control of the Wahabis was Afghanistan. The Taliban was not an indigenous religious sect of Afghanistan. That is the mistake so many people make. They represented a transplanted Wahabism. Transplanted from? Where else. Saudi Arabia.

These crazies did not represent the character and/or the values of the Afghan people. The Afghan people are devout in their faith but they are not fanatic. They pray and are grateful to God, but they do not feel compelled to have everyone else pray, much less feel compelled to compel that everyone else pray just like they pray.

I have seen this tolerance firsthand, even in the most desolate regions of that distant land. Years ago, 14 or 15 years ago, actually, I was in Afghanistan with a mujahedin unit, the mujahedin being the fighters against the Soviet occupation. During long treks across the desert, the small group of mujahedin fighters I was with would stop and pray five times a day. They would get on their knees and they would pray, and they would thank God for everything that they had. I might add that they had little. We did not even have a good clean glass of water, much less the provisions of food that could keep people healthy. Yet these people were grateful for everything.

It caused me reason to pause to think that here in the United States we have so much and how rarely people think about how grateful they should be for what we have. But here were these people, under attack by the Soviets, on their knees praying. But there were many other people in the surrounding area and with our group. About half of them were not part of the praying during those prayer sessions. They stood there.

What impressed me is that those who were praying felt perfectly comfortable. They were fulfilling their obligations to God but did not feel threatened by these others who were not praying and who were not compelled to participate. That was the essence of the Afghans. Grateful to God, devoted to God, but not fanatics who were trying to suppress other people into some sort of religious dictatorship.

The Taliban in Afghanistan, of course, was totally different than the type of attitude I am talking about. And it was not a result of the susceptibility of the people to the Taliban's form of Islam as much as it was a result, meaning the Taliban's ascension to power, was not a result of what is naturally in the Afghan people's hearts, but instead, I believe, the result of a deal between Saudi Arabia, Pakistan, and, unfortunately, the United States.

It, of course, goes back to the Cold War, when the United States was helping the Afghan freedom fighters in their struggle against the Soviet army that occupied their country. The Saudis were helping, too. Now we helped, and we can be proud of that. The Saudis were also helping, but as I discovered, it was not quite that simple.

As I was hiking through Afghanistan with that mujahedin unit heading towards the battle of Jalalabad, which was one of the last battles the Soviets participated in in Afghanistan, we came across an encampment of white tents. These were very expensive tents. There were off-road vehicles there. The people were well fed, well clothed. And I was told by my mujahedin fellow freedom fighters to keep my mouth shut and to speak no English because this was an encampment of a crazy psychopathic killer, a Saudi named bin Laden, and bin Laden would kill all of us if he knew there was an American with the group because he hated America as much as he hated the Communists.

And much of the support that the Saudis gave to the Afghan freedom fighters was right there. It was actually bin Laden and his group there fighting against the Russians. And that was their contribution to Afghanistan in the fight against the Soviets.

Well, after the Soviets withdrew from Afghanistan, after the mujahedin victory, instead of helping these people rebuild their country, and we can be proud we helped them fight off the Soviets with giving them the weapon systems they needed, but we did not help them at that point rebuild their country. In fact, America simply walked away and let them sleep in the rubble. We did not even help them dig up the land mines that we had given them to defeat the Soviet army. And so little young kids, little kids from Afghanistan have been blowing off their legs ever since. And they cannot even treat their young people because they do not have the medicines to do so because we have not been there to help.

There was an agreement, however, as we left. It was probably not a formal agreement; probably just an understanding to let Saudi Arabia and Pakistan oversee that region. So we walked away from Afghanistan and the entire region. Instead of insisting on a government that reflected the will and values of the Afghan people, we left them in the hands of the Saudis and the Pakistanis.

For several years, there was chaos and fighting. Not as bad as before, but there was fighting that continued, and the Saudis then unleashed their ace in the hole. We had left, but the Saudis had been preparing for this eventuality. The term Taliban means student and refers to those who spent most of the war against Soviet occupation not fighting the Russians. That was a whole different group of guys. That was the mujahedin. No, the Taliban were in schools, so-called religious schools, in Pakistan. Later, they emerged from these schools seemingly out of nowhere, but in fact trained, armed and financed by Saudi Arabia and Pakistan.

Within 6 months, they had conquered over two-thirds of the country, including Kabul, the capital city. But just as it was in Orwell's Animal Farm, vicious dogs were surreptitiously nurtured and then suddenly unleashed to do the bidding of pigs.

Just a reminder: Many pundits fail to understand the difference between the mujahedin and the Taliban. The former fought the war against Soviet occupation troops. That was the mujahedin. The latter, the Taliban, arrived on the scene much later. And in the end, the same mujahedin who helped defeat the Soviets were our allies in this last year in driving the Taliban out of power. The mujahedin, the good people of Afghanistan, have stood with us twice. Let us pledge that we will not walk away from them again. Let us help them rebuild their country.

Let the record show that I had spent a year trying to prevent the Taliban from coming to power at that time. My goal right after the end of the war with the Soviets was to try to bring the old King Zahir Shah back from his exile in Rome. Zahir Shah was one of the most beloved and pro-western of his people. He was anxious to serve as a transition leader that would lead his country to a new political system that was based on democratic elections; on ballots instead of bullets. As I say, he was an honest, kind man, with a good heart,

Instead, the king was pushed aside, or should I say he was kept on the sidelines. And I might add that our own State Department played a major role in ensuring that this positive alternative did not come to power. Instead, the Taliban assumed power with the acquiescence if not the support of the Clinton administration. Knowing there was nothing more I could do, I hoped for the best. I tried my best to try to prevent the Taliban from getting into power. Now they were there, our government seemed to be going along with it, so all I could do is sort of hope for the best.

However, within a month or so, the tyrannical ways of these religious kooks made it clear to me and to everyone that they had to go. Yes, it was clear to me, but I take that back, it was not clear to everyone, because the Clinton administration could never seem to come to that conclusion, that the Taliban had to go. In understanding who should be accountable for 9-11, we must understand that the State Department, under President Clinton, was never anti-Taliban. Our State Department, probably under the President's direction, undermined those efforts aimed at undermining the Taliban. So those of us who were anti-Taliban found ourselves the target of the State Department rather than having the State Department target the Taliban for their misdeeds.

In several personal instances I was involved with helping obtain medical and humanitarian support for people in the areas of Afghanistan that was not yet under Taliban control. I was thwarted by our own government. I was thwarted by our own State Department. NGOs with aid for Afghans who were in areas that were controlled by the Taliban, on the other hand, had no trouble with our government. They had some other troubles that, of course, the Taliban gave them themselves, but our government was perfectly happy to have NGOs operating in Taliban-controlled areas but stopping people like myself who were trying to help those people in areas that were opposed to the Taliban.

In mid 1988, however, even with this tacit support from the Clinton administration, the Taliban were incredibly vulnerable. They had overextended themselves in an invasion of the northern part of Afghanistan, and many of their best, if not most of their best, fighters were captured, along with huge amounts of war supplies. The road to Kabul was open. And who interceded to prevent the collapse of the Taliban at this pivotal moment? Who pulled their chestnuts out of the fire? President Clinton, personally.

At this moment of maximum Taliban vulnerability, the White House dispatched Assistant Secretary of State

Rick Inderfurth and Bill Richardson, then our United Nations ambassador. They flew to northern Afghanistan and convinced the anti-Taliban forces not to attack and not to retake Kabul, but, instead, to accept a cease-fire and an arms embargo.

This is at the moment, and I cannot stress this more forcefully, it was at a pivotal moment. The Taliban could easily have been defeated. The Northern Alliance was willing to accept a return of King Zahir Shah to lead a transition government. Instead, under the direction of the Clinton White House, these two top U.S. Government officials, Assistant Secretary of State Rick Inderfurth and U.N. Ambassador Bill Richardson, arrived on the scene to convince the anti-Taliban forces to stand back. And we thus saved this fanatical, anti-western regime from being destroyed and being defeated.

This later led to a dramatic defeat of the anti-Taliban forces. The cease-fire lasted only long enough for the Saudis and the Pakistanis to fully rearm the Taliban. And the arms embargo that Bill Richardson and Rick Inderfurth talked about, was only effective against the anti-Taliban forces, which are the people called the Northern Alliance. Think about that. We talked them into a cease-fire, which lasted only long enough for the Taliban to rearm. We talked them into an arms embargo, which was only an arms embargo against them.

Again, this was one of the major turning points that led to 9-11. Later, the Taliban, with their supplies replenished, went on the offensive and turned their country into a staging area for terrorism. So the Taliban ended up, with the Clinton administration's somewhat blessings, of taking over all but a sliver of Afghanistan. That portion, of course, that little sliver, was under the command of Commander Massoud, who stood alone in the Panjir Valley, a hero against the war on the Soviets. Now he was all that was left to resist the tyranny of the Taliban.

This is where bin Laden makes his official entrance. Behind the scenes, his foreigners, his radicals, had been there and been the Taliban shock troops for a long time. They murdered anyone and everyone who got in the way and ran roughshod over people all over Afghanistan. bin Laden had already declared war on the United States, and had already killed military personnel and bombed U.S. embassies. The Taliban permitted them to use their country as a base of operations.

Yes, the Clinton administration repeatedly demanded that bin Laden be given up or at least kicked out of Afghanistan. Yet there they were using all of these words making demands, yet they never seemed to care enough to help Massoud or help any of the others who wanted to resist the Taliban.

So what was the Taliban leadership to think? Well, of course they thought that the United States Government really did not mean what it was saying. They believed it was simply posturing for domestic political consideration. This is like when the Clinton administration went to China and demanded human rights reform and then never put any type of force behind that demand.

So our government made it clear to the Taliban by our inaction to support anyone who was opposing the Taliban that our demands on them actually were just made for public consumption here, and that we were actually more concerned with our deal, whatever that deal was, with Pakistan and Saudi Arabia and that we were more concerned with that than anything going on within Afghanistan, including bin Laden. Why would the tough guys in the Taliban think that we cared about human rights abuses, about their treating women like cattle, about their harboring of terrorists like bin Laden, and about their rejection of even a consideration of free elections of any kind when we were not doing anything about it? We did not, as I say, support Massoud; and, in fact, when several of us tried to help those resisting the Taliban, it was our government, the State Department, that got in our way.

Let us be fair about it. If that is the impression the Taliban got, we should admit it. Our government at that time was not serious about democracy, human rights and such in Afghanistan. We were not serious about their form of government or even their harboring of bin Laden because our government in that administration did nothing.

What all this means is that if we stray too far from our basic principles as a country, it is going to end up hurting us. If we stray too far from the fundamental principles that make us Americans, a love of liberty and justice, a belief in the democratic procedures to guide men, and permit people to guide their own destinies and secure their own destinies through election processes, if we ignore these principles, it will come back to hurt the United States of America.

Over the years, I complained over and over again; and I will submit for the record quotes of mine that warned America that we must act against the Taliban. I did this for years.

Well, obviously there was another policy. I am just a lone Congressman. I do not make policy. I try to influence policymakers. But my warnings, repeated warnings, were not heeded.

Well, who was responsible for the policies that left the Taliban free from domestic rivals, the policy that left them free from outside opposition, that left them free from the pressure to democratize and respect human rights? Who was responsible for these policies? How about Madeleine Albright? How about President Clinton? They could not get themselves to endorse any meaningful action against the Taliban even after we had been attacked in Saudi Arabia, blowing up our military bases there, our military installations, our living quarters there, or the blowing up of U.S. embassies in Africa.

Furthermore, there is ample evidence that in the last administration they passed up promising opportunities to take out bin Laden. I, for example, several years ago during the Clinton administration contacted the CIA to let them know that I had an informant who knew exactly where bin Laden was, that he was out of Afghanistan, and that he was willing to pinpoint bin Laden for them. I gave them my contact's phone number. They never called. After a week, I called my friend back and said, Did the CIA get with you? No.

I went to the CIA again and explained that this person had impeccable credentials of knowing what was going on in Afghanistan. They would get to him, but they did not. A week later they still had not called. Then I went and complained to the chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Goss), whom I respect; and I told him what happened.

The next day he had a meeting in this building with representatives of the NSA, the CIA, and the FBI. It was the bin Laden task force. I told them what had happened and that my friend could pinpoint bin Laden, and that he had been ignored for 2 weeks. They would get to it.

Guess what, a week later my friend still had not been contacted. By then the trail was cold. But when I went to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Goss), it got action and my friend was called. He said it was a lackadaisical call. It looked like it was a pro forma call.

Does that sound like an administration committed to getting bin Laden? No. Let the record show there were numerous opportunities to get bin Laden and not one was exploited. The government of Sudan tried to give the U.S. a complete file on bin Laden and his whole gang. Madeleine Albright personally turned that down.

I know of a situation at the Defense Intelligence Agency where a young analyst felt there was a lack of information about Afghanistan and that lack of information was threatening to our national security. She wanted to get the information. She wanted to go up to Massoud's territory and find out what was going on because we did not know what was happening in Afghanistan. She was denied, and she had the gall on her own time, on her own vacation time, to go there to Massoud's stronghold to try to get that information. I think someone like that should get a medal. Instead, she was fired.

I personally asked the general who then headed up the DIA not to fire her. She got the ax anyway. By the way, there is no indication that the DIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency, warned anybody about the attack on 9-11, even though the murder of Commander Massoud 2 days prior to the attack in New York should have set off alarm bells. Of course they had fired the one person who was conscientious about Afghanistan. They had fired that person for being too conscientious, over the objection of a Member of Congress who pleaded that that was the type of responsible behavior we needed.

I say this because the death of Commander Massoud had a special significance to me. I had known Commander Massoud for many years, even before I went to Afghanistan in 1988. During my time in the White House, he sent his brother to me; and we continued a communication through third parties over the years. He was a man I deeply respected. He was a hero; not to say he did not make mistakes. Certainly he made mistakes, and he did some things wrong. But over years of fighting, everybody makes mistakes. But Massoud was a hero. He was a giant of a man.

Mr. Speaker, 2 days before they attacked us, they murdered Massoud. It took the wind right out of my lungs. I had been to his stronghold 5 years before. I visited him in the mountains of Afghanistan. Our friendship was close, and I respected him. We worked out an agreement to have King Zahir Shah return and that Massoud would support that if the King would lead a transition government and have honest elections 2 years later. He was willing to support that, and then the Taliban killed him.

After I had gotten myself together after his death, I knew that it must be because they are going to attack the United States. That is why the Taliban killed him, so we could not have anyone to turn to, to rally behind in our counterattack. So the next day I called the White House. I asked to speak to Condoleezza Rice, and I wanted a meeting with her and the National Security Council because there was an attack that would soon befall the United States of America.

They got back to me, and said, Congressman, we take your opinions on Afghanistan and elsewhere very seriously, but we are very busy. Can you come tomorrow? The earliest we can fit you in is 2:00 tomorrow. I woke up on 9-11 expecting to have a meeting with Condoleezza Rice and the National Security Council at the White House to warn them that there was an imminent attack planned on the United States and to take seriously any possible threat that they saw. Unfortunately, at 8:45, the planes began crashing into the buildings in New York.

slaughter of 3,000 Americans. As I have just discussed, this represents a failure of policy and a failure of the people behind that policy, primarily those in the Clinton administration, not because of politics, but because they happen to be there at the time. Who knows if it would have been a Republican administration. It was George Bush who walked away originally and left the Pakistanis and the Saudis in charge of that region. But it was during the Clinton administration that the Taliban took over, consolidated their power in Afghanistan, and turned that country into a base of operations for anti-American terrorists. The American response is undermining those who oppose the Taliban.

This leads me to my conclusion that our policy was part of an agreement with the Saudis and the Pakistanis to keep the Taliban in power. The attack, however, reflects more than a failure of policy. It reflects more than just that policy. The attack which was carried out by a terrorist organization, a terrorist organization that we had been told over and over again was the number one target of U.S. intelligence, that organization, the number one target of U.S. intelligence, was able to launch an attack of this scope and of this magnitude requiring millions of dollars and the coordination of hundreds of people against the United States. The number one target of U.S. intelligence was able to slaughter 3,000 Americans, to blind-side us. This represents a catastrophic failure of America's intelligence system; it is a failure of the DIA, the CIA, the NSA, the FBI, and the rest of the intelligence alphabet soup here in Washington, DC.

We spend tens of billions of dollars every year, and the number one target of American intelligence is able to organize and pull off an operation of this scale. The magnitude of the screw-up boggles my mind.

Now we know there were warnings. The BBC is reporting that just 2 months before 9-11, the foreign minister of the Taliban was so upset about the terrorist plot that he had heard of that he sent an emissary to an American consulate in nearby Pakistan to warn the United States of a pending attack.

But no one listened to him. Then we know of FBI field agents who were pleading that attention be paid to the terrorist ties of certain students who were being trained to fly airplanes. These FBI agents were chastised for going around channels. They had to go through channels, but they were so concerned that the people in front of them were not acting, they tried to get the attention of Washington but were chastised for not going through channels and they were ignored. The list of failures goes on and on.

I will just say that on 9-11, that something like that happened to me indicates the type of mindset we are dealing with, even after the attack. On 9-11, when the planes had already crashed into the buildings, I realized, everyone realized it was an attack from Afghanistan, based on the terrorists based in Afghanistan, and I called the king of Afghanistan. I wanted to know if there was anyone there protecting him.

"Do you have any police there protecting you?"

"No."

"Are there any police outside your door?" Remember, the king of Afghanistan is in Rome, exiled in Rome. "Are there any policemen outside your door?"

"No, there aren't."

"Are there any people inside your compound with you protecting you?"

"No."

I said, "Is there anyone there with a gun to protect you?"

He said no.

I said, oh, my gosh, our number one asset, the one man who the people of Afghanistan could rally behind now that they have killed Massoud, only the king, Zahir Shah, was someone we could rally the people behind to counterattack against the Taliban, and he was hanging out there in the wind. He was totally exposed.

So I talked to someone, a very high official in one of our intelligence agencies. I told him, and he said he realized the importance of Zahir Shah and he was totally exposed, and he was vulnerable. And, guess what? Five hours later I happened to talk to that same high level official again. I can tell you when I asked him about, well, Zahir Shah, is he under guard now, his response to me was, "You don't expect us to act that fast, do you?"

Give me a break. Of course we expect our people to act that fast. You are within a phone call's distance of the Marine guards who guard our embassy in Rome. Our ambassador, or whoever was there, could have gone over and picked up the king or sent Marines over to protect him, or the agency has people in Rome, et cetera, et cetera.

Instead, 5 hours later, after 3,000 of our people, at that time we thought it was 20,000 people had been slaughtered, but you do not expect us to act that fast, do you?

The people in our intelligence community are, by and large, fine and dedicated people. I will tell you that right now. I respect them, but those individuals who may have my respect as people of good hearts and are patriots, they are now part of a bureaucratic behemoth.

We are relying on what has become organizationally incompetent, a system in which individuals get fired for showing initiative, like that young analyst at the DIA, or they get reprimanded, like those FBI field agents, for begging attention on some pressing threat.

We need to reform the system and make it better. To do so we need to hold those accountable who made errors and to change the structure and mindset. Most importantly, we need to change the structure and the mindset of our intelligence organizations. We cannot let the cloak of secrecy be used to shield the consequences of failure and incompetence.

For that reason I voted for an investigation of 9-11, not just that it be done by our Congressional oversight committees. And I have great respect for those leading those committees and members of those committees, but I believe that it should be also the responsibility of an independent commission on the level of the Warren Commission and perhaps the commission we established after Pearl Harbor to get all the facts about this historical failure of U.S. intelligence.

Let me stress again that I have tremendous respect for and trust for the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) and the others in the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence here in the House, but a redundancy like we are calling for with an independent commission looking into the problem as well cannot in any way hurt. An independent commission could do nothing but contribute to the understanding of the idea pool that is needed to reform and to fix the system.

This anniversary is with us today. We must commit ourselves to see that such surprise attacks will never again be successfully launched against the United States. We will accomplish this by making the changes in policy and the changes in personnel that are needed to keep our country secure.

We must change the way we deal with Saudi Arabia. We must evaluate how we dealt with Afghanistan and admit that it was horrendously wrong. The people behind those policies, especially those people who are still in influential positions in the State Department and elsewhere, must understand that they bear a significant share of the responsibility for the death and destruction that fell on America one year ago today.

The arrogant so-called experts, for example, who shoved aside exiled King Zahir Shah for years, they shoved him aside for two decades, claiming that he was too old to play a positive role in bringing about a better Afghanistan and peace in Afghanistan. They were so absolutely wrong. People in the State Department should find out who it was who pushed this idea that the Zahir Shah could not participate, and those people should be talked to, and those people should look in the mirror and think very seriously about what they did to contribute to this loss of American life.

In essence, they kept the Taliban in power, because they prevented us from getting behind a positive alternative, whether it was Massoud or the others fighting the Taliban, or whether it was Zahir Shah. In essence, they kept the Taliban in power until 3,000 Americans were slaughtered by an attack that was launched from Taliban-controlled territory.

We were attacked a year ago today, and over these last 12 months our military has been able to launch a counter-attack that has dislodged the Taliban and sent them, along with their terrorist allies, the al Qaeda, running for cover and running to hide their heads.

Our military has done a tremendous job. They did this in a landlocked country halfway around the world. This has been a magnificent victory for our country and for its military. To the degree that we sort of have questions about the need to restructure our intelligence system, we need to praise our military and make sure that we build upon the success of our military. They need certain amounts of changes, too, but we need to do that with the military. We can see the positive things they have done and build upon that.

This has been a magnificent victory. If bin Laden is alive today, he is in hiding and he is spending all of his hours not trying to launch some attack on us, but instead he is spending his time trying not to be captured. He could be spending his time mapping out attacks on the United States. Instead, thanks to the expertise and bravery and courage and great job our military has done, we have bin Laden and his likes in hiding, looking over their shoulders, freezing their assets, not able to launch another attack of the magnitude that we suffered one year ago today.

We have accomplished all of this, a tremendous accomplishment in a country on the other side of the world, landlocked. We did this with fewer than 50 American combat deaths. We dislodged the Taliban government from power, we destroyed the regime, we dislodged the terrorists, all with fewer than 50 American combat deaths.

Yes, there have been some mistakes, and in every combat situation there are. If accidentally a house or area is bombed, if we bombed some of our friends accidentally, which has happened, we just need to admit that it was a mistake and help those people rebuild. They will understand, because the Afghan people are praising us as their liberators. We have fought beside the mujahedin again, the freedom fighters of Afghanistan again, to free their land from the Taliban tyranny. As I say, there have been mistakes, but compared to what has been accomplished, this mission gets an A.

Let me note that I have two complaints. They are small complaints and the Afghan people will put up with them for now, but I think that we need to pay attention.

Number one, I do not believe Karzai was the right guy to pick. He does not have a wide base of support in Afghanistan. When the loya jirga was held, we should have permitted the king to emerge, as would have naturally happened. I think there was some wheeling and dealing going on that led to Karzai's ascension, and the king could have been there. He was the natural choice.

But I believe the Afghan people have good hearts and understanding. They know we are there to help them. They know there are political considerations. But they are demanding, of course, free elections in 2 years, and that is what we should be doing, making sure that we keep that pledge and that there are free elections. And if they want to elect anybody, whether it is Karzai or a member of the royal family or whoever it is, they should have a right to do so. We should work with them and help to rebuild their country, and that will be one way to really defeat the Taliban and really defeat al Qaeda. The people of Afghanistan have looked at us as liberators.

The other concern is about drugs. We have not eliminated the drug production in Afghanistan. The poppy crop was not destroyed. We have got to do so next year. That commitment has to be there. That drug money goes into bad hands.

Finally, let us take a look at the challenge we have today and look ahead a year. The President has wisely suggested that now is the time for us to eliminate that threat that hangs over us and has hung over us for 10 years. We did not complete the job in the Gulf War. We left Saddam Hussein in power. That was the gift that George Bush, Sr., gave to us. George Bush, Jr., is going to make up for that. He has committed us to eliminating the dictatorial, fascistic regime of Saddam Hussein.

We should not be weary of this. In fact, we should know that Saddam Hussein has less support in Iraq than the Taliban had support in Afghanistan. Our strategy should be to help the people of Iraq liberate themselves from this monstrous regime headed by Saddam Hussein. The people of Iraq will be waving American flags and dancing in the street because we will help them build a democratic society. We can do so with the same strategy as we did in Afghanistan, work with Special Forces teams and air support. We can support those people who want to fight for their own freedom. It worked in Afghanistan, it will work in Iraq. We should not have fear and trepidation about getting rid of this threat of Saddam Hussein. He is, as George Shultz suggested, a rattlesnake in our front yard, and we should not wait until he bites us to cut its head off.

Now we can move forward in Iraq and eliminate that threat, as we have eliminated the Taliban threat, and we can do so not by sending huge numbers of American forces, but by helping the people in Iraq, as we did in Afghanistan, to liberate themselves. That is what the challenge the President is giving us is. That is why we as Americans should always stand for those people who want to live in a free society and are willing with their courage and blood to fight for their freedom, but need our help logistically, need our air support, perhaps need our advice from our Special Forces teams.

So, as we remember 9-11, let us never repeat that, by being proactive in the future. Where there are dictatorships and fascist regimes, like the Taliban, and if they threaten the West and the United States, we do not have to do this with all regimes that are dictatorial, but if they threaten us, let us work with the people who suffer with a boot on their face and with an iron grip around their necks, let us work with those people to help them free themselves.

We have on the floor of the House of Representatives two pictures, one of George Washington, a great painting of George Washington, and a painting of Lafayette. Lafayette came here during the American Revolution to help us win our freedom. Let us not forget the French helped us win our freedom, and that people like Lafayette were heroes to early Americans.

While we must serve that same role that Lafayette served to us, we must serve that role to those people overseas who long for liberty and justice. If we do so, we will be the light of the world. We will be the hope of all the young people in the Muslim countries who are looking for some people who believe in something, rather than people who are talking about stability and keeping the status quo.

We need to be the ones who offer moral alternatives, and the morality we offer is democratic government and a respect for human rights, treating people decently. Our flag should stand for justice and hope. If we do, rather than the type of things we were doing in the 1990s with Communist China and the Taliban and all of these regimes, where we were not doing anything to make it clear that we honestly and sincerely believed these founding principles of our society, if we do that, we will be free and we will be safe.

There is a dynamic in this world between peace and freedom. Freedom tomorrow will bring peace. Just as we lived under the threat of some sort of war with the Soviet Union, the Soviet people, the Russian people were never our enemies. It was that system. As soon as we made it a fight between communism and democracy and stopped just supporting any dictatorship that was against the Communists, the Communist system itself began to crumble in Moscow, and no one was more heroic in that fight against the Soviet dictatorship than the people of Afghanistan. They fought and they bled and they gave us a more peaceful and a freer world.

We did not do what was right by them. We did not help them rebuild their country at that time; we did not stick with them. We left it up to the Saudis and the Pakistanis. We have a chance now to make up for that. But we must persevere in helping them rebuild their country; and that will cement peace in that region, because people will believe in us again. We need, again, to make sure that we become the force for liberty and justice and decent treatment for people all over the world, and that is where we will find America's security. Let us have the courage to do so. Our President has charted a wise course, and we should have the tenacity and the courage to follow this through now that we have learned after 9-11 that there are consequences to pay when we do not.

IN SUPPORT OF H. CON. RES. 464, PATRIOT DAY RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OTTER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support today of H.Con. Resolution 464, commemorating the solemn occasion of the first anniversary of September 11, 2001, and the vicious attack on the United States and its people that day.

September 11 will long be remembered not just for the death and destruction brought upon America and too many of our people, but also for the day in which innocence was lost. The hijacking of civilian aircraft and the taking of thousands of innocent bystanders' lives will forever be among the most heinous of crimes against humanity. Yet, while the attacks, designed to shake our Nation to its deepest roots and break our spirit to be a leader of the Free World, they only served to strengthen our resolve and show the world that the American sense of kindness and community could not be broken even by the most awful of acts.

In the midst of a living hell only Dante could describe, Americans rose to respond, first by the police, firefighters, and emergency medical personnel who poured into burning buildings which had become infernos, risking life and limb to save a fellow citizen and later by military force. As we now know, many made the ultimate sacrifice. Yet, rather than create panic and chaos, the attacks by the terrorists only served to underscore our resolve. Clearly, in the early hours following the attacks, the actions of otherwise ordinary Americans proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the terrorists failed in their ultimate goal. While they were able to cause pain and suffering and shatter a sense of security felt here at home, they failed in destroying the spirit which is America. And, in causing the death and destruction, they exposed the world to their own twisted ideology of anger and hate and a lack of respect for freedom and human life.

Mr. Speaker, in the intervening months, America, with our allies, has proven militarily that we can and will respond to defend ourselves and our freedom throughout the world. But even as important as it has been to respond swiftly and forcefully, it is now clear that the actions of those Americans who gave their lives on September 11, 2001, and those who responded to help them, and the faith that they inspired in the rest of us, resulted in a victory over the terrorists that very day.

Now, we must continue to battle for freedom and democracy throughout the world, not only for our own defense, but also in the memory of those who first gave their lives for the cause on September 11, 2001.

GOODWILL OF UKRAINE HELPS AMERICA HEAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, this hallowed day, the anniversary of the terrible terrorist attacks upon the United States, is one that is observed throughout America. The eloquence of our colleagues in this House has stirred our hearts, described our attitudes, and revealed the Nation's character. America's tragedy is mourned this day throughout the world, too.

It is important for Americans to understand and appreciate the outpouring of support, the gestures of solidarity, and the prayers of the faithful bestowed upon us by the people of the world. As cochairman of the Congressional Ukrainian Caucus, I rise today to speak about one country's goodwill toward the American people in commemoration of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attack.

Throughout my tenure in Congress, I have always been an ardent supporter of democratic development in Ukraine. The full commercial and strategic potential of a democratic Ukraine is staggering and the desire for freedom is deeply routed in the American psyche.

Mr. Speaker, in the House the days and the weeks following the attacks, the Ukrainian people grieved with America and the rest of the world. The sentiments of the Ukrainian people were echoed in a letter from Bishop Stanislaw Shyrokoradiuk of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Kyiv-

Zhytomyr. Here is what the bishop said, what he wrote:

"I would like to present to you and in you, to all American people, our condolences because of the terrible tragedy that has stricken the whole world.

"We have been deeply shaken to know about the series of acts of terrorism that happened in the United States of America yesterday.

"It has been an awful blow by its cruelty and scale that struck not only the U.S.A., but all humanity. I received this notice during spiritual retreats in our Higher Spiritual Seminary in Vorzel, where all priests of our Diocese came. As a sign of our unity and sympathy in your grief, we celebrated Holy Mass for the souls of the departed and prayed for all victims. May the Lord strengthen them by His grace that they may outlive this horrible disaster.

"There are Divine Services and prayers said for the souls of the departed victims, and for all of those who have suffered, in all of our churches.

"These day our hearts and prayers are with you and your people.

"Sincerely Yours, Bishop Stanislaw Shyrokoradiuk, the Vicar general of Kyiv Zhytomyr Diocese." Bishop Shyrokoradiuk in Ukraine sent that the day after.

As a country, Ukraine immediately declared its solidarity with the United States, offering its support morally, technically, militarily and with the capabilities of its infrastructure. Ukraine's stance clearly demonstrated its friendship with the United States and the forces of freedom.

Most helpful has been Ukraine's clearance of airspace for nearly 5,000 aircraft flying in from Afghanistan and aid in transporting allied troops and materiel by air and train. Ukraine also provided planes and crews in order to provide transportation for coalition forces and humanitarian missions over Iran.

Ukrainian security forces have been cooperating with Americans offering intelligence regarding the fighting in Afghanistan and other security concerns. Ukraine's international efforts in leading the Georgia, Ukraine, Uzbekistan, Azerbaijan, and Georgia Group, called GUUAM, to secure strategic transport corridors from terrorist activity have helped secure the entire regional community. Ukraine has cooperated with us in blocking and investigating the financial transactions and accounts of suspected terrorists.

Just today, Mr. Speaker, Ukraine's parliament, the Verkhovna (Supreme) Rada, unanimously passed three resolutions in support of America. One extends Ukraine's profound sympathy to the families and friends of victims. The other directs the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine to establish a memorial at the World Trade Center in New York to the Ukrainians who perished there. The third resolution outlines Ukraine's commitment to the future of freedom and reaffirms Ukraine's solidarity in the war on terrorism and its commitment to strengthening international peace and security.

This latter resolution lucidly addresses issues of global concern, including environmental problems and global health issues. Currently, Ukraine is preparing to send two IL-76 cargo planes loaded with small arms, ammunition, and other military equipment to outfit the Afghan National Army.

This morning, the President of Ukraine, Leonid Kuchma, met with our ambassador, Carlos Pascual. The President pledged his country's continued support for Operation Enduring Freedom and expressed his regret for the loss of lives in America 1 year ago.

This afternoon, Ukraine's Ambassador Kostyantyn Gryshchenko visited me in my office here in Washington, D.C. and extended his country's condolences, support, and solidarity. He asked me to express to the House Ukraine's commitment to America's war on terrorism. He assured me that the prayers of countless Ukrainians are for the repose of the souls of the victims.

At this moment in Kyiv, Mr. Speaker, Ukrainians are paying their respects as they observe a large photo collage of Ground Zero. The display honors the emergency workers and heroes of 9-11. There is a similar exhibit at the Ukrainian National Gallery; and on Friday, they will hold a commemorative concert at the National Opera.

Ukraine's condemnation of international terrorism, its much-appreciated support on the war on terrorism, its tough, newly enacted laws to combat terrorism and its commitment to fight at the side of the United States and its allies for civil society and democracy clearly demonstrates the role Ukraine and her people intend to play. Ukraine's support for America is deeply appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the people of Ukraine for their condolences and camaraderie and commend Ukraine's leaders for standing shoulder to shoulder with the United States. I will submit for the RECORD at this time the resolution that was adopted this morning by Ukraine's parliament.

THE LESSONS OF THE TRAGEDY ARE NOT TO BE FORGOTTEN

STATEMENT BY THE VERKHOVNA RADA OF UKRAINE ON THE OCCASION OF THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE EVENTS IN THE UNITED STATES ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

The year that passed after the tragedy in the United States of America did not assuage anger and indignation at malevolent actions of terrorists, pain and bitterness over the loss of thousands of innocent people who died in the airplanes, skyscrapers of the World Trade Center in New York, and offices of the Pentagon. Paying homage to their memory we express once again our sympathy with families and loved ones of the victims.

The last year tragedy has taught the mankind many lessons. First of all it demonstrated that neither financial and economic power, nor possession of unprecedented arsenals of modern arms can guarantee security even for the most powerful state of the world. It has become even more obvious that only with united and coordinated actions can the mankind overcome the international terrorism and religious fundamentalism.

Realization of that led to creation of the anti-terrorist coalition that included dozens of countries. An important role within the coalition belongs to Ukraine, whose foreign policy major goals are strengthening of the international peace and security, maintaining peaceful, equitable, and mutually beneficial cooperation with members of the international community consonant with the generally accepted principles and norms of the international law.

The Verkhovna Rada of Ukraine considers it exceptionally important to apply the experience of the anti-terrorist coalition to strengthening cooperation of members of the international community in overcoming such global challenges as deepening gap between a handful of the richest countries and numerous less developed nations and countries in transition; catastrophic impoverishment of hundreds of millions of people; spread of drug abuse, infectious disease, corruption and organized crime; depletion of water and other natural resources; pollution; dangerous accumulation of nuclear, chemical, and other weapons of mass destruction; strive for hegemony and dictates in international relations; attempts to use objective processes of globalization and internationalization in the selfish interests of one state or a group of states.

United, the mankind is capable to ensure protection of the environment and biodiversity, acceleration of economic and social growth of every member of the international community. We consistently support the increasing role of the United Nations in resolving international problems, strict compliance with requirements of the UN Charter on conflict resolution and prevention of threats to peace and security of the nations.

The documents of the World Summit on Sustainable Development held recently in Johannesburg attracted attention in the Ukrainian society. By taking unprecedented decisions to voluntarily renounce the third largest nuclear arsenal and close up the Chornobyl nuclear power station, Ukraine, having been left alone with these very complicated problems, demonstrated to the world its devotion to the cause of peace and international security and adherence to its international commitments.

Reflecting on the lessons of the last year September tragedy, we consider it our duty to draw once again the attention of the international community to the above issues and call on all the nations to consolidate and multiply their efforts to overcome global challenges facing the mankind in the 21st century.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained and was not present for rollcall vote 384 on House Concurrent Resolution 464. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes."

Mr. GRUCCI. Mr. Speaker, due to numerous September 11th memorial services taking place in my district in New York today, honoring my 60 constituents who lost their lives in last year's tragedy, I will be unable to make it back to the Capitol in time to vote on H. Con. Res. 464. If present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 384, I was absent due to attending memorial events relating to 9–11. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 384, I was absent due to attending and speaking at 9–11 events. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5193, BACK TO SCHOOL TAX RELIEF ACT OF 2002

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107–654) on the resolution (H. Res. 521) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 5193) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow a deduction to certain taxpayers for elementary and secondary education expenses, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY COMMITTEE ON RULES REGARDING AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 1701, CONSUMER RENTAL PURCHASE AGREEMENT ACT

(Mr. REYNOLDS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules may meet the week of September 16 to grant a rule which could limit the amendment process for floor consideration of H.R. 1701, the Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act.

Any Member wishing to offer an amendment should submit 55 copies and a brief explanation to the Committee on Rules in room H–312 of the Capitol by 12 noon on Tuesday, September 17. Members should draft their amendments to the bill as reported by the Committee on Financial Services and the Committee on the Judiciary.

Members should use the Office of Legislative Counsel to ensure that their amendments are properly drafted and should check with the Office of the Parliamentarian to be certain their amendments comply with the rules of the House.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GILCHREST). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

TAKE COURAGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, today is a very, very important day in America's history. It is the 1-year anniversary of the attack on America. I was handed something by one of my young staffers who has joined my office. He was formerly a page or intern in our office, and he has come back to work full-time, Parker Altman from Belle Glade, Florida, a community in my district. When he handed me this, I felt compelled to bring it to the floor to read it in its entirety because it sums up, I think, a courageous viewpoint of a young person; and it speaks to what is in the hearts and minds of many young people who work in the Capitol, who are young, energetic, intelligent people who have come from around the country to be part of this great government.

It begins, "I woke up this morning just like any other day. Got ready for work and headed out. I had to leave a little early to beat the expected traffic around the Pentagon which is a transfer point on my daily commute. Regardless of my early departure, my wife insisted on getting up as well to make my lunch as she normally does. I told her not to worry about it, that I would get lunch at work, but she shook off her tiredness and strode into the kitchen. After putting my lunch in my briefcase, we hugged our usual goodbye, something was different. The hug turned into an embrace and I began to feel her shaking in my arms. 'Be careful,' she whispered, as her eyes welled up with tears.

"I arrived at the office about an hour early. I quickly settled into my morning routine of sorting the mail and answering letters. Absentmindedly I printed, folded, and stuffed. The rest of the staff began to trickle in and the office took on its typical tone. Televisions were turned on and a more subdued demeanor settled over us.

"I had assured Carrie when I left home this morning that I would be fine and would keep in contact with her throughout the day. I took on a brave face to settle her nerves, or so I thought. I realize now while I sit here in our Nation's Capitol that the impression of my courage that I summoned at home was not only to calm Carrie, but to quiet my own apprehensions. I sit here in my office at the footsteps of the Capitol building, the intended target of last year's Flight 93, with numerous memorials and services going on throughout the city. I sit here at my desk, wavering from the painful emotions dating back to this very morning 1 year ago to the pride and the response and resolve that united our Nation and back again, yet all masked by an outer appearance of courageous numbness. Pausing a bit to find these words, I realized that I sit here scared.

"This is not a bad thing. In my young opinion, I think fear can be a positive force if understood properly and not allowed to overcome all other emotions. I am scared. Scared but not crippled by the fear. I try not to dwell on the what-ifs, not to think about how I would handle a devastating situation like last year. I try, but the thoughts invariably sneak in. I like to think that fear has not defeated me. Today, like yesterday, I commuted into work, passing through the very site that was struck last year. Today, like yesterday, I sit at my desk in my office at the footsteps of the Capitol building, the very symbol of democracy that our enemies hate. Today, like yesterday, I remember the images flashing across the screen, and I feel a twisting in my gut from the raw emotions of these events. Today, like yesterday, I am scared. Scared but not crippled because I know that regardless of what happens today or tomorrow or the days beyond, my family and friends know that I love them. I know that despite the evils in the world that work to frighten us, there is a God that overpowers all. I know that because of this divine good, I should no longer be afraid of the evil. Senate Chaplain Lloyd John Ogilvie said it best in New York City last autumn. When faced with our inevitable fears, Dr. Ogilvie reminded us that because of His presence we should, 'take courage, it's yours, you know.'

"This is my prayer for you as this day progresses and as we face the uncertainties of tomorrow. It is, 'Take courage, it's yours, you know.'

That was by Parker Altman, my staff member. I mentioned he is from Belle Glade. It sums up the thoughts and emotions of many of the fine young people here today. They did come to work, despite the fears and alerts, Democrats, Republicans and Independents from around this great country of ours, these fascinating and fulfilling young people who choose to labor in these buildings and the Capitol, much like the Clerk's Office, the police officers, the rank and file. All of us came here today to prove a point to terrorists that we will not succumb to fear.

When we have a 21-year-old coming up to us, realizing that probably their own parents suggested they should stay home, call in sick, these kids chose no, and to face the burden of the day and face the challenges; and, yes, face the fear, knowing that this city could be a target at any time. But democracy, for it to flourish, fear must be subdued, and we must fight with our energy and vigor to make America the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Mr. Speaker, I salute Parker Altman today. I am thankful that he took time to put his words to paper. I am thrilled that I am able to read it on this floor and state a memorial for the RECORD. I urge all Americans today as we bow our heads in prayer to thank God for the divine inspiration and the great opportunity we had today to celebrate another day of American heritage; sad as it was, powerful that we were able to overcome our fears and focus on the work of the people.

AMERICANS STAND TALL AGAINST TERRORISM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on this September 11, the 1-year anniversary of the greatest tragedy on American soil in our history with a heavy heart, as I know is shared by all Americans, because it was on this day 1 year ago when almost 3,000 Americans lost their lives at the hands of evil terrorists who sought to destroy our Nation, who seek to destroy our way of life.

We know from that experience that all Americans must stand tall against the threat of international terrorism. We know as Americans that we never, never, never want to experience that tragedy again. As a part of our history, we will always remember September 11 of last year.

I come to the floor today to call upon the House to pass legislation entitled the National Memorial to the Victims of Terrorism Act. This legislation would memorialize all victims of terrorism, both those who have lost their lives on September 11, as well as those who have been victims of terrorism in previous times, as well as those who have died in the cause since.

Since September 11 of last year, we have engaged in a battle in Afghanistan where 51 Americans have lost their lives. We know from experience that the war against terrorism will not be won quickly and that perhaps we may face this challenge for many years ahead.

In many ways on September 11, the American people recognized for the first time that we were in fact engaged in a war against terrorism, even though we have had ample opportunity to define those events that occurred in previous years, taking the lives of American citizens and American soldiers, as a war. We understand that this legislation that we have introduced will memorialize those who lost their lives to terrorism. The legislation which we have introduced is entitled the National Memorial to the Victims of Terrorism. It was introduced by me and by the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN). It is a bipartisan piece of legislation that enjoys the support of Members on both sides of the aisle.

The legislation would create a 13-member Victims of Terrorism Memorial Advisory Board appointed by the President in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Defense. Members of the advisory board would include appointees from organizations dedicated to assisting the victims of terrorism and their families. The board would begin the process of establishing a memorial not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this legislation. The advisory board would have the responsibility of raising the necessary funds from private sources to pay for this national memorial.

Those who came and testified on behalf of this legislation in the committee last May spoke very eloquently about the importance of this national memorial. We had testimony from Lisa Beamer, the widow of Todd Beamer, who joined those brave passengers on Flight 93 and fought off the terrorists and saved this Capitol and many people who were in this building.

We had testimony from Colonel Ted Anderson, who saved many victims when the Pentagon was struck by the aircraft on that fateful day.

We had testimony from Joe Finley, a New York firefighter who worked hard and dedicated his efforts on that fateful day to saving the lives of those who were struck in the World Trade Center.

We also had testimony from Liz Howell, a staffer on the Committee on Resources staff that heard of this bill who lost her husband at the Pentagon on September 11.

Each of these individuals shared heartfelt testimony as to why it is important for Americans to mark this event with a national memorial, and why it is also important to reflect in this memorial the memory of all who have lost their lives to terrorism.

The war on terrorism is indeed the first war of the 21st century. It will not be one marked by any one geographic location. It is a global war. It is a global war that will be fought both at home and abroad. Though they have lost their lives in places far and near over a span of time that includes the past, the present and perhaps the future, the victims of terrorism, both civilian and military, deserve solemn tribute, for they died at the hands of the enemies of America simply because they were Americans.

I call upon the leadership of this Congress to promptly set this bill for hearing in order that we may act promptly and pass the National Memorial to the Victims of Terrorism Act.

THE MEANING OF SEPTEMBER 11

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GILCREST). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to use the full hour this evening, unless some of my colleagues come in and would like to share some of the time.

I did want to take to the floor this evening on the evening of September 11 to basically talk about the meaning of September 11 to me and particularly to my constituents in New Jersey. I wanted to particularly make reference to two events that I participated in in the last 24 hours.

Last evening, after the House adjourned during the day for votes, I went up to Middletown, New Jersey, which is a town in my district, in Monmouth County, that suffered more deaths in the World Trade Center building during the attack on September 11 than any other town in New Jersey or maybe in the whole metropolitan area. There was a memorial service, a dedication of a garden in memory of the 36 residents of Middletown who died on September 11. It was a very moving ceremony. We had relatives of the victims who made speeches. I would like to talk about it a little more.

The other event I went to this morning was at my own high school in Long Branch, New Jersey, where the entire student body from kindergarten, I believe, all the way to 12th grade, to the graduating seniors, showed up at the football stadium for a service. I think we must have had probably over 4,000 people there this morning. It also was very moving. I would like to sort of comment on both of those ceremonies in light of what happened last year.

Mr. Speaker, last September 11 I actually was in the Capitol. Many of us know that on Mondays and Tuesdays we schedule at 9 a.m. what we call morning hour, which is very similar to the special orders that we have at the end of the day. It is an opportunity between 9 and 10 a.m. for Members of Congress to come down and give 5-minute speeches on whatever topic they desire. It is not part of the votes of the House. It is an opportunity to talk about issues or really any kind of event that you want to talk about that day.

Before morning hour on the Democratic side we have a meeting, what we call a message meeting in the morning that I chair, along with the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO), and that usually starts at 8:30 in the morning. So on that morning of September 11 last year we started at 8:30, maybe it was a little later, with a message meeting, and then we came up to the floor, some of us, including myself, to do the 5 minutes for morning hour.

I do not know exactly what time it was, probably maybe about 9:15 or 9:20, when I finished my 5-minute speech for morning hour that I walked out of this Chamber and walked over to the leader's office, the office of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), and discovered that the World Trade Center had been attacked. It was on the TV.

The only reason I bring this up is because over the weekend there was a report in the news media about how certain informers for al Qaeda and the Taliban had indicated that the plane that went down in Pennsylvania on September 11 last year was actually headed for the Capitol, for the United States Capitol.

This morning when I was at the ceremony at Long Branch High School, the superintendent of schools, who was the MC for the ceremony, Mr. Joseph Ferraina, mentioned in his opening remarks that the people who died on September 11 basically gave their lives so that others might live.

I thought about that statement this morning, and, of course, it has a tremendous symbolic meaning, but it also had a literal meaning in a sense for me, because it is very likely that if those brave Americans who had decided to try to fight the terrorists and bring down that plane into a field in Pennsylvania had not made the decision to try to struggle and overcome the terrorists, that that plane would have headed for the Capitol and I would have been right here on the House floor and probably died as a result or could have died as a result of that attack. So those people literally, literally, were giving their lives so that Members of Congress like myself and my colleagues could live.

It is an amazing thing to think about, that they were willing to sacrifice so that that plane would not come here and hit the United States Capitol.

But I also thought this morning that they were not only giving their lives for other Americans, possibly myself and my colleagues, but they were also sacrificing their lives, they were essentially martyrs for the cause of America in a more symbolic way. When I say the cause of America, what do I mean? I mean democracy. I mean the freedom of speech, the freedom to assemble, the freedom of religion that we find so sacred.

My wife mentioned to me this morning that the Americans who were on that plane that ended up crashing in Pennsylvania, because they were in contact with others on the ground, they were using cell phones and were able to contact other people while they were on the plane, and they found out that the World Trade Center had been attacked, that the Pentagon had been attacked, and they decided, because of those attacks, that they would take a vote and they would vote amongst themselves on the plane as to whether or not they would try to overcome the terrorists in order to veer the plane away from, in this case, the Capitol or whatever else they thought landmark it might be used by the terrorists to attack.

I thought it was terribly significant that they voted, because here we are this morning in Long Branch, yesterday in Middletown, today on the floor in Washington, talking about the meaning of democracy and how the people who lost their lives were really martyrs for the American way for democracy. Lo and behold, they were taking a vote to decide whether to overcome the terrorists, which is probably, I guess, the most basic manifestation of what democracy is about, taking a vote.

I am sure that the terrorists that hijacked the plane were not taking any votes because, unlike the Americans who were willing to give their lives on that plane, they did not believe in a democratic process. They did not believe in the American way, the values that we believe in. They basically had a very different ideology, and their ideology, whatever it was, said that it was okay for them to hijack the plane, to kill innocent civilians for what would appear to be some sort of fundamentalist religious cause.

I think that we cannot forget the fact that so many Americans who lost their lives on September 11, including the 36 in Middletown, the town that I went to last night in my district, even though they were giving their lives for the American way, for American values, that the effect on their families, the effect on their relatives, is devastating.

It is nice to say that someone is a martyr. It is a glorious thing. But, at the same time, it is very hard to be the relative of the martyr, because your husband or your wife or your daughter or your son is no longer there. There is the huge void, if you will, that lingers. I am sure it lingers a year later or lingers 10 years later. It is never really filled.

Mr. Speaker, I will introduce into the record an article that was in the New York Times, I think it was on September 7, just a couple of days ago, that talks about Middletown, New Jersey, and the grief and the difficulty that the relatives and the survivors of the victims of September 11 have been going through.

I put it in the record, Mr. Speaker, not because I want to dwell on the grief. The title of the article in the New York Times is "Emerging From Cocoon of Grief," but because I think it is important for us to understand that as much as we talk about these victims and their families, or these heroes, I should say, and their families, in the sense that they gave so much and they are so important and they are so significant for us to comment on, that they still were people whose families now are having problems because of a void that has been left behind. I think this article kinds of sums it all up. It sums up their courage and what they had to face, but also sums up what they face in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Ms. WATERS).

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for yielding to me and giving me an opportunity to voice my support for House Concurrent Resolution 464. I was not here when the vote was taken. I was on a plane coming from Los Angeles. I had to stay in the district to take care of some very important problems there. I tried very hard to get from the airport here to the House floor so that I may take that vote, because I think it is so important for all of us to show that we really do care and we really do honor the memory of those who lost their lives and for those families who are making sacrifices, even today, because of the devastation that they are experiencing in their families and in their homes and in their lives. So I would like it to be known that had I been present for the vote on House Concurrent Resolution 464, Roll Call No. 384, I certainly would have voted yes.

Again, I want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) for taking out extra time on the floor. Having done what we all should have done, and that is voted, the gentleman has remained here, because he had something additional that he wanted to say to the families and to the friends and neighborhoods and the communities.

Just as I walked in, the gentleman was talking about what happened on that airplane in Pennsylvania when a decision was made by a vote "to roll," to try and take the plane away from the hijackers, in an effort perhaps to prevent them from coming to this Capitol or to the White House.

The gentleman is absolutely correct, we should never forget that, and we should all know and feel that we are very blessed because there were very brave people who decided to take a courageous action in the interest of saving lives. So I thank the gentleman for the extra time that he is putting into this.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for those words.

Mr. Speaker, I see other colleagues joining me, and I am very pleased to see that, and I just wanted to talk a little bit more about the Long Branch ceremony this morning and Middletown last night, if I could.

I was really happy this morning in Long Branch because there were so many young people there, about 4,000 people, as I said, maybe from kindergarten all the way to 12th grade from my home community. I think they were listening very attentively to the various speeches being made and they understood that the people who lost their lives on September 11 really were heroes to the American way.

The most important thing I think we need to do as we continue to commemorate September 11, and in Long Branch actually said they plan on doing the ceremony every September 11 because they wanted to teach, if you will, the students and the young people about the significance of September 11, that it is important that from now on, not only today, but in the future, that we continue to commemorate the day and we continue to commemorate those people who lost their lives and the heroes that tried to help the victims, the firefighters, the police, because if we forget it, then we are not paying proper respect to them, and we must continue to point out that this democracy that we live in and the freedoms that we so cherish are not easily come by, that people continue to sacrifice for them.

Obviously we must continue to do what we can here in Congress with the President and Congress jointly to make sure that the terrorists do not have the opportunity to do this type of terrible act again.

If I could just mention a little more about Middletown last night, because it was so significant. As I said, in Middletown there were 36 men and women who lost their lives in the World Trade Center on September 11.

I mentioned the article that was in the New York Times, and there was a lot of news stories and national attention that was focused on Middletown over the last year because so many people died proportionately for the size of the town. But in the middle of all the descriptions in the news media about the suffering, about the people who died and their families, there was also much said about the pride of the community, the fact that the community came together in untold ways, that residents were helping each other in time of need, and that the community banded together not only to help the families of people who died but also to send firefighters and police to help the efforts on September 11 and in the aftermath. And I guess I just wanted to say this evening, if I could, how proud I was last night to be able to say that I represent a community like Middletown and to also have the opportunity to participate in the groundbreaking for another wonderful community effort there, the Middletown Memorial Garden.

Let me just explain a little bit about what went on last night. Each of the elected representatives spoke briefly, and then they had relatives of the victims who spoke and then they proceeded over to this new memorial garden where each of the relatives was given a shovel to shovel some of the dirt before the garden started to be put together. And of the speakers, every one of them was overwhelming in terms of what they said and the significance of what they said, but in particular I can remember a little girl, I do not know, I think she probably was about 9 or 10 years old, maybe a little younger or a little older, and of course she reminded me of my own daughter. I have one daughter who is 9 years old. And she spoke about her father. She basically read a letter, I guess in a sense she was writing a letter to dad, and it was such a moving experience. And after that all the relatives, I think about 170 or so relatives that proceeded over to this garden to do the shoveling of the groundbreaking, and there were little kids 2 years old, 3 years old all the way up to teenagers. It was such an overwhelming experience.

I want to say in conclusion before I yield to my colleagues, the loss is always going to be there. There is no way to get away from the loss for all these relatives of what they lost on September 11, but I think if we do not forget the people who gave their lives, if we continue to commemorate their activities, if we do things like the Middletown Memorial Garden or the ceremonies like were held at Long Branch High School this morning, then we are doing what is necessary to make sure that we never forget what happened and the significance of what happened. We need to be reminded ultimately that this battle against those who would defy America and defy America's values is never ending and that we have to be constantly vigilant in order to protect our democracy and our freedoms. And that is why I think today was so significant to me, not only to the two ceremonies that I attended over the last 24 hours, but because I feel in general that people after a year really understand the significance of what happened on September 11 and are determined to keep in mind the lessons of that day.

Mr. Speaker, with that I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL), and I know he had many of his own constituents who died and suffered that day as well. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGEL. I thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE), my friend, for yielding to me, and I am very grateful that we are able to speak on the floor about September 11 today because I have just gotten back from New York and spent my morning at Ground Zero at the World Trade Center site where we had extremely moving events. I was just out in front of the Capitol where I sang "God Bless America" with so many of our colleagues, and for me being in two places the same day, Ground Zero, the World Trade Center, and at the Capitol where we now know that the doomed flight from Pennsylvania was heading towards the Capitol. It has been a very emotional roller coaster for me to be in both cities one day. Flying the shuttle, it was practically empty. A lot of people were obviously not flying today. But I am just so proud the way this Congress and the American people are handling the anniversary of the tragedy that happened 1 year ago today.

I saw, as I have seen in my city since September 11, just an outpouring of goodwill, of people just hugging each other and banding together and taking pride in being New Yorkers and taking pride in being Americans and just wanting to help each other, care about each other, be concerned with each other. We saw that again when I drove down this morning. The first thing we saw when we got near Ground Zero were people with American flags and having victory signs and thumbs-up signs and just hugging each other. When we actually got to the event, there was a platform and we started with different famous speeches that were made, and then at the exact times that the planes hit the World Trade Center, both towers, there were moments of silence, and then at the exact times that the buildings crumbled a year ago, there were bells tolling and moments of silence, and all the names of all the victims of the September 11 tragedy at the World Trade Center were read from A to Z, and it was very, very moving. I was given a list of names to read to be part of the procedure, to read the names, and I realized that someone had come in who was a family member of someone who had died at the World Trade Center and he had no names to read, and I gave him my list to read because it was just enough for me to be there to just get the feeling. And I will tell my colleagues, it was a very windy day in New York City today, and it was almost as if one could just feel the spirit lifting everybody that was there. I do not think I have ever had anything that has been as emotional or as emotionally uplifting. It was sad, very, very sad, but at the same time it made us feel like we were all part of something and that we were all together as Americans and as New Yorkers. There were thousands upon thousands of people. There were family members making their way down to the exact spot of Ground Zero.

Last night at about 1 o'clock in the morning, there were processions, actually marches, of people from all five boroughs. New York City, of course, has five boroughs. The Bronx, where I am from; Brooklyn; Manhattan; Queens; and Staten Island. And people started from the farthest reaches of the city, from the farthest points of the five boroughs from Ground Zero and all converged at Ground Zero. And so as the names were being read out, family members were marching down and we could see the family members. Yo Yo Ma was playing as he does so well, and it was just a very moving experience.

I said the week of September 11 last year after touring the site with the President 3 days after that I was never more proud to be an American and never more proud to be a New Yorker, and I feel that way again today. And I do hope that every September 11 we can all come together. I hope we can do it 365 days of the year, but I think that September 11 is a day that we really always need to reflect and always need to understand how proud we are to be Americans, how proud we are to be New Yorkers. The terrorists think that they can destroy our way of life, but they cannot. Quite the opposite. Because what I see is a resolve amongst Americans, amongst people in this country like I have never seen before. It is almost as if a sleeping giant has awakened, and we are going to ensure that the evil of terrorism is eradicated all over the world wherever it rears its ugly head, and this country will always be in the forefront of fighting evil. And we understand what it means to be an American, and we understand why it is so important that we all band together and help each other because that really gives us the meaning of what life is all about.

And those people, those poor people, and I will conclude, who perished on September 11 did not perish in vain because they will always be in our minds, they will always be in our hearts, and the heroism that we saw from the first responders to everybody else, the untold acts of heroism that we will never know about, those people are an inspiration to all of us.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL) for what he said, and I know that there were a lot of New Jersey people at Ground Zero. I think the governor of New Jersey also spoke or read the Declaration of Independence, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California (Ms. PELOSI), our Democratic whip.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and for having this very important special order this evening on this day that is etched in the hearts and minds of all Americans.

I want to first commend the gentleman, my colleague from New York (Mr. ENGEL), and extend to him and the members of the New York delegation, especially the dean, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) for the magnificent hospitality extended to the Congress. Over 300 Members of Congress traveled to New York on Friday to the place where George Washington took the oath of office as our first President of the United States. What more suitable place could there be than for us to express our grief to all those who personally suffered on September 11 and, indeed, to our entire country which shares in that grief?

But New York took a hit and all those from surrounding areas, as the gentleman said, many from New Jersey, certainly those in the plain in Pennsylvania and those at the Pentagon, in every venue the spirit of the families who suffered the loss and the spirit of the communities that were involved has lifted up our country.

This has been quite a day for our country, all over America, and I know in my district in San Francisco all day. We started at 5 o'clock this morning because it is three hours earlier, to be ready to commemorate at the exact moment the sad tragedy that our country experienced last year. But for some of us, we were in the National Cathedral at that precise time when the great bell of the cathedral rang to observe again that sad time and for all of us to join in mourning. It is a day of mourning and memories, and it is a day to pay tribute and give thanks certainly to the New York delegation for the wonderful venue they provided for us to mourn, commiserate, and they provided us a great memory for which we are all grateful.

With the resolution that we approved today in the Congress, we expressed our utmost appreciation to those brave and courageous young men and women in uniform who are fighting the battle to root out terrorism wherever it exists. Today we remember the victims of September 11. We also remember and pay tribute to Johnny Michael Spann, the CIA officer who in November became the first American killed in combat. We honored him earlier in this Congress with his family in the gallery. His name and the names of thousands of other Americans, too many Americans, are now etched as permanently in our history as they are in the minds of their families. As the poet laureate of the United States said in New York, too many names for even the walls of our hearts to contain.

For some of the families of the victims, the sound of a plane flying overhead fills them with fear. Indeed, the warning of any possible terrorist act intensifies their grief, and for them and for all Americans we must do everything in our power to reduce risk to the American people. Yet as we continue to grieve, we take pride in knowing that the unspeakable events of September 11 have brought Americans closer together than ever. The gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL) referenced that, as did the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE). We have joined together as a community, we rush to give blood, money, and volunteer time to become more patriotic, to appreciate our freedom.

Today's resolution honored all of those affected by September 11 from whom we have learned what it means to be a member of the American family. From our first responders, our firefighters, and police officers, we have learned to be an American is to be selfless, to put honor above personal safety and the lives of strangers above your own. From cell phone calls made from crumbling buildings, we learned that to be an American is to love family with a power and a force that transcends even death. From a group of passengers in a hijacked plane over Pennsylvania, we learned that to be an American is to be brave in the face of hopelessness and to do good for others while evil is being done to oneself. And from workers at the Pentagon who went to work that day and every day, we learned that to be an American is to love freedom and to show that love every day by serving our great country.

This morning we also went to the Pentagon, shared some sympathies with the families of those who lost their loved ones. One young man showed me the flag that was given to him in memory and honor of his father who perished that day. We also honored the hardhats who rebuilt the Pentagon so that here today on that 1-year anniversary we could visit a Pentagon that was restored, a sign of confidence and pride in our country.

With these lessons in mind, we can rest assured that the assault in our heart, the heart of our Nation, will only make it beat more strongly. That strength will allow us to triumph over terror militarily, and that strength will allow us to triumph over terror in spirit. We will cherish our freedoms now more than ever and recognize, as was said at the National Cathedral this morning, that there is a high cost to freedom.

We will draw our loved ones closer and reach out further toward peace with our adversaries.

With that, I would like to once again express gratitude to all who have helped us all grieve. I hope it is a comfort to those who lost their loved ones that so many people throughout the world, and indeed, intensely in our own country, share their grief and are praying for them at this sad time.

I would also like to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT) and our leader, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), for making it possible for us to travel to New York, because it was a place we had to visit. We went to the heart, to where our country began, to renew ourselves and to be ready for this very, very sad day, but in a spirit of renewal and pride in our great country. God bless America.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ENGEL).

Mr. ENGEL. The only thing I wanted to add, Mr. Speaker, was that the gentleman pointed out that so many people from New York City and the suburbs of New York lost their lives. Both Senators from New Jersey were there today at Ground Zero, and the Governor was; both Senators from New York, and the New York Governor was.

In my district in Rockland County and Westchester County, the suburbs of New York City, so many people lost their lives: firemen, policemen, and average citizens who went to work. So this is truly a regional feeling, and absolutely a national feeling; but of course, in the New York City metropolitan area, a regional feeling, as well. I thank the gentleman for mentioning that.

Mr. PALLONE. I thank the gentleman for adding that. He is right, that we can even go beyond that. My understanding, I hope I am not wrong, was that the plane that went down in Pennsylvania was actually headed for California, so there were probably some of the constituents from the district of the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

We know there were even foreign nationals that perished in the World Trade Center, so the tragedy was truly not only American in that there were so many people from all parts of the country, but even people from other parts of the world. This was something that happened not only to New York and New Jersey, but to the country and even to the world.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the article from the New York Times of September 9, 2002.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sept. 9, 2002]

EMERGING FROM COCOON OF GRIEF

(By Andrew Jacobs)

MIDDLETOWN, N.J., Sept. 6.—Even now, a year after her husband, Louis, disappeared at the World Trade Center, Barbara Minervino struggles with the competing pulls of rejoining the living or remaining curled up in the shelter of her cream yellow ranch home with its comforting memories and distracting mounds of 9/11-related paperwork.

A photographic shrine to her husband still dominates the living room and she refuses to touch the Yankee ticket stubs and the $15 he left on a nightstand the final evening of his life. But she is also increasingly drawn into the world, both by necessity, and in recent months, the realization that she can survive as a 54-year-old widow with limited skills. "It devastates me that I was able to live without Lou for the last year," she said, sitting in Redheads, a strip-mall restaurant where hundreds of mourners gathered last year after her husband's memorial service. "I didn't change a light bulb for 29 years. I didn't buy a bedspread without consulting him."

In contrast to the unrelieved grimness of the past months, there is now a hint of levity in her voice when she talks about the road ahead. "I still don't know where I'm going, but I feel like I'm a butterfly about to come out of the cocoon," she said. "With the grace that God gives me, I look forward to October and what my place is in the world."

Since losing 36 residents on Sept. 11, this centerless hodgepodge of look-alike ranch homes and waterfront estates has become a national symbol of devastating loss and communal caretaking. Over the past year, Vanity Fair, "Dateline NBC" and a score of newspapers discovered that tragedy had transformed this anonymous, disjointed suburb into a model of selfless do-goodism. Local volunteers distributed more than $700,000 in cash and services to the stricken families, and many neighbors, once strangers, delivered home-cooked meals to make sure no grieving survivor would have to cook during those first terrible months. Lawn services, mechanics and plumbers donated their time, ensuring that no one would have to worry about the mundane aspects of suburban living. In a way, this community has discovered itself in its grief. But as it crosses the first anniversary, Middletown, like Mrs. Minervino, is struggling with opposing impulses: the urge to move past the trauma of last September and the need to remember.

And while both impulses have enormous force, both the individuals and the town seem intent, finally, on moving on. "Some days, I just want a normal life like other women," said Kristen Breitweiser, who lost her husband, Ronald. "I want to go food shopping. I want to bake an apple pie. I don't want to be a 9/11 widow for the rest of my life." Of course, Sept. 11 this year will be more about looking back than looking forward. By 8:46 on Wednesday morning, when the bells begin to toll at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, the camera crews from MSNBC, CBS and Australian television will already be broadcasting live, showcasing this township's resilience in the face of excruciating loss. Shopping malls will fly their flags at half-staff, police officers will shroud their badges in black and residents will gather for commemorative events at a fishing pier, a half-dozen churches and the Middletown train station, where township officials will break ground on a four-acre park honoring the local residents who died.

"Not an hour goes by when you don't think about it," said the police chief, John Pollinger, choking on emotion as he pulled his car into a drive-through teller. "I think all of us here have been changed, changed forever."

But neither patriotism nor civic boosterism can stop the intrusions of daily life. Mounting job losses have taken a toll on many families. The battle over a proposed megamall, dormant in the first few months after the terror attacks, has reignited with more fury than before. And although a tentative contract agreement reached Thursday means schools opened without labor strife, there is lingering bitterness from an ugly strike in December that sent 228 instructors to jail. Since then, more than 100 teachers, about one-eighth of the district's total, have left the community for other jobs or early retirement. The district's embattled superintendent moved on as well. "There are deep and painful wounds that no glossing over, no platitudes, can undo," said the union's president, Diane Swaim, a middle school teacher who has lived here most of her life.

nightmarish year, they recognize that the unlimited benevolence cannot last forever. The meals stopped coming with the onset of summer, when many families went away on vacation, and several women said they have sensed a waning tolerance for outward displays of grief. "After a very long year, people expect us to move on, to get on, to try to live life," Mrs. Minervino said.

To many family members, moving forward remains painful. Brittany Chevalier, 16, who lost her 26-year-old brother, Swede, worries that school administrators and teachers will no longer make allowances for the days she is too distraught to come to school or too upset to complete an assignment. "They were understanding on the six-month anniversary, and they'll understand if I don't come to school on Sept. 11," she said, "but they'll start to think I'm being ridiculous when the year-and-a-half anniversary arrives. I guess I'm afraid people are just going to forget and that the world will just go back to normal."

But the pull toward moving on is the dominant impulse, even for the bereaved. During the past year, Patricia Wotton was so distracted by grief she became emotionally detached from her two children, Dorothea, nearly 3, and Rod, who is named for his father, who died a week before he was born. "It was too painful interacting with them," she said, "It reminded me of what I lost. Besides, I was so focused on breathing."

Over time, Dorothea began to act out aggressively, much of it directed at her fragile brother, who was born prematurely and spent his first month in intensive care. Last month, Dorothea's therapist warned that Ms. Wotton's inattention was compounding her daughter's trauma. It was those blunt words, Ms. Wotton said, that helped her cross an invisible line.

In a burst of activity, she opened her backyard swimming pool, planted some tomato plants in the garden that was once her husband's domain and started to talk baby talk to her son. She even visited ground zero, which helped her realize that her husband was really, truly gone. "I saw where the south tower was and finally understood he couldn't have survived such hatred," she said.

In an outgrowth of her newfound strength, she has begun a campaign aimed at winning extended health coverage from her husband's former employer, Fiduciary Trust, which plans to cut off all medical benefits in December. Last month she appeared with Diane Sawyer on ABC's "Primetime Thursday," and now other networks are clamoring for an appearance. "I have this big open wound, but it's starting to form a tiny scab," she said. "I still feel the pain, but I'm doing what my husband would have expected of me."

For Elaine Chevalier, Brittany's mother, the journey back to everyday life has been powered by the earthly distractions of work and the spiritual nourishment that comes from intense faith. Those first catatonic months have given way to busy days managing commercial real estate in and around Middletown. But Ms. Chevalier says her true salvation has been her church and its support group. The crystallizing moment came one night last year in a dream, which featured Swede, the angel Raphael and her son's yellow Labrador retriever, Holly, who had also just died. "I'm trying to heal by thinking about my son in a different way, trying to think of him as a spiritual being," she said, sitting in the family's soaring great room with Brittany by her side. "Sometimes it works, but sometimes it doesn't cut it."

As she crosses the one-year mark, Ms. Chevalier believes she is entering a new phase of her life, one marked by self-reliance. (She is also seeking a divorce from her husband of 30 years). "The community has been so wonderful to us," she said, "but people can't feel sorry for us and cater to us forever."

It has been a busy year for the dozens of volunteers who came together to spoil the grieving families of Middletown. Besides raising $200,000 in cash, the group, Favor, made sure every family received overflowing gift baskets to mark Thanksgiving, Christmas, the depths of winter and the beginning of summer.

In June, the group decided it had done its job, and announced that it would disband. Several of the organizers, who set aside work and the demands of family, said it was time to return to their former lives. But Favor will not be fading away any time soon. The renewed flood of news media attention that began in recent weeks has sparked a fresh round of philanthropy, including that of a Texas millionaire who has offered scholarships to the 61 children who lost a parent last September.

At the very least, Allyson Gilbert, the group's executive director, said she and others have decided to put together one more gift basket, something small and simple, perhaps a tray of home-baked cookies crowned by a teddy bear. The baskets, she said, will probably arrive a week or two after Sept. 11, when the commemorative events and televised anniversary specials are through.

"They don't need us to deliver these huge food baskets or big checks anymore," she said. "I think they just need a reminder that we're thinking about them, that we have not forgotten, and that we're not going to go away."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 464. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress on the anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001.

CONGRESS MUST CREATE SINGLE, UNIFIED AUTHORIZATION AND APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEES FOR NEW DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY TO BE SUCCESSFUL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLAKE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to reflect on the incidents of the past year and to discuss the next phase of our war against terrorism and our war for homeland security.

Mr. Speaker, 1 year ago on this day at 8:30 in the morning I was on the third floor of this building in the press gallery beginning a press conference with our colleagues from both sides of the aisle. We had assembled before the national media to call for support of a bill that I was introducing that day asking for an additional $6 billion of defense spending. That defense spending was to go specifically for readiness for our troops, for homeland security, and for the war against terrorism.

The first plane hit; the second plane hit. The media had to stop the press conference, and by 9 o'clock we realized that we were going to have to vacate the building. The Sergeant at Arms called for vacating the Capitol, and we began the orderly process of descending from the third floor of this building to the parking lot.

On the way out, I talked to our Sergeant at Arms. I said, What is happening? He said, There are at least two more planes in the air, and we feel one of them may be headed for the Capitol building. By the time we got to the parking lot and looked across Washington, off in the distance we could see the black smoke rising from the Pentagon.

There was total chaos on Capitol Hill that day, Mr. Speaker, because no one had anticipated that kind of action against us, in spite of the calls for America to be secure that had been made by many Members of this body on numerous occasions prior to 9-11.

We wandered on the Hill as they evacuated the office buildings, and moved down toward the Capitol Hill police station. Near the train station we would get our first briefing. About 120 of us got that briefing. I came back out and walked back toward the Capitol when my cell phone rang, and I got a call that was extremely disturbing and very emotional for me. I learned from my friends in the New York City Fire Department that one of my good friends was missing with the collapse of the two World Trade Center buildings.

See, what was so tragically emotional for me was that individual had taken me through the first World Trade Center bombing in 1993. As many of our colleagues know, Mr. Speaker, I would not be in this body were it not for my work in the fire service. Having grown up in a fire service family and becoming chief of my own local department, a fire instructor, and going back to school for a degree in that area, I have been identified with those brave individuals since I first came to this body 16 years ago.

So in my capacity as a Member of Congress and the founder of the Congressional Fire and Emergency Services Caucus for the past 16 years, I have made it my business to attend every disaster we have had, from the Murrah Building bombing in Oklahoma City to the wildlands fires in the West to Hurricane Andrew and Hugo in the South to the Mid Western floods to the Loma Prieta and Northridge earthquakes and

It was in 1993 when I went up as a guest of Commissioner Howard Safir that I first met a brave young firefighter in New York who would later become the chief of all special forces and rescue in that department. He and members of the New York City Fire Department took me through the bombed-out parking garage in the Trade Center in 1993, where I saw the terrible, horrible devastation caused by bin Laden the first time he hit America.

He and I became friends. We traveled around the country and spoke at many events together on the need to prepare for homeland security and our common defense. In fact, it was the suggestion of a commission that came from some of the recommendations he gave me that resulted in legislation I introduced 4 years ago to create a commission chaired by former Governor Jim Gilmore of Virginia called the Gilmore Commission.

My friend, Ray Downey, was a member of that commission. The Gilmore Commission's purpose was to make recommendations to the Congress and the White House about how we could better prepare for what none of us wanted to think about: the ultimate tragedy against our country. Four years ago, no one was thinking that could be a reality, but the Gilmore Commission in fact three times issued reports before 9-11 with specific recommendations that we in the Congress and the White House should follow.

Ray Downey was a member of that commission. Ray Downey was the incident command officer on the scene in New York at Ground Zero directing the bulk of those 343 firefighters who were killed as they went up into the stairwells of those buildings to bring people down. In fact, when I went to the Trade Center Ground Zero site 2 days later, not as a Member of Congress but as a member of the fire service, I spent the day with the New York City firefighters.

The day that I arrived, unfortunately, the tragedy was that Ray Downey's two sons, who were both New York City firefighters, one a captain and one a lieutenant, were looking for the remains of their dad. How terribly tragic it was to be asked by the firefighters union in the city to go back to the Javits Center to greet the families of those that were going to visit with President Bush that night, the families of those that were missing.

I did that, and I saw our President for 2½ hours meet privately with the families of those victims who were tragically taken in the course of the rescue, in the course of the firefighting, in response to the World Trade Center disaster.

Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor for two specific reasons. One is to first of all talk about the next phase of where we have to go. It is extremely important that this body understand that even though we passed the Homeland Security Act creating a new Federal department, and we did a good job in that process, and the gentleman from Texas (Speaker ARMEY) and our colleagues on the other side of the aisle are deserving of credit for the outstanding piece of legislation that we finished very early in the morning hours of August, the other body will shortly complete their version of that bill; and by the end of this month we will send to the President a piece of legislation that creates a brand-new large agency in fact consolidating 22 existing agencies with over 170,000 employees and a budget of nearly $40 billion.

This new agency is needed, and this new agency is absolutely essential if we are going to win the war on terrorism and if we are going to properly protect our homeland.

The four departments of this agency are critically vital to our Nation's security: the Border and Transportation Security Division, the Emergency Preparedness and Response Division, the Chemical, Biological, Radiological, and Nuclear Countermeasures Division, and the Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection Division.

This new cabinet agency I think is the right solution that the administration has proposed for America to be secure. But, Mr. Speaker, I come tonight to tell my colleagues that in my opinion the passage of this legislation and the signing of it into law by President Bush will only accomplish 40 percent of the solution.

Now, Members of Congress in both parties will pat themselves on the back; the President will sign the bill into law with a Rose Garden ceremony; and everyone will say, America should feel safe because we have created a new agency. This new agency will, for the first time, consolidate the efforts of 22 existing departments.

I come before my colleagues tonight to tell them that this agency cannot and will not succeed unless the Congress does its job. Mr. Speaker, I just mentioned that Congress completed their legislative work in the House and the other body is about to complete it, so what in fact am I talking about?

Mr. Speaker, as it currently stands, this new agency, with its new cabinet member director, will oversee 170,000 employees with a budget of nearly $40 billion. But here is the dilemma, Mr. Speaker: this agency will have to report to 88 separate committees and subcommittees of the House and the Senate. When we add in the intelligence committees and the other select committees, this new agency will have to answer to 90 separate committees and subcommittees of this body and the other body.

Mr. Speaker, this agency is doomed to failure unless this Congress does something that the leadership does not want to talk about. The reason I raise this tonight, Mr. Speaker, is to begin a process that I will continue for the rest of this year to call for the creation of one single authorization committee in the House, one single authorization committee in the Senate, one single Committee on Appropriations in the House, and one single Committee on Appropriations in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, if the Congress does not rise to the occasion and put aside our petty differences, put aside our jurisdictional concerns, and realize that this agency cannot succeed having to answer to 90 separate committees and subcommittees, then this Congress will not have done its job.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this will not be done by legislation because the committee structure is a part of the rules of the House, so I am asking our colleagues on both sides of the aisle to communicate with the leadership of both parties so that whoever wins control of the Congress in November understands that our new rules in January must create single, unified authorization and appropriation committees to give the proper support to this new agency that we will have just created.

Now, I realize there are committee chairs and subcommittee chairs that do not want to give up jurisdiction. In my case, Mr. Speaker, I am the chairman of one of the largest subcommittees on the Armed Forces in the House, the Subcommittee on Military Procurement.

My subcommittee, with its membership from both sides of the aisle, oversees approximately $100 billion a year of our defense budget. But, Mr. Speaker, I understand the need for us to have a quantified oversight function if the homeland security agency is going to succeed. I am willing to give up the jurisdiction that my subcommittee has and am willing to support giving up the jurisdiction of the full Committee on Armed Services to a new committee structure that will have the ability to coordinate the work of this new committee.

Now, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we all know there are committee chairs, ranking members, subcommittee chairs and ranking members in both bodies that are not going to be willing to give up their committee jurisdiction.

And if they prevail, I contend this agency will not be able to be successful. We cannot expect a new agency of this complexity with the challenges of information dominance, information assessment, transportation security, homeland response, first responders, research and testing for weapons of mass destruction and all the other activities that this agency will oversee, we cannot expect this agency to be successful if the Secretary of this agency, if the leaders of this agency have to come up to the Hill for the individual hearings and briefings that will be required by 90 committees and subcommittees of this body and the other body.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot overemphasize enough on this day 1 year after the attack on our country, the need for us to follow in the second phase of the battle for homeland security. As someone who has been involved on the Committee on Armed Services for 16 years, as someone who has been involved in homeland security ensuring the Congressional Fire and EMS Caucus and having founded it, the largest caucus in the Congress with 340 House and Senate members, with someone who has worked the issues of intelligence and data fusion and issues involving weapons of mass destruction, I am absolutely convinced, Mr. Speaker, the only way this new agency can succeed is if we rise above petty politics and if we rise above the parochial concerns each of us have with our own committees and subcommittees to give this new agency a chance to succeed.

The first few months of the existence of this agency, in fact, the first few years of the existence of this agency, are going to require organization, are going to require new structures, new budgets, new techniques, reaching out to deal with new challenges. The last thing this agency needs is to have 90 committees of this Congress calling them up to the Hill, getting them to come in and brief them on various aspects of what they are doing.

By setting up two new committees in the House, one authorization and one appropriations, two new committees in the Senate, one authorization and one appropriations, we will give our colleagues, and our steering committees will determine who those members are, we will give our colleagues the kind of jurisdictional control that will allow this new agency to succeed.

So, Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to challenge our colleagues, to do something that I know is not inherently and logically what Members would want to do. And that is to take the jurisdiction away from existing committees, both appropriations and authorization, and consolidate all of those efforts into the new committee structures that would oversee a coordinated agency.

Mr. Speaker, I will be sending a dear colleague letter to all of my colleagues. I have talked to our colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS) who will be working the other side of the aisle. I invite other Members of this body who feel as I do to join with us in calling on the leadership in both parties to begin the process to prepare for the makeup of the rules of the 108th Congress, for those that return, to make sure that in the new committee structures of this House and the Senate, the other body, is that this new committee structure be put into place.

If we take these steps now, if we lay the groundwork, then I am convinced this new agency has an absolutely outstanding opportunity to succeed. I would also encourage, Mr. Speaker, our colleagues and their constituents from around the country to weigh in with their representatives and let them know that the homeland security battle is only 40 percent complete when we established the new homeland security agency. The other 60 percent of that battle is in a consolidated committee structure that gives the jurisdictional control to a group of our colleagues in both bodies to coordinate, to have aggressive communication and to help provide the proper oversight of this new agency that we will, in fact, create by the end of this month.

Mr. Speaker, the second follow-on to homeland security involves the President's decision to move forward in an aggressive way against the weapons of mass destruction that Saddam Hussein has acquired in Iraq.

Mr. Speaker, I have been here 16 years. The toughest votes I have had to make are those votes we have taken that commit our sons and daughters, our brothers and sisters, our uncles and aunts to go into harm's way on behalf of this Nation. Because every time we do that we have casualties, we have injuries and we have loss of life. And all of our colleagues, as you know, Mr. Speaker, take this responsibility extremely seriously because they understand these are America's sons and daughters that we place in harm's way.

I am also concerned because in the last 10 years we have used our troops at a level that we have not seen in the past 100 years. From 1991 to 2000 our troops were deployed to 39 major involvements around the world from Haiti and Bosnia, from Kosovo and Macedonia, from Somalia and East Timor to Colombia and to numerous other destinations at home and abroad. Our troops are stretched. Our troops have been overworked, but this President has told us and will tell the world tomorrow at the U.N. that America has to continue this war against terrorism, and that includes dealing with Saddam Hussein in Iraq and the terrible capabilities that he, in fact, has acquired.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the President's request and call, I have questions and I have asked the administration and I am hopefully going to get all of the answers. Those questions are simple and they are: The absolute factual information about what technology Saddam Hussein has today in the area of weapons of mass destruction and how soon he will require more aggressive technology.

The second is what ties are there between Saddam Hussein's actions and his leadership and the al Qaeda, bin Laden network.

The third question relates to what kind of military action might we see. A surgical strike taking out Saddam and his upper guard or an all-out war as we saw in 1991 requiring massive commitments of our troops.

The fourth question involves the support of our allies. Not the public rhetoric that we hear, but the behind-the-scenes commitments, the behind-the-scenes private conversations between our President and our State Department and those nations that when we commit will have to support us.

The last question is what will be our exit strategy? What will happen when Saddam Hussein leaves? And I have no doubt that when we undertake such a mission we will be successful. But the key question for us to answer is who will follow Saddam Hussein? What organizational structure will be put into place? What role will the U.N. play, and what will be the response of our allies and the neighbors to Iraq?

The President is answering those five questions as we assemble today. In fact, yesterday before the Committee on Armed Services we had classified briefings with arms control inspectors from the U.N. who came before us and in private gave us a very candid assessment along with our intelligence community as to what capabilities Saddam Hussein has.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that every Member of this body and the other body ask the CIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency and the FBI and our other intelligence apparatus to come in and brief the member privately and confidentially on what we know about Saddam Hussein's capabilities.

Now, we know he has chemical weapons capabilities because he has used chemical weapons against his own citizens, the Kurds, in the past. We know he has been working on biological weapons capabilities and, in fact, we now know and this has been verified publicly, that he has this capability as well. In fact, he has strains of anthrax, small pox, botulism and other illness or other diseases of that type and organisms that can promote those types of diseases easy.

We know that Saddam has been working on nuclear capability, but it is not yet unclassified as to whether or not bin Laden has the capability to deliver a nuclear weapon. We are certainly aware he has missile technology because it was Saddam in 1991 who fired that low complexity scud missile into our barracks in Saudi Arabia that sent 28 young Americans home in body bags, half of them from my State, because we could not defend against that missile.

Mr. Speaker, the leadership in the White House is now offering Members of Congress the answers to the questions that I have posed. But, Mr.

Speaker, we must not be satisfied until we have taken every step possible to use every means possible to avert war.

Several of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle approached me this past week, colleagues who had traveled with me to Vienna when the war in Yugoslavia started several years ago. They came to me because at that time we were, with the support of our State Department, took a bipartisan delegation with 11 members of this body to Vienna to meet for two days with the leadership of the political factions in Russia. We were joined by a representative of Milosovic.

For two days we met with the State Department representative in the room with us. At the end of those two days, we hammered out the frame work which would 2 weeks later become the basis of the G-8 agreement which would end the war in Yugoslavia with Russian involvement.

So my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who went with us on that trip, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) who chairs the Progressive Caucus and others approached me and said, Perhaps we can do something similar again. I said, What are you talking about? He said, Perhaps we should join with our Russian friends and see what influence they can provide with us to convince Hussein that his time is up, that he can no longer run away from the requirements that were placed upon him by the nations of the world in six U.N. resolutions that were passed in 1991. Those U.N. resolutions were not adopted in this body, by America alone. Those U.N. resolutions were hammered out by the nations of the worlds with the support of the U.N. Security Council which means that Russia and China and the other nations in the Security Council were in agreement with those resolutions.

Those resolutions at that time call for Hussein to abide by certain conditions after the U.S. removed his military from the independent nation of Kuwait. One of the primary requirements of those resolutions was that Iraq had to open up its doors for independent U.N. inspectors to verify whether or not weapons of mass destruction were in fact being produced.

Initially there was some limited success. But as we heard yesterday in a public hearing with two of our leading arms control inspectors from the U.N., the cooperation by Iraq quickly ended. In their estimation there is no doubt in their minds that Saddam Hussein today has developed sophisticated chemical and biological weapon technology. And within a few short months if he is able to acquire the fissile material he needs, the weapons grade material he needs, he could have a nuclear bomb at his disposal.

Now, contrary to what another inspector has said who traveled to Iraq, these inspectors were emphatic. They provided evidence. And they have provided their firsthand experiences.

Mr. Speaker, we have to take action. Now, I am convinced that we have to at this time go to our friends in Russia who have reached out so aggressively to us and we have to ask and in fact in a polite way demand that they come with us as partners as they did with us back during the Yugoslavian or Kosovo war. We responded when the Russians came to us and asked me in particular as the co-chairman of the Duma Congress group with the Russian Duma and Federation Council to join them in finding a way to end that war and we did. And now I have challenged them after a response from our colleagues on the other side to work with us to make a case in Moscow and to President Putin that Saddam Hussein must comply with the orders of the world community or he will be dealt with by the U.S. led coalition.

Now, I have been in communication for the past several days with the leadership of the Russian Duma. I have told them that we would like to bring a delegation to Moscow as soon as they will agree to the terms that we have established. The bipartisan delegation that we will take to Moscow on a military aircraft would have discussions with the Russians about a joint statement, a joint statement of Russian and American legislatures demanding that Saddam Hussein do what is right in terms of the leadership of the world's communities established in 1991 through the U.N. resolutions.

In fact, it is my hope that when we arrive in Moscow at the invitation of our Duma friends we would also have a chance to meet face to face with President Putin, as I have done in the past, to deliver our feelings directly to him.

Why this focus on Russia? It is rather simple. Russia has become a new ally of ours. As our colleagues in this body know, I focus on Russia. It is of primary interest to me. I have traveled to that country 29 times, and I have a great many friends throughout Russian society, both elected and nonelected.

Russia has reached out to America, unlike many other countries in the world. It was President Putin who was the first foreign leader on September 11, 1 year ago, who telephoned President Bush and offered the support of the Russian people. It was President Putin and the Russian Government that opened the doors of their intelligence agency to share what intelligence they had on al Qaeda. It was President Putin and the Russian military that opened former Soviet military bases in Uzbekistan, which I took a delegation to visit in May, where our troops are today stationed, fighting the war against terrorism.

Russia has made a fundamental decision to join with America and the West in the 21st century, but Russia also maintains significant ties to Iraq. Iraq has relied on Russia in the past for technology, for the sale of legitimate military technology that can be sold in the marketplace. Russia also has just signed a $40 billion long-term energy deal with the Iraqi oil industry. Mr. Speaker, it does not take a rocket scientist to figure out Russia has ties with Iraq that are deep, that are both political and economic.

We have new ties with Russia. We have become Russia's friend, and we spend approximately $1 billion a year of the U.S. taxpayer dollars on programs to stabilize Russia, the cooperative threat reduction program, programs through the Department of Commerce, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of State, environmental programs, education programs, initiatives involving all aspects of Russian society.

In fact, it was this Congress that 2 years ago created a brand-new program called Open World, funded through the Librarian of Congress, Jim Billington and his office. Each year we bring over thousands of Russian leaders to spend up to 10 days in our local towns and cities understanding the strength of the American system.

Mr. Speaker, we have an opportunity here in this next phase of the war on terrorism. That opportunity I think requires us to call in our chips with Russia.

I am prepared, Mr. Speaker, to take time off from this body with our colleagues to go to Moscow to meet with our Russian colleagues from all factions, the Communist, Udinstyo, Yabloko, even Zhrionovsky's faction, to come together on a common agenda as civilized human beings as new partners and friends to tell President Putin that we need him to make the personal case to Saddam that the world will not tolerate the kind of buildup of weapons of mass destruction technology that he has built up over the past 10 years.

If Saddam refuses our request for unconditional visits, unconditional visits, not where Saddam can know 24 hours in advance where our inspectors are going, not where Saddam can predetermine what sites we are going to visit, unconditional visits, not by the U.S. but by U.N. and world-sanctioned inspectors, hundreds of inspectors, then Saddam has to understand that America will take the action required and requested by our President.

I have my doubts, Mr. Speaker, that Saddam will accept such a request; but as a Member of Congress responsible for the lives of my constituents who wear the uniform, I will not be happy unless I use every possible opportunity that I have to try to find a way to avoid the ultimate conflict. I think joining together, Democrats and Republicans, liberals and conservatives, joining with members of the Udinstyo, Yabloko, Union of Right Forces and all the other factions in the Russian political sphere, that we can find a common agenda that follows on and expands the U.N. resolutions passed in 1991.

What a dramatic statement it will be if Russian leaders and American leaders, George Bush supported by President Putin joined together, and tell Saddam Hussein the game's up, you have been doing for 10 years what you agreed not to do in 1992, not because the U.S. demanded it, but because the U.N. passed resolutions demanding that you adhere to the requirements of the civilized nations of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that in following through on this request we would give the President the kind of support that he needs during this difficult time. All of us will be listening intently tomorrow as the President makes a key address before the United Nations, as he lays out factually the evidence that we have as to Saddam's efforts and the potential use of that technology against our Nation, our people, our friends and other nations with weapons of mass destruction.

This is a key and fundamental part of the war against terrorism. If we allow Saddam Hussein and Iraq to go unchecked, it is only a matter of time before we will face the threat that would be caused by the weapons that he has produced.

Mr. Speaker, in our hearing yesterday, we questioned the inspectors from the U.N. about the possible effects on American and other lives if smallpox were used as a weapon of mass destruction. At our hearing yesterday, in a public format, they admitted that Saddam Hussein today has smallpox capability. The question asked by our colleagues on the committee was, What would be the potential impact on America if smallpox were used here or at one of our installations? They really could not give a solid answer.

When it came time for my questioning, I made reference to a war game, a simulation that our military funded in May of 2001 at Andrews Air Force Base. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues know, war games are held to simulate the worst possible conditions that could face our country. This war game was conducted by the Army and by CSIS, the Centers for Strategic and International Studies, headed by Dr. John Hammer, former deputy Secretary of Defense.

What was the war game? The war game was called Dark Winter. What was the simulation? The simulation was a deliberate outbreak of smallpox in three cities in just three States of America. It was a very credible exercise. Former Senator Sam Nunn played the role of the President. Former CIA Director Jim Woolsey played the role of the CIA director and former top officials from both administrations of both parties played the role of our leadership.

What was the outcome? A single case of anthrax was given and put forward quietly in Pennsylvania, Alabama, and Arkansas, one case in each State. Within 2 weeks, Mr. Speaker, 2 million Americans were afflicted with smallpox, 2 million Americans. As my colleagues know, we have no smallpox vaccine. It is one of the reasons why the Secretary of Health and Human Services, Tommy Thompson, asked for the money we gave him to purchase 350 million vaccines.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, as bad as the World Trade incident was a year ago, as bad as the attack on the Pentagon was a year ago, as bad as the plane going down in Pennsylvania was a year ago, the next incident could be much worse. Saddam Hussein has continued to build these terrible weapons of mass destruction that both the U.S. and Russia are now destroying.

We must come together as an institution and find ways to support the next phase of our battle for homeland security. That means we have to pass in the next rules for the next session of Congress a unified oversight structure for authorization and appropriation of dollars in the House and the Senate for this new agency, and it means that we must hold accountable our new Russian friends to help put maximum pressure on Hussein; and if that fails, then we must be prepared to support our President in his effort to rid the world of the kind of sources of terrorism that can destroy mankind.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the Chair and the staff for staying.

Washington, DC, September 5, 2002.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2896. An act to enhance the operation of the AMBER Alert communications network in order to facilitate the recovery of abducted children, to provide for enhanced notification on highways of alerts and information on such children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary; in addition to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure for a period to be subsequently determined by the Speaker, in each case for consideration of such provisions as fall within the jurisdiction of the committee concerned.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. Trandahl, Clerk of the House, reported and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 3287. An act to redesignate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 900 Brentwood Road, NE., in Washington, DC., as the "Joseph Curseen, Jr. and Thomas Morris, Jr. Processing and Distribution Center."

H.R. 3917. An act to authorize a national memorial to commemorate the passengers and crew of Flight 93 who, on September 11, 2001, courageously gave their lives thereby thwarting a planned attack on our Nation's Capitol, and for other purposes.

H.R. 5207. An act to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 6101 West Old Shakopee Road in Bloomington, Minnesota, as the "Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 55 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, September 12, 2002, at 10 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 8 of rule XII, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

9031. A letter from the Director, Office of Management and Budget, transmitting a proposed modification to the FY 2003 budget request for the Department of Defense; to the Committee on Appropriations.

9032. A letter from the Assistant Secretary, Department of Education, transmitting a notice of extension of project period and waiver, and reopening of competition for American Samoa: career resource network state grants, pursuant to 20 U.S.C. 1232(f); to the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

9033. A letter from the Secretary, Department of Labor, transmitting the Department's report entitled, "Saving for a Lifetime: Advancing Generational Prosperity"; to the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

9038. A letter from the Assistant Secretary for Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting certification of a proposed license for the export of defense articles or defense services sold commercially under a contract to India [Transmittal No. DTC 129-02], pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 2776(c); to the Committee on International Relations.

9041. A letter from the Assistant Legal Adviser for Treaty Affairs, Department of State, transmitting copies of international agreements, other than treaties, entered into by the United States, pursuant to 1 U.S.C. 112b(a); to the Committee on International Relations.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

MARIJUANA MISINFORMATION

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House a recent editorial by John P. Walters, the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

Writing in the San Francisco Chronicle on September 1, 2002, Director Walters commented on the widespread campaign of misinformation being waged on the issue of medical marijuana by those who favor drug legalization. Far from being a harmless drug with potential medicinal use, John Walters argues that the marijuana available to teenagers today is far stronger than that consumed by the Woodstock generation.

But rather than presenting a united front against the dangers of this drug, the debate over medicinal use is only sowing confusion among parents and adolescents alike. Meanwhile, emergency room admissions and treatment enrollments involving teenagers for marijuana use is rising sharply. In recent years, drug overdoses have overtaken homicides as the leading causes of death among teenagers.

Regrettably, many in the media have bought into the "compassionate" argument that severely ill people need the option of smoking marijuana to alleviate their symptoms. While running counter to common sense, this argument has been strong enough to support ballot initiatives in several States.

Adolescent use of marijuana is a serious problem with widespread ramifications. There needs to be more voices like Director Walters entering the debate to counteract the misguided, harmful, and misleading arguments being fostered and presented by groups preying on people's compassion as a way to open the door for wholesale drug legalization.

For review by my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, I request that Director Walters' editorial be inserted in full at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

MARIJUANA TODAY—SETTING THE RECORD STRAIGHT

(By John P. Walters)

The public debate over marijuana has been plagued by difficulties, not the least of which is a lack of accurate information. Any policy debate that draws activists promoting their cause is likely to suffer from confusion. But the debate over marijuana has been further muddled by careless or gullible media reports. Too often, journalists are fed misleading advocacy information that they swallow whole.

For instance, one columnist recently charged that worry about the increased potency of today's marijuana is wildly overstated. In fact, he calls such claims "whoppers," because the active ingredient THC (tetrahydrocannabinol) "has only doubled to 4.2 percent from about 2 percent from 1980 to 1997."

No wonder the public has trouble getting a clear picture. His source for this information is the Marijuana Policy Project, a group of marijuana legalizers relying on a study that covers just those years. Unfortunately, the columnist did not check his facts with the Drug Enforcement Administration, which monitors scientific studies of marijuana.

What does the DEA analysis show? In 1974, the average THC content of marijuana was less than 1 percent. But by 1999, potency averaged 7 percent. Further, unlike the old "ditchweed" and bulk marijuana of the past, there are now far more powerful products to entice youth. The THC of today's sinsemilla averages 14 percent and ranges as high as 30 percent.

Even stronger stuff is on the way. The point is that the potency of available marijuana has not merely "doubled," but increased as much as 30 times.

Some advocates argued that this increased potency is actually good news, because kids will simply use less. But the data don't support that interpretation. The number of tons of marijuana sold in America is increasing, not decreasing. The number of people seeking medical treatment for marijuana abuse is increasing rapidly, not decreasing. In fact, the number of adolescent marijuana admissions increased 260 percent between 1992 and 1999.

The stakes in this debate are high, especially for young people. So widespread is marijuana in today's schools that nearly half of all high school seniors report having tried it by graduation, while a smaller but still alarming number report using it every month—even everyday. This is a drug that, after all, produces withdrawal symptoms, is associated with learning and memory disturbances and produces behavioral problems for those who become dependent.

It's time to face facts: Today's marijuana is a more dangerous drug than the pot of the Woodstock era. It creates tolerance (you need increasing doses to achieve the same effect), and at high doses it induces paranoia or even violence.

The haze of misinformation grows even thicker when it comes to the issue of "medical" marijuana. On the face of it, the idea that desperately sick people could be helped by smoking an intoxicating weed seems unlikely, even medieval. It is, in fact, absurd.

Smoking marijuana, even if it weren't psychotropic, hardly seems healthy. The threat of lung damage, not to mention exposure to carcinogens and more toxins than those found in tobacco smoke, increases with every "hit." But no less than the New York Times editorialized recently in support of medical marijuana. Amazingly, the paper termed it "life-saving" and claimed it represented "mainstream medical opinion."

Who have they been listening to? Perhaps the source was the same Marijuana Policy Project, which paid for a full-page ad in the Times on March 6, 2000. The MPP claimed scientific support for medical marijuana from the prestigious National Academy of Sciences, whose Institute of Medicine, MPP claimed, "urged the federal government to give seriously ill people immediate access to medical marijuana on a case-by-case basis."

But nowhere in the IOM report can you find this "urging." Quite the contrary: the IOM throws cold water on smoked-marijuana enthusiasts, stating clearly, "Marijuana is not a modern medicine."

Does the IOM regard marijuana as a helpful "medicine" for the afflicted? Not at all. "In no way," the researchers continued, "do we wish to suggest that patients should, under any circumstances, medicate themselves with marijuana." In fact, they state that any experimental subjects must be notified that they are using "a harmful drug delivery system," adding that short-term experiments might be conducted only after the "documented failure of all approved medicines" and only under strict medical supervision.

But while the IOM wishes to study the ingredients in marijuana, the purpose of these clinical trials (now being conducted through the University of California at San Diego) is not to investigate the potential medical benefit of smoking the stuff. As the researchers put it, their purpose "would not be to develop marijuana as a licensed drug."

These facts place us far away from efforts to justify the distribution of marijuana cigarettes through cannabis buyers clubs. Real and lasting damage can follow "experimentation" with marijuana, as reflected in the fact that marijuana abuse is today the major reason for young people to seek drug treatment.

Yet, listening to some in the media you are still likely to hear that marijuana "isn't such a big deal," and that even the National Academy of Sciences endorses it "for medicinal purposes." Now you know better.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO AMANDA DAVIO AND ST. MARTHA CATHOLIC SCHOOL

HON. MIKE ROGERS

OF MICHIGAN

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Amanda Davio and her classmates at St. Martha Catholic School in Okemos, Michigan, for their special efforts to thank the thousands of volunteers and emergency workers who responded to the September 11, 2001, attacks on the World Trade Center in New York City and the Pentagon here in Washington, D.C.

Last year, soon after those tragic attacks, I asked children throughout Michigan's 8th Congressional District to write letters and cards to the military men and women who were preparing for the war against terrorism. St. Martha students responded to that request along with hundreds of other students. Several of the schools, like St. Martha and Amanda Davio's kindergarten class, also sent along letters and cards for the workers at the attack sites.

These were forwarded to the Red Cross and eventually Amanda's card made it into the hands of New York City Police Officer Steve Tarricone. Officer Tarricone contacted the school, eventually traveled there to meet the students, especially Amanda, whose greeting has inspired him at a time when his spirits were very low.

Since then, the Davio family has visited New York and the two families have become good friends, developing a special bond born out of the shared experience of dealing with the aftermath of the tragedy of September 11, 2001.

The remarkable story of this new friendship is best told in the words of Amanda's father, Christopher Davio who wrote:

With the approach of the anniversary of the tragic events of September 11, 2001, I'd like to relate an uplifting side to the story and how, out of such horrific happenings; blessings and new relationships can grow.

Shortly after 09/11/01, U.S. Representative MIKE ROGERS sent out a request to the school children of his district to write cards and letters to the rescue workers at Ground Zero, the Pentagon and in Pennsylvania. My daughters' school, St. Martha Catholic School in Okemos, like I'm sure many other schools in the area, answered the call and each class composed cards, which were delivered to Mr. ROGERS for forwarding to the workers.

The cards followed a circuitous route and my daughter Amanda Davio's (age 5 and in Kindergarten at the time) card ended up posted in a Red Cross tent at the Staten Island Landfill, along with hundreds of other cards and notes. There in early March of this year, the construction paper card caught the eye of an NYPD officer, Steven Tarricone. The card, with a 5 year old's rendition of the American Flag and the words "Thank You" on the cover had a simple but profound message inside, "You Make Me Feel Proud." Officer Tarricone saw that the card, signed Amanda Davio, was stamped with the school's name and address on the back and wishing to express his gratitude for the support and comfort that the card and all the other cards and notes had given him, placed it in his pocket and took it home.

Steve showed the card to his wife and his partner. He had to put in long days and was drawing extra shifts while the city still struggled with the aftermath of the devastating attack. After a few weeks, he put together a package and sent it to the St. Martha School. Inside the package was a thank you card in which he wrote a little about himself and his job. He described the day he found Amanda's card, he was assigned to the Staten Island Landfill and as he said, "My job for the day was to sift through the debris to try to find anything that would bring closure to the family members of victims of the World Trade Center." He thanked Amanda, her classmates and the staff at St. Martha School for their support and for taking the time out of their day to thank all the rescue workers. Steve included in the package five pictures he took on the days immediately following the disaster and took the time to describe on the back of each picture what was shown. He also sent along an NYPD cap, arm patch and ID cards with the request that they be given to Amanda.

Mrs. Helen Hillman, Principal of St. Martha, related to me how moved she was as she opened the package and after discussing the contents with other staff members, Amanda's teacher, Kara Lampke, suggested she present the items to Amanda at the upcoming spring program that the school children were to perform the next week. When next she saw me at the school, Mrs. Hillman told me to be sure and have my camera ready at the end of the program as Amanda was going to be presented with something. Being the proud parents that we are, my wife and I videoed and photographed throughout the show and when the time came for Mrs. Hillman to present the items and relate the story, sat there stunned by the thoughtfulness of Steve's reply. For him to express his gratitude in such a way and to know that someone took the time to show all the children how important their support was to the workers and victims of September 11 was one of the most significant events in my life.

A few days later, Officer Tarricone called the school to see if they had received the package and talked to Mrs. Hillman at length about what the cards had meant to him and other workers at the sites. He said he was amazed at the outpouring of support shown by the entire country and was moved by the fact that Amanda's card had come from a kindergarten from halfway across the country.

My wife and I began to put together a few things to send back to Officer Tarricone and his family and after videoing greetings from Amanda and her sister Angela (8) and Alissa (14), included the tape of the presentation and the school program along with other cards, photos and expressions of thanks.

When Steve got that package, he called to share his excitement with us and told "in the past 24 hours, I've watched the tape at least 25 times." He had shown it to his mother and sister and they were all so happy about our reaction to his reply.

We kept in contact over the next few weeks and Steve told us that he had gone to the Policemen's Benevolent Association for permission to have Amanda named an Honorary NYPD Officer. After receiving permission, he had a plaque made and sent it along with more photos, commemorative pins and the arm patches from each of the units of the NYPD to Amanda.

In the meantime, Mrs. Hillman called our local papers and news outlets and a story was run on the front page of the Community News as well as a news segment on WLAJ which was aired as a local connection to the official closing of the clean up effort at Ground Zero.

Since then, Mrs. Hillman has traveled to New York on a trip that she had planned long before all this developed. Steve met her at the airport with a red rose and welcomed her and her family. He arranged a visit to police headquarters and Ground Zero for all of them.

We took our family to New York at the end of August to meet Steve and his family (wife Michelle and daughter Ashley). Upon our arrival at a nearby hotel Wednesday, August 28, we called Steve and he immediately came to meet us. Greeting him for the first time was like seeing a close family member after a long absence. Amanda ran into his arms and the smiles lit up the whole lobby of the hotel. Steve took us to his house and we met Michelle and Ashley. Steve had a shirt made for Amanda in the style of his uniform, complete with her name and honorary badge number as well as NYPD arm patches and badge insignia.

We saw Steve again the next day at his house and met with a reporter and photographer from the Long Island Catholic, a diocese newspaper who had heard of the story from one of their staffers with family here in Okemos. After visiting with the representatives from the paper, we did a little touring locally then went to dinner with Steve and his family.

On Friday, Steve and Michelle met us at our hotel and took us into Manhattan. He had arranged a tour similar to the one given to Mrs. Hillman on her trip earlier in the month. We got to lower Manhattan about an hour before our appointment at One Police Plaza and while driving near Ground Zero, saw a fire station at the corner of Water and Wall Streets. Steve asked us to wait in the car while he went in and talked to the firemen on duty. The firemen, after hearing the story from Steve, welcomed us into the station, gave us a tour of the fire trucks and equipment and posed for pictures with the girls in fire suits and helmets. We paid our respects to the fallen members of the station at a memorial on the sidewalk in front of the firehouse, thanked the two firemen for the tour and their welcome, and went on to our appointment at Police Headquarters.

Pulling up to One Police Plaza was like entering a military post. Concrete barriers are placed so that only one vehicle can enter or leave the lot at a time and a large sanitation truck blocks the opening, pulling away to allow access after getting clearance from the guard post, then moving back to block the entrance. Security was tight! Upon entering the building, we passed through metal detectors and were photographed and given passes to wear on our outermost clothing.

We were all escorted to the Division of Community Affairs where we met Detective John Rowen and his daughter Ashleen. Detective Rowen took us to a conference room where we also met Detective Eugene Canapi. Gene had heard the story and came in on his day off to show us a presentation that the department had put together as a historical documentary on the events of September 11, 2001. Both men expressed their welcomes to us and told us how much the cards and letters from across the nation had meant to them. John said that of all the cards he had seen, it never occurred to him to answer back and he was glad that Steve had shown such thoughtfulness to reply to Amanda.

After the presentation, reporters from the New York Post and Newsday interviewed us and took photos of Steve and Amanda in their "uniforms!" We met Deputy Commissioner Patrick (Division of Community Affairs) and were greeted and treated like VIP's by everyone.

Detective Rowen and his daughter took us all down to the waterfront near Battery Park where we boarded a Police Harbor Patrol boat and were given a tour of the area from the water. We rode under the Brooklyn Bridge, out to Ellis Island and the Statue of Liberty. I'm not usually an emotionally demonstrative person but I had tears in my eyes when I saw the Statue. It was my first visit to New York City and had never seen it before. I remember thinking back to 9/11/01 and hearing the threats made to her after the horrible attacks. I was sure at that time that I'd never see it in person and was truly overcome at seeing her from the boat. I imagine that is how my ancestors felt coming over from Italy at the turn of the last century.

While on the Harbor Patrol boat, I talked with one of the officers that made up the crew of three. He had no idea who we were and when I told him the story he told me how glad he was that Steve had replied in the way that he had. He described the events of that day and how they ferried survivors and rescue workers to the site and told me how much they all appreciated the support shown by the rest of the country after the attack. He said that the Red Cross had given him a box of cookies sent by some school children from New Jersey and that he still kept the note that they had enclosed in his wallet, nearly a year afterwards.

After the harbor tour, we returned to One Police Plaza and were told that Police Commissioner Ray Kelly would like to meet Amanda. We were absolutely floored! Steve was really nervous as we waited to be escorted into the Commissioner's office, as he had never met him before either. Detective Rowen remarked that he doubted that many officers with Steve's experience (he's been on the force for seven years) had been invited to meet the Commissioner in his office. Commissioner Kelly greeted us warmly and posed for pictures with Amanda and Steve and a group photo with all of us. He gave us a brief tour of his office and explained that his desk was Teddy Roosevelt's from his tour as Commissioner in the late 1800's.

After leaving the Commissioner's office, Detective Rowen took us to see Ground Zero. After seeing it so often in news coverage, it was an uncanny feeling to actually be at the site. I said a quiet prayer for the victims and listened while Detective Rowen related his memories from the day of the attack. He was at the command center when the first plane hit and was helping victims at the foot of the buildings when the first tower fell. There is a brief shot of him running up the street in one of the CNN videos as the cloud of debris follows behind. He said it was like a wall of water, he ducked into a side street and the wave of dirt followed him around the corner. A nearby visitor asked what it was like to be surrounded by the smoke and he said it wasn't smoke, it was more like dirt and fine particles of concrete dust that followed him and eventually covered him like so many of the photos we all saw from the news that day.

The site now looks more like a construction site and an individual happening along on it today would probably wonder what was going to be built there. The sides of the hole go straight down for probably five or six stories and you can see each level of the sub-structure of the underground areas across the way. We could see where the subway tunnel was going north from the site. For someone who had never seen the World Trade Center, it was hard to imagine just how tall it was. Standing at Ground Zero now, you are surrounded by skyscrapers, the tallest of which is 54 stories. I tried to explain to my daughters that if they took that building and placed another one just like it on top that would have been about the same height as the 110 stories of the Twin Towers. Many of the buildings still show damage from the attack and collapse of WTC. Still the clean up has been a heroic effort in and of itself.

My family thanked Detective Rowen as we left and my middle daughter, Angela (8) exchanged e-mail addresses with Ashleen planning to stay in contact. As we drove back to Long Island we all were just amazed at the events of the day. Reflecting on the tragedy of last year and remembering the expressions of welcome and gratitude from each and every person we met.

When we had first discussed going to New York City to meet Steve and his family, he had told us that when we got there he was going to throw a big party. As the plans for the trip grew, we found out that his daughter Ashley's second birthday (September 1) would be celebrated on Saturday, August 31 and that he was having his whole family over. We picked that weekend to go so that we could meet all of them and make sure that they knew just how special we thought that Steve and Michelle were. Saturday dawned with a story in the New York Post about Amanda and Steve and how a small thank you card and its magnificent reply reached halfway across the country to bring them together. As we arrived at Steve and Michelle's, we were welcomed by all of their family and friends as a new part of the family. Steve's mother Linda had gifts for each of our girls, as did his Aunt Val & Uncle Len. We got to meet his partner and other friends from the force. About halfway through the party, we all heard the sound of bagpipes tuning up. Steve had told me that there was another surprise coming and as he called us all to the patio, he announced his Lieutenant and other members of the Emerald Society, NYPD's pipe and drum corps. They gave a short concert for all of us in honor of Ashley's birthday and Amanda's visit. Once again the emotions overflowed to hear the patriotic medleys and other songs from the bagpipes and drum. It was a great way to cap off another extraordinary day.

Our last full day in New York was spent touring the city like normal visitors. We left Steven and his family to give them a chance to spend Ashley's birthday alone while we went to the observation deck of the Empire State Building, drove down Broadway and explored Manhattan by ourselves. For visitors coming to New York for the first time, you're struck by the size of all the buildings, the number of people and you quickly come to see that there is no place like it in the country. I've had the privilege of visiting 46 of the 48 contiguous United States as well as Hawaii and Puerto Rico. Truly New York City has no equal.

After having dinner with Steve, Michelle, Ashley, and Steve's sister Lisa's family, we headed back to our hotel and the next morning left for home. Our trip to New York City was way more memorable than we could ever have imagined. It gave my children an experience that they will never forget. Steve and his family are in the process of planning a trip here for a visit to St. Martha School in early November. We are all looking forward to seeing them again. The police officers and firefighters of New York showed the rest of the nation that heroes arise from adversity. My family has been fortunate to meet one of those heroes and to get to know him as a good friend. People like Steve Tarricone are around us every day, and sometimes the small gestures, like a thank you card sent by a kindergartener can bring them into our lives. The next time your child comes home from school and says that they sent cards to someone, be it at a local nursing home, or to the President of the United States, I hope that you will recognize the importance of those messages to all who see them.

Mr. Speaker, Christopher Davio is right. Small gifts of kindness can have immeasurable benefits. Today, we wish to extend our appreciation to Amanda Davio and her family, Officer Steve Tarricone and his family and colleagues, and all the students from the 8th District who helped our nation begin its recovery. I now ask that our colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives join us in recognizing this remarkable American story.

TRIBUTE TO THE HEROES OF THE 14TH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the extraordinary women and men of the distinguished 14th Congressional District for their heroic responses to the tragic events of a year ago.

On the first anniversary of the attacks on our nation, we reaffirm our commitment to the ideals that have made the United States of America the greatest nation on earth. We have grieved for our lost loved ones, and now we continue the work of a freedom-loving nation. We take pride in and are in awe of what the American people have done in response to the attack on our nation. They have been brave, and generous and the entire world has witnessed the strength and the decency of our people. Americans respond with open, brave and generous hands and hearts to those who are in need.

Mr. Speaker, the 14th Congressional District lost two extraordinary people, Naomi Solomon and Andrew Garcia, who enriched the lives of everyone they knew and loved.

I ask my colleagues to join me in once again offering our deepest sympathy and that of our entire nation to the Solomon and Garcia families.

This nation had many heroes on September 11, 2001. We all know of the supreme sacrifice made by so many firefighters, police officers and others in their response to the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. We know of the heroism of those on the hijacked planes who prevented even more calamitous attacks on our nation's Capitol. We've learned about the heroism of people all over our country who pitched in to give service to others.

Mr. Speaker, it is with a great sense of honor and pride that I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to all who have emerged from the tragedies of that fateful day to embody what it means to be true American Heroes by giving so much of their time, talents and resources to heal the wounds of September 11, 2001. There are too many individuals, organizations and companies to name each separately, but I'd like to honor in our Nation's Record a few examples of some of the many people of the 14th Congressional District who rose to the occasion in extraordinarily generous ways:

The Town of Woodside Firefighters—held a "Fill the Boot" fundraiser on Sept 30th for the New York Fire 9-11 Relief Fund.

YWCA and the Mountain View City Human Relations Commission—held a "Building Community, Understanding and Respect" forum and dialogue in response to Sept. 11th.

The Menlo Park Community Chorus and the Foothill Orchestra—organized a program of patriotic and inspirational music on Dec. 15th which benefited the "victims and heroes" of Sept. 11th.

Banks, Financial Institutions and Credit Unions including San Mateo Credit Union and Stanford Credit Union—maintained and kept open their financial networks for their customers despite the resulting chaos of the attacks; and organized fundraising campaigns among their employees and customers to benefit the families affected by Sept. 11th.

Gallery Europa in Palo Alto owners Louise Ericson and David Himmelberger organized a special exhibit in which the sale proceeds were donated to families of victims of Sept. 11th.

Hyland Hogan and Lane Lees of the Half Moon Bay Fire District—following September 11th, they boarded a plane and were adopted by NYFD Ladder Company 3 where they helped the company after it lost 12 of its members and assisted the families of lost firefighters. In May, the district presented the New York Company with a memorial hand-made case holding an ax recovered by one of the firefighters and pictures of the 12 who perished.

All the teachers and school administrators (like Jill Ballard and Sherry Fulton who teach American Literature and Studies at Half Moon Bay High School)—who changed their curricula and schedules to help students understand and cope with the events of September 11th.

Law enforcement agencies and organizations like the Santa Clara County Sheriff's Office and the San Mateo County Deputy Sheriff's Association—set up funds to help the families of police officers killed in the Sept. 11th attacks.

California Task Force 3 Urban Search and Rescue—deployed local firefighters and other task force members to New York to assist at ground zero.

The Children of the Payvand Cultural School of Cupertino, an Iranian Community Based School—filmed a special video after 9/11 to spread the message of tolerance and peace. The video is named Hand in Hand and it was sent to President Bush.

Local Media—reporters like Mark Simon and Tom Abate with the San Francisco Chronicle, Loretta Green, Leigh Weimers and Jim Puzanghera with the San Jose Mercury News, Don Kazak, Palo Alto Weekly, Dave Price with the Palo Alto Daily reporters from The Almanac, Half Moon Bay Review/Pescadero Pebble, San Mateo County Times, Redwood City Independent, Los Altos Town Crier, Mountain View Voice, Silicon Valley Business Journal, Gentry, San Jose Magazine, Sunnyvale Sun, Cupertino Courier all provided critical information, told our collective stories, shared our thoughts and helped to underscore a message of hope and tolerance.

Silicon Valley Companies and Businesses—Silicon Valley companies came together with their employees immediately after 9/11 to raise millions of dollars for charitable organizations. Many of the contributions made by companies were matched by employees, which brought aid to the affected families including those of firefighters and police officers. The senior executives at Sun Microsystems raised $1 million and the company matched dollar per dollar all employee contributions. That effort raised an additional $500,000. Sun Microsystems, like many Silicon Valley companies also participated in Ebay's Auction for America, donating over $1.3 million worth of products. Hewlett-Packard employees gave $1 million to support relief efforts. HP itself contributed $2 million, and matched its employees' gifts with another $1 million. In addition, HP like many other Silicon Valley companies, donated equipment to assist in the September 11 relief efforts. Companies like National Semiconductor not only made monetary contributions but also organized employee blood drives. Paypal, through their members helped raise $2.35 million for the National Disaster Relief Fund of the American Red Cross. Cadence, under the leadership of CEO Ray Bingham, raised over $1.6 million in contributions to the American Red Cross and to the New York Firefighters' 9-11 Disaster Relief Fund. Cadence and its employees also held a special flag raising ceremony commemorating the tragic events of 9-11. Apple too went above and beyond to assist the victims. In addition to financial contributions to the Red Cross, Apple donated iBooks to the children of the rescue workers who lost their lives in the line of duty. These are but a few examples of the many contributions made by the employers and employees of the 14th Congressional District.

CHUMS—Children United Morally and Spiritually—designed an interfaith holiday card which they sold and donated the proceeds to victims of 9/11.

VA Palo Alto National Center for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (NCPTSD) staff including Director Fred Gusman, Gregory Leskin, Robyn Walsen, Sherry Riney, and Ken Drescher who traveled to the Pentagon to provide the Department of Defense guidance and assistance for the psychological response efforts following 9/11.

The men and women of the California Highway Patrol—whose continuing vigilance helps ensure the safety of our bridges, airports, and other infrastructure.

The members of the Reserves and California National Guard who have been mobilized and their families—many of these dedicated individuals have taken deep pay cuts and will endure long separations from their families to prosecute the war on terror.

Palo Alto Medical Foundation and Stanford University (particularly Eric Weiss MD and Lou Saksen)—formed a Bioterrorism Preparedness Group to respond immediately and appropriately to any suspected cases of bioterrorism.

USPS—dealt with the aftermath of the Anthrax attacks and continued to provide excellent service by delivering mail and keeping their offices open to the public.

American Red Cross Palo Alto Area Chapter Deployed September 11th Volunteers: The Chapter was second in the State of California for percentage of response based on chapter population and serves 250,000 people in Palo Alto, Mountain View, Los Altos, Los Altos Hills, at Stanford University and Moffett Federal Airfield. The following Red Cross-trained volunteers and staff were deployed for assignments which lasted up to three weeks at a time following the September 11 attacks:

Ginny Anderson, WTC New Jersey, Disaster Mental Health
 Vinnie Biberdorf, WTC New Jersey, Local Chapter Liaison
 Ruth Anderson, WTC New York, Disaster Mental Health
 Judy Boore, WTC New York, Disaster Mental Health
 Rita Castro-Hawkins, WTC New York, Voluntary Agency Liaison
 Don DeJongh, WTC New York, Family Services
 Miriam DeJongh, WTC New York, Family Services
 Ted Easley, WTC New York, Staffing for Disaster Services
 Paige Filomeo, WTC New York, Disaster Mental Health
 Adriana Flores, WTC New York, Disaster Volunteers
 Lynne McCreight, WTC New York, Records and Reports
 Edwin Ou, WTC New York, Logistics
 Laura Quilici, WTC New York, Disaster Mental Health
 Peggy Rogers, WTC New York, Disaster Mental Health
 Richard Wing, WTC New York, Disaster Mental Health
 Ann Ziman, WTC FMA Center, Family Services
 Geoff Ziman, WTC FMA Center, Family Services
 Karen Duncan, WTC NHQ Support, Public Affairs

American Red Cross Palo Alto Chapter (locally): Palo Alto Area Red Cross Chapter led by Executive Director Patricia J. Bubenik, staff members and volunteers assisted four local families with issues related to the September 11 disaster, including counseling the family of a victim of the Pennsylvania air crash. Mental health disaster volunteers went to schools, PTAs, and church groups requesting help in the aftermath. Volunteers delivered materials to schools to assist with the conversations with children, teachers and parents.

The chapter staff also processed a total of $1,168,737 in donations designated for the National Red Cross (between September 11, 2001 and June 30, 2002).

At the same time, the Chapter continued to respond to an increased interest in first aid and CPR classes and trained an increased number of disaster service volunteers who came in response to the September 11 tragedies. They also registered and placed an unprecedented number of volunteers who wanted to be of service within the community.

 TRADE CENTER VICTIM DAVID SCOTT SUAREZ

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with you excerpts from a story that World Trade Center victim David Scott Suarez wrote about two hiking trips he had taken several years apart, and a poem he wrote about climbing as a metaphor for life and for freedom. David writes about freedom, both in terms of the struggle to attain it and the unparalleled joy of having it. In a sense, David's story reminds us that freedom is not free. It requires hard work and undaunting perseverance. Freedom can only be attained when people work, together with others, exerting all of the collective strength of the unified group, to ascend its peak. One could interpret David's story to say that freedom is not even a choice, but rather a requirement for the realization of human potential, and that freedom should be our example to the world that we shout from the mountaintops.

David's parents, Ted and Carol Suarez, have so far had his poem translated into over 90 languages, including three of the major languages spoken in Afghanistan. They offer their son's story and poem in hopes that they will show all of the people of the world how much they have in common, so that we will always choose to communicate with each other rather than fight, and so that their son's death and the death of so many others on September 11 will not have been in vain. The following are excerpts from "Return to Freedom", by David Suarez.

My legs burned. My heart pounded. A bead of sweat ran down my forehead to the tip of my nose. I wiped it off with the back of my dirty arm just before it dripped to the ground. The air was cool and the wind grew fiercer the higher into the atmosphere we climbed. It froze sweat to my skin and blew my hair every which way, occasionally stinging my eyes. I looked up past Bob, who was directly in front of me, but I could not see our destination. The peak was covered in clouds. . . . Hail pelted my raincoat. The trail we'd been hiking quickly turned to a swiftly flowing stream. The sky lit up. Thunder cracked simultaneously. I began to hear the slow cracking of, not thunder but wood. We all turned abruptly. A tree fell across the path 50 yards behind us, its top shattered and smoking.

Only nine miles to go, but the weather showed no signs of letting up. At night we were going to make camp on top of Mount Philip at 11,711 feet. . . . It was thirteen miles away and a strenuous climb from where we broke camp in the morning. Unfortunately, that day was worse than any other had been. Like myself, the other guys in the expedition were pretty melancholy. . . . All I could think about was the 40 pound pack and the ice covered ground that kept me from moving forward with any sort of speed. . . . It continued to storm.

I trudged on. Stepping one foot in front of the other. . . . If I'd had a choice I'd have stopped, but there was no choice. Stopping meant hypothermia, which was worse than walking. Hours later, we reached the top. My hands were red. The tips of my fingers were almost white; they were completely numb. The clouds were so thick I couldn't see more than a few feet ahead. Everyone else was in the same condition, some worse. . . . There were fourteen of us, only six were able to pitch tents. . . . We pitched one after another. I thought each one along the way would be my last. Finally we finished and everyone was safe. Then, miraculously, the moment our tent was ready for sleep the clouds blew away and the warm sun came out. . . .

That was it, I was the last man standing. I was so excited I started to run to the peak. . . . I reached it minutes later. . . . I leaned back against the flagpole that stood higher than everything else. A smile of contentment crossed my face. I shut my eyes and fell asleep to the sound of the American Flag snapping in the wind. I was free.

Three thousand miles and five years later I was feeling the same thing. Freedom, what a strong word it is. Millions of people had died in its name. Do people fully understand and appreciate this single word? Do I? A month earlier I sat out on the lawn under the shade of a tall oak attending my Asian philosophy class. After class I walked past a preacher yelling that all of my peers (and myself) were doomed to hell. I walked further and saw a stand with pictures of marijuana leaves all around, apparently fighting for its legality. I sat down and watched a couple walk past hand in hand and smiling. It was July 3. The impact of what was occurring before me hit me like a blow. I was living the dream that so many had died for. I belonged to a select group of people that could enjoy life as it should be enjoyed. In day to day life I often didn't realize that. . . . My mind and my talents marked the limits of where I could go. No one else dictated them.

Those thoughts reentered my mind as I climbed to the top of Sugarbush Mountain in central Maine. Climbing became a metaphor for life. We were almost at the top and the wind was blowing fiercely. We had entered the clouds and couldn't see a thing. At one point I opened my jacket and leaned into the wind. It supported my weight for awhile. Together we reached the top. We raised our hands and screamed loudly for the world to hear. We'd conquered this mountain. Although the steep slopes tried to keep us down, they couldn't. Although our lives threatened to trap us in dull routine, we escaped. We were in charge of our destinies, only us. For a moment the clouds cleared. It seemed as if we could see the entire world at once. In silence we watched. We were free.

YOU ARE FREE

(By David S. Suarez)

The air is cool, the sky is dark, your muscles relax, while nature's breath fills your lungs

You have accomplished your tasks, felt the pain, and endured the pressure, a pressure so immense that you lived to escape

You have climbed to the very peak of the mountain and now relax on a rock, high above the trees while others sleep

You are enveloped by nature's beauty for just a moment you abandon your incarcerated body wholly relinquishing your ties to human nature and for only an instant, you become part of God you are free

VIOLENCE PREVENTION WEEK

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the community of Brownsville, Texas, for reminding our children about the values we uphold with "Violence Prevention Week" as the new school year begins.

Our school years now begin with concerns over not just grades and class assignments, but also the threat of gun violence. This reality confronts students and educational professionals each day they enter the classroom.

Here in Texas, we understand that promoting a safe and non-violent community begins at home, where life's first and most important lessons are learned. The logic that dictates that gun violence is driven by the mere existence of guns is inherently flawed. The dramatic increase in school violence during the last decade, without any correlating increase in gun purchases, is a testament to this.

Rather, there must be a community effort to ensure the safety of our schools and its students. The community of Brownsville understands this and teaches responsible gun use, while also promoting tolerance and understanding of others. With support from religious and civic organizations, Brownsville offers young people positive role models so today's students can become tomorrow's leaders.

Recognizing that it is our individual communities that set the example everyday for our young people, we should teach responsibility, emphasize faith, and offer age-appropriate entertainment and examples of proper behavior to our children. It is our duty to lead our children to the right path; then it is their duty to follow that path.

With this in mind, Brownsville is working to reduce school violence by planning "Violence

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Prevention Week," sponsored by the Brownsville Independent School District, the local law enforcement agencies, the Brownsville Chamber of Commerce, area civic organizations, and the local church community.

Events for the week include: a student essay contest about the challenge of school violence, the "Violence Prevention Fair" at a local mall, and assembly programs and speakers for middle and high school students about the issues facing young people today.

Our honored guest for this special event will be Dave Roeber, a Vietnam veteran who has an intimate understanding of the daily challenges faced by young people of the 21st Century.

I ask my colleagues to join me in commending the community of Brownsville, Texas, for their efforts to work together to reduce gun violence and build a stronger and safer community.

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

Friday, July 26, 2002

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 5005) to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes:

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the United States House of Representatives representing New York City, I am deeply aware of the profound responsibility that was thrust upon this government last September 11th. It is our responsibility, our most important responsibility, to keep the American people safe from terrorism and violence. We were not prepared last fall. We should never be caught unprepared again.

Addressing this, on June 6, 2002, President Bush called for the creation of a permanent, cabinet-level department of homeland security. Even before the President's announcement, we as a nation have been struggling to figure out new ways to improve the nation's safety.

Throughout the debate about the creation of this new department, I have been skeptical that this may just be an exercise in moving boxes around on an organization chart. After examining the bill and listening to my colleagues both on the floor today and during the Government Reform Committee hearings and markup, I believe that H.R. 5005 should be passed by the House.

As you know, H.R. 5005, the Homeland Security Act of 2002, establishes a Department of Homeland Security as an executive department of the United States headed by a Secretary of Homeland Security who shall be appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate. The legislation consolidated 22 federal agencies into one new Department responsible for intelligence analysis and dissemination, science and technology, border and transportation security, and emergency preparedness and response. The new department will also have an office of civil rights and liberties, critical to ensuring that the government does not overstep its boundaries. I am hopeful that this legislation will provide the framework for law enforcement, intelligence, health, and other first-line agencies to work together to defend our great nation.

I am disappointed that H.R. 5005 does not include an amendment that I crafted that passed unanimously in the Government Reform Committee. Learned from past lessons, the amendment fixed current problems in our response system and would have allowed future sites of attacks to cut through red tape and bureaucracy and receive disaster relief right away.

I am very concerned that the final product includes troubling provisions that weaken civil service protections for the new Department's employees, undermine Freedom of Information Act compliance, and disregard the need for accountability for corporations that contract with the agency. I strongly encourage the Senate to correct these flaws.

During this time in American history, we public servants must accept the responsibility before us. The President of the United States has said a Department of Homeland Security is necessary to improve our nation's security. I agree with him.

We have to do everything we can to prevent a tragedy like 9/11. We have to make sure we can respond as quickly as possible to future attacks. I hope and pray this new department will do this. I hope and pray we can avoid what my great city has had to live through.

Because of these lessons learned, I urge my colleagues to vote yes on final passage.

INDIAN INTELLIGENCE PROMOTING TERRORISM IN U.S., WORLDWIDE—INFILTRATES ORGANIZATIONS, CREATES TERRORIST INCIDENTS

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, a recent intelligence report states that there are 25,000 agents of the Indian government's "Research and Analysis Wing" (RAW) outside India. While there is nothing wrong with legitimate intelligence work, RAW habitually infiltrates organizations of minority groups and creates terrorist incidents in order to discredit these groups.

The Indian government has recently been declared a violator of religious freedom by the United States government. On January 2, columnist Tony Blankley reported in the Washington Times that India is sponsoring cross-border terrorism in the Pakistani province of Sindh. This comes at a time when President Musharraf of Pakistan is actively helping us in the war against terrorism, at substantial risk to himself personally and politically.

The organizations Babbar Khalsa International (BKI) and the International Sikh Youth Federation (ISYF) have been identified by the U.S. government as "terrorist organizations." The ISYF has been banned in Canada. These organizations have been heavily infiltrated by the Indian government, to the point that they are government-controlled organizations. They have spawned other organizations designed to embarrass the Sikhs, especially those in the Khalistan freedom movement, and blame them for terrorism.

The Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) is another organization that our government has labelled "terrorist." Yet journalist Tavleen Singh of India Today, India's leading newsmagazine, reported that the Indian government itself created the LTTE and put up its leaders at the most upscale hotel in Delhi. If LTTE is a terrorist organization, then India created its terrorism.

In November 1994, the Indian newspaper Hitavada reported that the Indian government paid the governor of Punjab, the late Surendra Nath, the equivalent of $1.5 billion to foment terrorist activity in Punjab, Khalistan, and in neighboring Kashmir. In a country where half the population lives below the international poverty line, the supposedly democratic government could afford to lay out one and a half billion dollars to create state-sponsored terrorism. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I don't understand how that could happen in a democracy.

Also in 1994, our own State Department reported that the Indian government paid out more than 41,000 cash bounties to police officers for killing Sikhs. One of them killed a three-year-old boy and received a bounty for that! A report from the Human Rights Wing showed that at least 25,000 Sikhs were arrested, tortured, murdered, and cremated, then their bodies were declared "unidentified" and cremated. Two reports, one from the International Human Rights Organization (IHRO) and the other jointly issued by the Movement Against State Repression (MASR) and the Punjab Human Rights Organization (PHRO), showed that Indian forces carried out the massacre of 35 Sikhs in Chithisinghpura in Kashmir in March 2000.

In the excellent book Soft Target, journalists Brian McAndrew of the Toronto Star and Zuhair Kashmeri of the Toronto Globe and Mail prove that the Indian government itself carried out the bombing of an Air India airliner in 1985, killing 329 people, then blamed the Sikhs. There is too much good information in this book to quote here, but I would like to quote one statement from the Canadian State Investigative Service which appears in the book: "If you really want to clear the incidents quickly, take vans down to the Indian High Commission and the consulates in Toronto and Vancouver, load everybody up and take them down for questioning. We know it and they know it that they are involved."

Mr. Speaker, this ongoing pattern of terrorism against its neighbors and against the minority peoples living within its borders shows that India's claim to be a secular democracy and an opponent of terrorism is a lie. India should be declared a terrorist state and subjected to appropriate penalties. These should include a cutoff of U.S. aid to India until the terrorism stops and human rights are fully enjoyed by all people within the country. And we should declare our support for the freedom movements seeking their freedom from India. By doing these things, we will advance the fight against terrorism in the world and help all people to enjoy the basic democratic right of self-determination.

As former Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said, "the essence of democracy is the right to self-determination." It is time for real democracy in India rather than a continued campaign of terrorism.

IN HONOR OF RONALD MACK

HON. SAXBY CHAMBLISS

OF GEORGIA

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, heroes come in many shapes and sizes. Over the past 11 months we have celebrated the lives of many heroes. We have paid tribute to firemen, policemen, public officials, businessmen, among many others. Their common thread is the selfless desire to improve the world around them.

Today I rise to recognize and pay tribute to one of my district's great heroes who spent his life on the political lines, digging deep into the business of Georgia law-making to tell the story, Mr. Ronald Mack Woodgeard, former Editor of the Macon Telegraph in Macon, Georgia.

Ron was known throughout the state, especially in Macon, for his fair and balanced journalism. He had a knack for taking a story into the future, not just by giving a play by play description of events, but by taking the analysis a step further to uncover not only the facts but look past the facts to explain what they mean.

A friend of the community, Ron earned and kept the trust of his neighbors, his co-workers, and public figures, including the subjects of his reports. Many view the role of news reporter to be "watchdog" but this reporter was not one out for cold blood, looking to exploit a person or a situation for the "scoop". He sincerely believed in educating people to improve the community and society as a whole. Through his leadership, the Macon Telegraph was known for representing all sides of its readership—there was always something for everyone on the editorial page.

Ron was a dedicated worker and a good friend of mine, but I call him a hero not only for his years of dedicated service of bringing the news home to south Georgia, but for doing his job while waging a ten year war against a rare form of cancer. Co-workers at the Telegraph remember Ron for pressing on without complaint. Pressing on for Ron meant getting the story while enduring more than 15 major and minor surgeries, three rounds of chemotherapy, and four courses of radiation. To survive ten years of this type of treatment and still get the job done takes iron will. Sadly, this invisible assailant overcame our soldier and took his life Monday, September 9, 2002.

Other professional hats of the Editor include college instructor, military policeman for the Army during Viet Nam, private investigator, and after completing trade school, a welder. But his most important job was father of two sons.

Ron Woodgeard believed in people and they believed in him. I believed in him, and I will miss him. My wife Julianne and I extend our deepest sympathy to his family, and join with them in celebrating the memory of one of Georgia's journalistic heroes. His legacy will live on through the millions of lives he touched.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO WANDA

OF COLORADO

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding individual who has selflessly contributed her time and energy towards the betterment of her community and her nation. Wanda Sothen, of Durango, Colorado, has donated countless hours to aid the people of Durango and its surrounding communities following this wildfire season. She has been a true inspiration to her friends, family, and community and it is with pleasure that I applaud her efforts before this body of Congress and this nation.

When wildfires ravaged Colorado and the devastation proved too widespread for the Red Cross and other aid organizations to care for the specific needs of the 1,700 households displaced by the 70,000 acre Missionary Ridge fire, Wanda stepped up to meet the challenge. Recognizing that her friends and neighbors needed more than just the basics of food and shelter, Wanda founded Helping Hands, a relief organization based out of Durango. Starting with only a telephone and a stack of index cards at a desk in the local mall, Wanda carefully put together every piece of relief she could find.

Wanda learned quickly that many residents needed help, and many also had something to give, the problem was trying to bring everyone together. After the creation of Helping Hands neighbors began to donate items such as candles, clothing, food, school supplies, along with professional veterinarian services for local animals. Wanda's understanding of community needs extended beyond the ordinary, as animals from the size of goldfish to horses found help or homes through her organization. Her untiring spirit of charity continues to bless the lives of those affected by the fire as she continues to turn each donation into a gift of relief.

Mr. Speaker, I stand today to pay tribute to Wanda Sothen, a true community activist, before this body of Congress and this nation. Her diligence in bringing her community together in the face of crisis, by creating and running Helping Hands, has made her an inspiration to us all. She truly stands as an example of American values and civic virtue and deserves our praise.

A PROCLAMATION HONORING MR.

THE CRANBURY LIONS CLUB
MARKS SEPTEMBER 11

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, Wednesday, September 11, 2002 marks the 1st anniversary of the heinous attack on the United States of America by terrorists. On Saturday, September 14, 2002, the Cranbury Lions Club will remember the heroic actions on September 11th of a Cranbury, New Jersey resident, Mr. Todd Beamer, with the dedication of a memorial in the township's Heritage Park. Mr. Beamer was aboard Flight 93 on September 11, 2001 when it was hijacked by terrorists and crashed in Western Pennsylvania.

The memorial honors the uncommon service of Todd Beamer and his fellow Flight 93 passengers whose selfless act of courage saved countless lives and helped reunite our Country. It also provides a permanent symbol to underscore the invaluable role of all citizens in protecting our unalienable rights of Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness.

The Todd Beamer Memorial contains two symbols of strength, a boulder and an oak tree. On the boulder is a plaque that reads:

"LET'S ROLL"

These are the memorable words spoken by Todd Beamer, a Cranbury resident, who was aboard United Flight 93, when it was hijacked by terrorists on September 11, 2001, as he joined with his fellow passengers in a final act of resistance, sacrificing their lives to save countless others.

A man described as ordinary to the world, extraordinary to his family, he shall forever be remembered for his uncommon act of bravery. This memorial celebrates the faith and heroism of Todd Beamer—husband, father, son, brother, friend, civilian—an American.

Americans have read or heard about the heroic actions of Todd Beamer, and will always remember his simple, inspiring words: "Let's Roll". As we memorialize his actions and words, it is equally important that we reflect on the life of Todd Beamer.

A native of Illinois, Mr. Beamer was born in Glen Ellyn, the middle child of David and Peggy Beamer, and spent his young adulthood in this suburb of Chicago. He was raised in a caring environment where value was placed on family, hard work, strength of character, and faith in God. In high school, he starred in soccer, basketball and baseball, serving as a team captain. Mr. Beamer continued to excel in athletics at Wheaton College where he earned a degree in business in 1991. He was later awarded an MBA from DePaul University.

In 1993, Mr. Beamer married Lisa Brosious, and they moved to Central New Jersey, soon settling in Cranbury to start their family. His prior success in athletics and academics was mirrored in his professional pursuits on behalf of Oracle Corporation.

Mr. Beamer's faith and commitment to his church was always evident. He was a member of the Princeton Alliance Church in Plainsboro. He served as a Sunday school teacher, participated on the Church softball team, and mentored young adults.

Admired and loved by family, friends, and colleagues, the legacy of Todd Beamer will be his unwavering commitment to serving God and his fellow man. On behalf of all Americans, we extend our deepest gratitude to Todd Beamer's parents, David and Peggy; his wife, Lisa; his three children, David, Drew, and Morgan; and his two sisters, Melissa and Michelle.

Todd Beamer was a special man who made the supreme sacrifice for his country, and left a lasting mark on the people whom he touched. The Todd M. Beamer Foundation will ensure that his selfless act of giving to others in need continues in the future. He will be remembered by all.

TRIBUTE TO LIEUTENANT
GENERAL ROY E. BEAUCHAMP

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, one of our nation's great patriots, Lieutenant General Roy E. Beauchamp, is retiring after 37 years of exemplary active military service in the United States Army. He served his country with dignity, honor, courage, and integrity.

General Beauchamp concludes his illustrious career as the Deputy Commanding General, U.S. Army Materiel Command from May 2001 to October 2002, and is retiring as the senior Ordnance officer in the Army. During this period, General Beauchamp also served as the Army's Executive Director for Conventional Ammunition, Single Manager for Conventional Ammunition.

General Beauchamp has been at the forefront of the AMC Strategic Plan, integrating technology, acquisition, and logistics to ensure the readiness and capability of today's U.S. Army. He is the strategic and operational developer of the Army's Logistics Modernization Program and a significant contributor to Single Stock Fund implementation throughout the Army, a huge endeavor that is saving countless millions of dollars for the Army and the nation by reducing inventory requirements worldwide. He is truly committed to the Army Transformation and continues to market the need and direction of logistics transformation at every opportunity.

General Beauchamp is a world-class logistician with an unprecedented understanding of logistics at every level—tactical, operational, and strategic—and is undoubtedly the Army's most experienced and knowledgeable wholesale logistics expert. He has served our nation brilliantly and selflessly in numerous logistics assignments throughout his career. From September 1999 to November 2000, he served as the Director of Logistics and Security Assistance, J-4/J-7 at the United States Central Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Florida. He was the Commanding General of the U.S. Army Tank-Automotive and Armaments Command, Warren, Michigan from June 1997 to September 1999.

Other assignments included: Special Assistant to the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics, the Commander of the Defense Industrial Supply Center, Philadelphia, and the Commander of the 2nd Support Battalion, 3rd Infantry Division, and Germany. During Operation Desert Shield/Desert Storm, General Beauchamp was the Commander of the 101st Corps Support Group, 101st Airborne Division. During this tour of duty, his actions in combat were exemplary, ensuring the deep penetration of ground and air elements of the 101st Air Assault Division in leading General Schwarzkopf's famed "Left Hook" strategic envelopment of Iraqi forces. General Beauchamp's prior assignments include three tours with the United States Army Europe and one tour with the United States Forces Korea.

General Beauchamp is a native of Florida and a graduate of the University of Nebraska at Omaha. In 1965, General Beauchamp enlisted in the U.S. Army and later was commissioned as a 2nd Lieutenant in 1967. He earned a Master of Business Administration from the University of Dayton and a Master of Arts Degree in Public Administration from Central Michigan University. General Beauchamp is also a graduate of the Industrial College of the Armed Forces.

General Beauchamp's military decorations include: the Defense Distinguished Service Medal, the Distinguished Service Medal, the Defense Superior Service Medal, the Legion of Merit with 4 Oak Leaf Clusters, the Bronze Star Medal, and the Meritorious Service Medal with 5 Oak Leaf Clusters.

Throughout his career, his lovely wife Olivia has loyally supported him, providing loving support through 31 moves all over the world. She, too, epitomizes devotion to country and the Army, having volunteered countless hundreds of hours at each of her husband's assignments. On numerous occasions she has served in positions of responsibility and leadership in the local family support group infrastructure, working hard to ensure the very best for our military family members.

Mr. Speaker, Lieutenant General Beauchamp deserves the thanks and praise of a grateful nation that he faithfully served for so long. I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing him, Olivia, their son Joshua, daughter-in-law Bridget, and lovely grandchildren Riley and Maggie, all the best in the years ahead.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, on Sept 9 and 10, 2002, I missed rollcall votes No. 375, No. 376, No. 377, No. 378, No. 379, No. 380, No. 381, No. 382, and No. 383.

Had I been present I would have voted "yea" on these 9 rollcall votes.

RELEASE OVER 52,000 SIKH POLITICAL PRISONERS, STOP ITS REPRESSION AND TERRORISM

HON. EDOLPHUS TOWNS

OF NEW YORK

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, on August 12, Indian Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee will meet with President Bush. The next day he will speak at the United Nations in New York. I am sure he will be preaching the principles of democracy and human rights, things that we all support. However, Mr. Vajpayee would have much more credibility on these issues if India lived by the principles it preaches.

Unfortunately, India is only a democracy for the upper-caste Brahmins. For minorities, it is a repressive state with little freedom. According to the Movement Against State Repression, India admitted to holding 52,268 political prisoners under the repressive, expired TADA law.

Recently, it was reported in the Hindu newspaper that the violence in Gujarat this spring killed over 5,000 Muslims. According to published reports, the government orchestrated the violence and ordered police not to stop it. This is typical of India's pattern of repression against minorities.

The Indian government has murdered over 250,000 Sikhs since 1984, over 200,000 Christians in Nagaland since 1947, more than 85,000 Kashmiri Muslims since 1988, and thousands of other minorities. Over 50,000 Sikhs have been made to "disappear." The Washington Times reported that India admitted that its forces committed the March 2000 massacre of 35 Sikhs in Chithisinghpura.

The former majority leader of the Senate, George Mitchell, has said that "the essence of democracy is the right to self-determination." Yet India has never kept its promise to the UN in 1948 that it would hold a plebiscite in Kashmir. India refuses to do the democratic thing and allow the people of Nagaland, Khalistan, and the other nations seeking their freedom from Indian rule. Multinational states like India, the Soviet Union, Austria-Hungary, and others are doomed to eventual collapse.

India is a practitioner of terrorism, as an excellent article by Tim Phares at NewsMax.com entitled "The Terrorism of the Indian Government" demonstrates. The Washington Times reported on January 2 that India sponsors cross-border terrorism in Sindh, a province of Pakistan. Journalist Tavleen Singh reported in India's leading news magazine, India Today, that India itself created the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), which the U.S. government has called a "terrorist organization." It paid the late governor of Punjab, Surendra Nath, $1.5 billion to foment covert state terrorist activity in Kashmir and in Punjab, Khalistan, according to the Indian newspaper Hitavada. India has recently made deals to provide materials to Iraq. When we are fighting a war on terrorism, "the world's largest democracy" is practicing and supporting it.

Mr. Speaker, we must do something to stop these activities. I hope that President Bush and Secretary General Annan will press Mr. Vajpayee on the issues of political prisoners, violence against minorities, and terrorism. The U.S. government also has other actions at its disposal. It is time to impose sanctions on India and cut off its aid and trade. And the U.S. Congress should go on record in support of self-determination for Khalistan, Kashmir, Nagaland, and the other nations seeking their freedom in South Asia.

I would like to insert the article "The Terrorism of the Indian Government" into the RECORD at this time.

THE TERRORISM OF THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT
(By Tim Phares)

The South Asian subcontinent has been called the most dangerous place in the world, and events there over the past few months seem to confirm this description. While the danger of war seems to have passed for now, India and Pakistan remain on alert and both countries continued to point nuclear-capable missiles at each other. Unfortunately, tensions remain high as each side tries to gain an advantage over the other. Pakistan and minorities within India's borders charge that India is seeking hegemony in the South Asian subcontinent. Certainly is deployment of new missiles that can reach deep into Pakistan and its tests that began the nuclear escalation in the region suggest that this may be true.

At the recent Asian security conference in Kazakhstan, India refused to talk with the Pakistanis about Kashmir. In 1948, India promised to hold a plebiscite on the status of Kashmir, but it has never been held. Recently, the BBC reported that Iraq and India have signed an agreement to boost trade ties, especially in the oil sector. This comes at a time when the United States may be preparing to fight Iraq again. Unfortunately, this is consistent with India's pattern of behavior.

India now tries to create the impression that it supports the United States, but its long record says otherwise. The May 18, 1999, issue of the Indian Express reported that George Fernandes, the defense minister, organized and led a meeting with the ambassadors from Red China, Cuba, Russia, Yugoslavia, Libya and Iraq to discuss setting up a security alliance "to stop the U.S."

India had a long-term friendship with the former Soviet Union and supported its invasion of Afghanistan, yet it has shown little support for the United States in its war on terrorism. On Jan. 2, Tony Blankley wrote in the Washington Times that India is sponsoring cross-border terrorism in the Pakistani province of Sindh. Journalist Tavleen Singh has reported in India's leading news magazine, India Today, that the Indian government created the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), which the U.S. government has identified as a "terrorist organization."

The government also has taken quiet, implicit control of two Sikh organizations, Babbar Khalsa International and the International Sikh Youth Federation, which the United States also has designated as "terrorist organizations."

India's implicit support for terrorist activity is consistent with its internal behavior. It has a record of repressing minorities that undermines its proclamation of democratic values.

The violence this spring in Gujarat, in which over 5,000 people were killed, according to The Hindu newspaper, has also heightened tensions. Muslims and other minorities charge that the violence was stirred up by the government to diminish Muslims in India.

In addition, the pro-Fascist Rashtriya Swayamsewak Sangh (RSS), the parent organization of the ruling BJP, has recently called for the majority-Muslim state of Kashmir to be divided into three states, despite India's 1948 pledge to the United Nations that it would let the people of Kashmir decide their fate in a plebiscite. The majority-Sikh state of Punjab, Khalistan, the predominantly Christian state of Nagaland, and several other states also have strong, active movements seeking their independence.

Human rights organizations report that more than 200,000 Christians in Nagaland have been killed by the Indian government. The book "The Politics of Genocide," by Inderjit Singh Jaijee, cites figures from the Punjab State Magistracy showing that over 50,000 Sikhs have been murdered by the Indian government since it invaded the Sikhs' holiest shrine, the Golden Temple, in June 1984.

In addition, according to a report by the Movement Against State Repression (MASR), the Indian government admitted to holding 52,268 Sikhs as political prisoners under the repressive, expired TADA law. According to Amnesty International, tens of thousands of other minorities are also being held.

In February, a bipartisan coalition of 42 members of the U.S. House of Representatives, led by Reps. Dan Burton, R-Ind., and Edolphus Towns, D-N.Y., wrote to President Bush urging him to work for the release of these political prisoners.

In 1994, the U.S. State Department reported that the Indian government paid out over 41,000 cash bounties to police officers for killing members of the Sikh minority. In the same year, the Indian newspaper Hitavada reported that the Indian government paid the late governor of Punjab, Surendra Nath, the equivalent of $1.5 billion to foment terrorist activity in Punjab and Kashmir. According to human rights groups, Indian forces have killed over 80,000 Muslims in Kashmir and thousands of other minorities, including Dalit "untouchables," Tamils and others.

MASR also co-sponsored with the Punjab Human Rights Organization an investigation of the March 2000 massacre of 35 Sikhs in Chithisinghpura. It concluded that Indian forces carried out the massacre. A separate investigation conducted by the International Human Rights Organization came to the same conclusion. Retired General Narinder Singh has said that "Punjab is a police state."

The book "Soft Target," written by Canadian journalists Zuhair Kashmiri of the Toronto Globe and Mail and Brian McAndrew of the Toronto Star, shows that India blew up its own airliner in 1985, killing 329 people, apparently in order to blame Sikhs for the atrocities and create a pretext for more violence against them. The book shows that the Indian consul general in Toronto pulled his daughter off the flight shortly before it was due to depart. An auto dealer who was a friend of the consul general also canceled his reservation at the last minute. Surinder Singh, director of North American Affairs for the External Affairs office in New Delhi, also canceled his reservation on that flight.

The consul general also called to finger a suspect in the case before the public knew that the bombing had taken place. The book quotes an agent of the Canadian State Investigative Service (CSIS) as saying, "If you really want to clear the incidents quickly, take vans down to the Indian High Commission and the consulates in Toronto and Vancouver, load up everybody and take them down for questioning. We know it, and they know it, that they are involved."

In recent months, India has been added to the State Department's "watch list" of countries that violate religious freedom. Some members of Congress have called for sanctions against India and for an end to American aid. Some have also endorsed self-determination for the peoples seeking freedom from India through a plebiscite on independence. While these events seem unlikely to occur anytime soon, the Indian government has held negotiations with the freedom fighters in Nagaland. Home Minister L.K. Advani recently admitted that if Kashmir achieves freedom (which now seems more likely than ever), it will cause India to break apart. Some experts have predicted that within a decade, neither India nor Pakistan will exist in their current form.

The Indian subcontinent will continue to be a region that bears close attention by American policymakers.

TRIBUTE TO THE LIFE OF ESTER MATA

HON. JOE BACA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to the life of Esther Mata, a beloved community member.

Esther took much pride in her cherished San Bernardino community. Being a long time resident of San Bernardino she attended San Bernardino High School and San Bernardino Valley College. Her love for the city and its people was deeply rooted. She was the quintessential community activist for despite challenges, she continued to fight for services to be implemented in the community. Her presence and efforts in the community was a vital source in motivating people and enhancing the community.

Esther devoted her life to improve the livelihood of her fellow community members through her civic engagement and involvement. Some of her accomplishments include serving as President of the Inland Empire Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, President of Sinfonia Mexicana, and President of the Inland Counties Hispanic Roundtable. She was San Bernardino's catalyst to progress. Her passion enabled her to make great contributions that will never be forgotten. One of her most memorable contributions was garnering an $87,000 grant from the county to assess Hispanic business in the area.

Esther passed away on Saturday, August 31, 2002. She is survived by her son, Malcolm Mata; three daughters Sylvia Zicafoose, Bernardine Leutz, and Desiree Forshay; two brothers Raymond and Louie Lopez; and sister Braulia Ortega. Her family, innumerable friends, and the entire community will miss her greatly.

And so Mr. Speaker, I submit this memorial to be included in the archives of the history of this great nation, for individuals like Esther are unique in their generous contributions to this country.

IN MEMORY OF WAYNE FORD BUCKLE

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the life of a good man, and an inspirational Virginian, Mr. Wayne Ford Buckle. Wayne was a selfless patriot and civic-minded community leader who contributed greatly to the Northern Virginia area.

Wayne Buckle left us on March 24, 2002, but what he gave during his 85 years will remain a lasting legacy. As a lifelong and charter member of the Church of the Brethren in Arlington, Virginia, Wayne Buckle and his wife Wilma led by example, actively participating in many facets of the life of the church. In 1960, Wayne achieved distinction by serving as the first lay District Moderator in the Church. One program that Wayne especially enjoyed focusing his energies on was the District Camping program. Wayne frequently gave his time as a camp counselor and was deeply involved in the development and growth of Shepherds Spring, the Church of the Brethren Youth Camp in the Mid-Atlantic District.

Perhaps Wayne Buckle was best known for his fierce loyalty to his beloved Democratic Party. A member of the Mason District Democratic Committee of Fairfax County since 1956, Wayne remained a dedicated standard bearer for the party all his life. For over two decades, his prowess as alternating treasurer for the Mason District Democratic Committee, the Northern Virginia Democratic Club, Virginia's 10th District Democratic Committee and Virginia's 11th District Democratic Committee allowed these organizations to grow and prosper under his watchful eye. A strong union supporter till the end, Wayne also played a big role with the American Federation of Government Employees, serving as their trusted treasurer for many years.

Wayne's wisdom, patient nature and unshakable spirit were able to overcome obstacles that would have stopped most people in their tracks. Loved by many and respected by all, Wayne exemplified the well-rounded family man, civic, and political leader whose insatiable thirst for life provided a role model to us all. Wayne Buckle's lifelong devotion to improving the lives of the disadvantaged and dispossessed epitomizes FDR's quote that "the test of our progress is not whether we add more to the abundance of those who have much; it is whether we provide enough for those who have too little." Those of us who knew him will miss his gentle and not-so-gentle reminders that we can be better than we think we can be. We will miss you dearly Wayne, but your legacy will not be forgotten.

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the House of Representatives to join me in congratulating the Monsignor Patrick R. Dunigan Council 695, Knights of Columbus, upon their 100th Anniversary. The Knights will be celebrating this event with Mass followed by a reception on September 14th in my hometown of Flint. I have been a member of the Dunigan Council for several years and will be joining the other Knights at this auspicious occasion.

The Knights of Columbus were founded in 1882 with the principles of charity, unity, fraternity and patriotism. In 1902, Council 695 was organized in Flint on September 14th of that year. The oldest Knights of Columbus Council in Genesee County, the Dunigan Council has from its beginning held the principle of charity foremost in its activities. Helping its members cope during the Depression, they provided assistance for the families of the unemployed. It was at this time that Monsignor Patrick R. Dunigan befriended the Council and provided them with a foundation for their charitable work. As pastor of St. Michael Catholic Church he saved the Council from dissolving by providing a meeting place at the parish. In 1955 the Council was named in his honor to commemorate the many years of guidance and support he gave to its members.

The Council became a supporter of Boysville in 1947 and in 1953 the Council played a role in rebuilding the Beecher District after the devastating tornado struck that area. Participating in the program to assist the mentally retarded started in 1967, the Dunigan Council has assisted in raising millions of dollars across the state.

Support for Catholic school athletic programs was started in the 1940s. The Catholic League high school football program, and grade school basketball were just two of the recipients of the Council's largesse. Since the opening of Powers High School the Council has continued its support of its athletic department. At the grade school level the Council has focused on the development of the girls volleyball and baseball teams.

In 1955 the Dunigan Council took on the role of mothering new councils. A total of nine councils have spun off from Council 695. The Davison Council was the first, followed by the Mt. Morris Council. In the early 1990s the Dunigan Council was invited by Father Douglas Osborn to make its home at St. John Vianney. The Choral group that was an offshoot of the Council in 1966 has grown to the Singing Knights. This group now incorporates members from several councils and has performed at functions for many years.

In keeping with the principles of the Knights of Columbus, the Dunigan Council has decided to make their anniversary celebration a project to assist Boysville. I ask the House of Representatives to join me in commending the men of the Patrick R. Dunigan Council 695 Knights of Columbus, for their devotion to their faith, their support of the next generation through building athletic programs, and their tireless assistance to the less fortunate. I congratulate them for 100 years of hard work and spiritual growth.

OF COLORADO

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with a solemn heart that I take this opportunity to pay respect to the passing of Faye Fleming at the age of fifty-nine. Faye served ten years in the Colorado House of Representatives, representing House District 31, which included Western Adams, Southern Weld and Eastern Boulder Counties from 1982 to 1984 and from 1986 to 1994. During her legislative tenure, Faye served as Chairman of the House Transportation and Energy Committee and Joint Transportation Legislation Review Committee. She was an innovative leader and played a key role in the implementation of the Colorado Clean Air Act and the state's underground petroleum storage tank remediation program. Faye Fleming was a remarkable woman and her accomplishments most certainly deserves the recognition of this body of Congress and this nation.

Faye was born on February 19, 1943 in Johnson City, New York. She attended Iowa Wesleyan College and the University of Colorado at Boulder prior to receiving her B.A. from Metropolitan State College in Denver. Before her legislative career, Faye held numerous civic positions including Chairman of Adams County Planning Commission, member of the Adams County Head Start Policy Council, and President of Adams County League of Women Voters. Faye is survived by her husband, Larry French of Thornton, Colorado, her son, Dr. Andrew Barnard of Alana, Maine; and her daughter, Heather Schultze of San Francisco.

Mr. Speaker, Faye Fleming was a remarkable woman whose leadership and goodwill towards her fellow Coloradans inspired many and whose good deeds certainly deserve the recognition of this body of Congress. Faye's departure leaves a gap in many hearts but her memory will surely survive in the lives of those who knew her. Faye Fleming committed her life in the service of her state, and I join many others in mourning Faye's loss and celebrating her life.

CENTRAL NEW JERSEY SHARES
THE ACCOUNT OF TRADE CENTER
VICTIM FAMILY MEMBER
SARAH VAN AUKEN

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with you an article written by Sarah Van Auker, 13 year-old daughter of World Trade Center victim Kenneth Van Auker. It was published last week in her local newspaper, and it presents a straightforward account of how the nightmare of September 11 unfolded before the eyes of a young person who found herself thrust suddenly onto the front lines of a war she didn't even know was taking place. It shows us not just how deeply painful and terrifying it is for a child to lose a parent, but also how this young woman's own feelings of fear, confusion and uncertainty as the day unfolded were magnified by that fact that she saw just the same feelings among the adults around her. Sarah Van Auker's life since that day became a swirling tapestry of endless tears, helpless longing for her father, and newfound celebrity born of the worst set of circumstances she could possibly have imagined. Out of her pain, she wrote a song in honor and memory of her father. The song paints a picture that perhaps we all might see ourselves within. A picture of a person, standing, quietly, waiting, listening for the faintest sound on the wind of the guiding hand that will come back and show us show how to get through this, the guiding hand that we can grasp so that we'll find ourselves together again, safely, home. This has been a year of deep searching and painful discovery for us all, and I would like to share Sarah Van Auker's account of it with you.

This past year has been very hard for me. You see, my father, Kenneth Van Auker, was in the World Trade Center on Sept. 11, 2001. No, he did not escape—but he did leave a message saying, "I love you. I'm in the World Trade Center. The building was hit by something. I don't know if I'm going to get out but I love you very much. I—I hope I'll see you later. Bye." That was the single most horrible thing I had ever heard in my life. He was trying to stay calm for us—trying to let his last words be "I love you." Somehow, I wish I could go back in time and erase all that happened. Maybe even stop him from going to work. I wish I could have one last goodbye. But I guess it's too much to ask.

You're most likely wondering how I found out. Well, I was having a regular day at school. You know, boring—yet I was with my friends. Anyway, I was in study hall minding my own business when someone yelled out, "Is it true that a plane crashed into the World Trade Center?" Knowing my dad worked there, I wrote a note to my friend next to me saying, "If that's true, my dad would be dead!" I didn't believe what he said because the teacher acted like nothing happened. Also, I wouldn't trust that kid. So as the day went on, I felt weird. You know like when you know that something is wrong, but you really don't think about it? At eighth period, around 1:30 p.m., an announcement came on saying there is a "little accident" in New York—and if we get home and one of our parents are not there, we should not worry. If you get scared, we should call 911 or talk to the police. That's when I got scared. When I was walking down the hallway, I almost started crying, but held back my tears. When I got in the car to go home, my neighbor who drives me tried to get one of my classmates to stop talking about the announcement. She was obviously trying to stay away from the subject. Then, when we got to that boy's house, his dad started talking about it. He didn't say what happened, but gave me a weird look. I got home and saw my grandparents' car. I knew they weren't supposed to be there. I saw my mom with a tear stained face, and I ran up to her and she didn't have to tell me. I just cried.

From that day on, nothing has been the same. Nobody has treated me the same. Nobody wanted to talk about it—yet they couldn't help asking me questions about what had happened, and how I was doing. When I knew for sure, after three days, that my father was dead, I cried harder than I have ever cried in my life. My father, my superman, was dead. We had a memorial, and went on "Oprah." I wouldn't eat. I couldn't sleep in my own bed. I would cry about the smallest things. I was wearing one of his shirts, to feel close to him. I was looking at family pictures. Of course, I was still crying. I couldn't figure out what would make me stop being so depressed and irritable. I had to get it out. I wanted to scream, run, jump—but I couldn't. I just didn't have the strength. I cried too much.

So, I did what I usually did to get out my feelings: I wrote a song. I sang it to my mom and she called my godmother, who called her brother-in-law, who told me to record myself singing and send it to him. Exactly a month after Sept. 11, I recorded it in a studio. The song titled "Daddy's Little Girl" was on a local radio station twice, once in California and on "Larry King Weekend." I always wanted publicity because I wanted to be famous—but not this way. Today I am still crying, when nobody's around. I think about what happened constantly, but can't really talk about it. And though I may sound selfish, somehow I think nobody knows how I really feel. My life is turned upside down. The things I used to do I either can't do anymore, or I've lost interest, or they seem so much harder. I'm trying to "move on," but I don't want to. My mind has accepted that he's dead, but my heart hasn't. And somehow, I don't think my heart will. Because I'll never stop crying, not in a million years.

Sometimes, it will hit me that he's gone forever—that he's never coming home. I recently had a Bat Mitzvah. It was very hard, just like the 11th of every month is hard, and Father's day, my mom's birthday, my brother's birthday, my birthday, my dad's birthday, and most of all next week's Sept. 11 anniversary. I know most of the teens that are reading this might often think about what it would be like if you lost a parent. I used to wonder, too. Except now I don't wonder, I know.

DADDY'S LITTLE GIRL
(By Sarah Van Auken)

Standing-daddy's little girl (just); Standing (yeah)-daddy's little girl . . .
I wonder, wonder through the trees, blow the wind, blow the wind to me. Control, controlling my fears, somewhere, behind these tears. And may, maybe you'll appear, somehow whisper in my ear (my ear, my ear!)

CHORUS

If you were just standing here, I could erase these tears of mine! And all these words would disappear, oh! Standing-daddy's little girl (just); Standing (yeah)-daddy's little girl . . .
Can it, can it be, that the wind is guiding me! Daddy are you there? 'cause I've, I've looked everywhere I need, I need you! What should, what should I do! And may, maybe you'll appear, somehow whisper in my ear (my ear, my ear!)

If you were just standing here, I could erase these tears of mine! And all these words would disappear! I just want to find you, but there's nothing I can do. Where do you roam? i just want you HOME!!!!
Standing-daddy's little girl (just); Standing (yeah)-daddy's little girl . . .

HONORING REV. JUAN MARTINEZ
AS HE CELEBRATES HIS 40th PASTORAL ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT
Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to extend my sincere congratulations to my dear friend, Reverend Juan Martinez, as the congregation of the Door of Salvation Pentecostal Church honors him on his 40th pastoral anniversary. This is a tremendous milestone for Reverend Martinez and for the community he has served for the last four decades.

One of the eldest Hispanic ministers in New Haven, Reverend Martinez has been an active and vocal member of our community since his arrival. Upon making his home in New Haven, Reverend Martinez established the church known as "Iglesia Puerta de Salvacion" which has flourished under his leadership. Throughout the last half century, the Hispanic population has grown at a rapid rate and we have been fortunate to have Reverend Martinez working so diligently in our community.

As the pastor for 40 years, Reverend Martinez has ministered to the spiritual needs of hundreds in the Hill community—strengthening our bonds of faith and helping to build stronger neighborhoods of which we can all be proud. As a community leader he has embodied the spirit and values of our great nation. Today, Reverend Martinez continues down his chosen path—providing counsel and offering solace and guidance to those most in need. With his unparalleled dedication and talent, he has made a real difference in the lives of many.

Throughout his lifetime, Reverend Martinez has exemplified the qualities we need in our community leaders. I am proud to join his wife, Maria, his six children, family, friends, and the congregation of the Door of Salvation Pentecostal Church in extending my warmest congratulations as he celebrates his 40th pastoral anniversary. His good work and invaluable contributions have left an indelible mark on our community.

IN MEMORY OF CHIEF WARRANT OFFICER CHARLES STANLEY

HON. STEVE C. LATOURETTE

OF OHIO
Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. LATOURETTE. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, Chief Warrant Officer Charles I. Stanley was laid to rest with full military honors at Arlington National Cemetery. It had been 33 years since the Army helicopter he was piloting crashed in bad weather in South Vietnam during the Vietnam War. A search and rescue mission to find Stanley and six others on the helicopter following the crash had been unsuccessful.

For more than three decades, Stanley's family was unsure of his fate, and wondered if he would always be classified as MIA and if their grief would have no end. Finally, in November of 2000, several years after a crash site was identified, Stanley's remains were positively verified through DNA analysis. His burial at Arlington National Cemetery, our nation's most hallowed ground, took place last week and finally gave his beloved family some closure after decades of uncertainty.

Stanley grew up in Highland Heights, OH. He was a graduate of Mayfield High School and attended Ohio State University before enlisting in the Army in 1968. He was just 23 years old at the time of his death.

Stanley is survived by a brother, Ronald Stanley of Highland Heights, a sister, Carol Subel, a Chagrin Falls resident, and many other family members. Sadly, Stanley's mother and father both passed before learning of their son's fate.

At Stanley's funeral last week, about 50 family members, friends and Vietnam veterans gathered at Arlington to pay their last respect and to give this military hero a long overdue farewell. There was a chapel service at Fort Myers and then a graveside burial at Arlington, complete with a three-gun volley, a flag presentation and the performance of Taps by a lone bugler.

On behalf of the 19th Congressional District of Ohio, I extend my condolences to Stanley's family. I am pleased that you finally were able to give your brother the burial that befits him as a war hero, and that you have gained some closure in this painful chapter of your lives. Please know that Charles Stanley's heroic service and sacrifice for our nation are appreciated and will never be forgotten.

FOOD SAFETY REQUIRES MULTI-PRONGED APPROACH, INCLUDING IRRADIATION

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA
Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, the recent recall of ground beef highlights the need for increased attention to food safety and the means to achieve it. An editorial in the August 2, 2002, Norfolk Daily News, discusses the need to utilize a variety of approaches to further ensure safety. This includes adequate inspection at the plant and proper food preparation. In addition, the editorial states that "the Federal government has made it possible, though not simple, for processors to employ the most fail-safe system of all—irradiation. Already in wide use in the food industry, it can extend shelf life as well as destroy the pathogens which seem to survive despite inspection efforts. Its use needs better acceptance in the red meat industry, and especially from those activists who claim to have the best interests of consumers at heart."

The Food and Drug Administration has approved irradiation for the control of pathogenic micro-organisms in red meat. The FDA concluded that irradiation reduced disease-causing microbes and did not compromise the nutritional quality of treated products. While the U.S. food supply is generally very safe, we must continue to seek improved methods of ensuring this safety. Irradiation is one of these methods.

TRIBUTE TO THE PONY LEAGUE TEAM OF NORWALK, CALIFORNIA

HON. GRACE F. NAPOLITANO

OF CALIFORNIA
Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I am bursting with pride today as I rise to honor an extraordinary group of young athletes, the PONY (Protecting Our Nation's Youth) League Team of Norwalk, California, my hometown. On August 24, this team completed its undefeated competition in the 2002 PONY League World Series in Washington, Pennsylvania, with a commanding 10-0 victory over Levittown, Puerto Rico, to become the world champions. Norwalk became the first United States team since 1999 to win the PONY League World Series, and the third California team in six years to win the title.

After defeating tournament host Washington by a 11-7 score on the second night of competition, Norwalk cruised through the 13-game tournament with convincing victories over Hagerstown, Md. (11-0), Port Neches, Texas (11-4), and finally Levittown (10-0). The championship win ended their dominating four-game performance, in which the Norwalk team outscored their opponents by a combined score of 43-11.

We are often bombarded by negative stories about our young people involving violence and drugs. I ask my colleagues to join me in acknowledging this each of the young people on this team who have done something so positive in working together to reach this outstanding achievement: Art Gonzalez, Jimmy Buentello, Frankie Lucero, Johnny Perez, Gabriel Schwulst, Danny Dutch, Miguel Flores, Jesus Cabral, Tony Zarco, Jamil Acosta, Eddie Murray, George Sanchez, Richard Melendrez, Anthony Topete and Victor Sanchez.

I also want to recognize the team's manager and coaches, Ruben Velazquez, George Sanchez and Tony Rivas, as well as the parents of the players, who all played important roles in the team's success this season. Volunteers like these are the backbone of the PONY League, and without them the participation and success of our young athletes would not be possible.

The PONY League provides an excellent opportunity for 13 and 14-year-olds throughout the world to enjoy competitive baseball. The PONY League was founded 1951, and since then over 5 million young athletes have participated. There are now 28,500 teams throughout the United States and 12 other countries. I have always been supportive of this League, the Norwalk PONY-Colt League, since my own sons played in it decades ago. I am very proud of all of the young people who have participated this season and many other seasons, but particularly the 2002 world champions from Norwalk, California. Congratulations.

HON. WES WATKINS

OF OKLAHOMA

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I missed three rollcall votes on September 9, 2002, because I was attending meetings in my Congressional District. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" for rollcall votes 375, 376, and 377.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO MARSHALL DUANE SHERMAN

HON. SCOTT MCINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the life and memory of Marshall Duane "Whitey" Sherman, a longtime resident of Kremmling, Colorado. Mr. Sherman lived an extraordinary life and accomplished many things, he began his career as a lineman with the Estes Park Light and Power Company. Soon after, he worked as a consultant and inspector for various power companies throughout the state including the Department of Energy.

Despite his busy career, Mr. Sherman also managed to find time to make significant contributions within his community and throughout the State of Colorado. A cordial and responsible individual, Mr. Sherman spent much of his free time as a mentor to Colorado's future generations. He served as a 4-H leader and was involved in a number of church youth summer programs. Mr. Sherman also served on a host of other organizations that became influential to the welfare of the Kremmling community. He was president of the Middle Park Fair Board for ten years, served on the Kremmling Hospital board of directors, was the president of the West Grand Education Foundation, and was active in many groups within the Kremmling Community Church where he was a member.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor that I take the time to pay tribute to a man that has epitomized what it means to be a benefactor of his state and a role model for future generations to emulate. He was a decent, hard working American who found the time to help others and helped to make the Town of Kremmling, Colorado a better place to live. My condolences go out to the Sherman family, his wife Geneva and their sons Marshall, Mike, and Rich. Although the loss of Mr. Sherman will be deeply felt throughout the Kremmling community, there is solace in knowing that his life has made an impression that will transcend his death for many years to come.

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday September 4, 2002, I missed two votes due to flight delays. Although I received the appropriate leave of absence from the House, I wish to inform my colleagues and constituents of the 2nd District of Wisconsin on how I intended to vote on the roll call votes that I missed.

On Roll Call vote 371, I would have voted No. On Roll Call vote 372, I would have voted Aye.

MISSOURI'S #1 YOUNG BASEBALL TEAM

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, let me take this means to congratulate and pay tribute to the Blue Springs Indians baseball team of Blue Springs, MO. These young players have distinguished themselves, the Blue Springs community and the State of Missouri with outstanding conduct on and off the field.

The Blue Springs Indians are the #1 baseball team in Missouri in the 8 years old and under USSSA Missouri League. The team managed this feat by winning the Missouri State Championship Tournament. The Indians finished 11th in the World Series and are ranked #15 in the nation.

Mr. Speaker, these young ball players have played a wonderful season of baseball and have made their friends and family proud. I am certain that my colleagues will join me in wishing the Blue Springs Indians all the best.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE WES WATKINS

HON. FRANK D. LUCAS

OF OKLAHOMA

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, today Oklahoma's delegation to the United States Congress pays tribute to our friend and colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma, WES WATKINS.

Following twenty years of service in the House, WES WATKINS is leaving Congress at the end of this term. His service on behalf of Oklahoma's Third Congressional District spans parts of four decades: From 1977 to 1991 as a Democrat, and from 1997 to the present as a Republican.

Those of us who have had the honor to serve and work with WES WATKINS know him to be one of the hardest working and most dedicated members of the Congress.

The Third District of Oklahoma has been one of the most rural, economically distressed areas of the nation, and WES WATKINS has made it his mission to lay the foundation for private sector economic development and job growth in his district.

Whether he was recruiting potential employers or seeking federal funding for basic infrastructure that most of the country takes for granted—like paved roads and running water—WES WATKINS has always placed the needs of his constituents first on his priority list.

When traditional financing couldn't be arranged for businesses to expand or locate in his district, WES WATKINS helped found Rural Enterprises of Oklahoma, a non-profit economic development organization that in the past twenty years has financed more than $200 million in business loans for rural Oklahoma. When a potential business recruit told him there was not an ample water supply to locate a coal-fueled electric power plant in his district, WES WATKINS obtained federal funding to raise the level of a local lake to accommodate the plant's needs.

WES WATKINS led the effort to help fledgling rural businesses succeed by helping create the nation's first rural business incubators in his district. And he worked with Oklahoma's career and technology education system to create rural distance-learning centers to help bridge the digital divide between urban and rural areas by bringing technology training directly to his rural constituents.

Thanks in large part to WES WATKINS' efforts, southeastern Oklahoma—once known for its welfare dependency—is now developing into one of the fastest growing areas of our state.

In addition to his economic development efforts in rural Oklahoma, WES WATKINS has earned a reputation as a strong supporter of our state's agriculture and energy industries. He has worked to improve rural health care and education. WES WATKINS has been an outspoken advocate for our nation's veterans and for a strong national defense. He has obtained funding for countless economic infrastructure projects like road construction, airport improvements, and water development in his rural district. And WES WATKINS' efforts to ensure Oklahoma's former Indian lands were eligible for federal Indian land tax incentives have provided Oklahoma with one of the best industrial recruitment tools in America.

With twenty years of experience in the House, WES WATKINS is the dean of Oklahoma's House delegation. His leadership and wisdom will be greatly missed not just by his many admiring colleagues, but by his district, his state, and his nation.

Thank you WES, for your many years of service and for a job well done. Your friends in Oklahoma's congressional delegation wish you the best of health and continued success in the years to come.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JOE ULIBARRI

HON. SCOTT MCINNIS

OF COLORADO

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Judge Joe Ulibarri of Pueblo, Colorado and recognize his contributions and service to his community. After twenty-three years in the Pueblo Municipal Court, Judge Ulibarri has retired. Throughout his tenure, Judge Ulibarri has made a number of important rulings, notably his 1991 decision that allowed the Municipal Court to accept juvenile citations and relieve the state Court of their backlog, leading to the expeditious handling of juvenile cases in Pueblo. The career and accomplishments of Joe Ulibarri are a testament to fine public service and most certainly deserve the recognition of this body of Congress and this nation.

Judge Joe Ulibarri was born on July 31, 1943 and was educated at Southern Colorado State College where he received an Associate of Arts degree in Social Studies and English. He went on to study law at the University of Denver School of Law, where he received his Juris Doctorate degree in 1970. Following graduation he earned a job as a staff attorney working for the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund in Denver, Colorado. In 1979, Judge Ulibarri became the Assistant Municipal Judge for the City of Pueblo, and after ten years was promoted to the position of Presiding Municipal Judge. In retirement, Joe plans to spend more time with his new granddaughter, Noelle Elora, who was born January 3, 2002. Joe also hopes to travel with his lovely wife Juanita and perhaps even return to teaching part-time.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege that I recognize Judge Joe Ulibarri and his selfless contributions to our legal system and to his community. Joe has worked hard throughout his career and it is my honor to bring forth his accomplishment before this body of Congress and this nation. Good luck to you Joe in all your future endeavors.

HON. PAUL E. GILLMOR

OF OHIO

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, a long time friend of mine and former Member of Congress, Edward F. Weber, requested that I submit the following statement in memory of his friend and colleague, Donald J. Pease.

Mr. Speaker, the family, friends, and constituents of Ohio's 13th Congressional District mourn the passing of our former Member, Donald J. Pease. Don was elected to Congress in 1976 and served until his retirement in 1992. Among other assignments he was a member of the Ways and Means Committee where he was instrumental in drafting certain significant changes to the income tax law.

It is probably very rare when two members of the same high school class serve together in this House, as Don and I did in the 97th Congress. It was my privilege to have been Don's classmate at Jesup W. Scott High School in Toledo, Ohio from which he and I graduated in 1949. Don was elected president of the senior class, a position he forfeited in favor of being the editor of the school paper, because school rules prohibited the holding of two major offices. I know that Don received many honors; among those was his election in 1981 as a charter member of the school's Hall of Fame. All of the '49ers will miss him greatly.

From high school Don went on to Ohio University and from there pursued graduate studies on a Fulbright Scholarship. When his formal studies were finished, Don established a business career in journalism, as the editor and co-publisher of the Oberlin News-Tribune. He combined this with service in the Ohio Legislature for 10 years before his election to Congress.

Don's friendliness and his humor, his keen mind and ability with words; and the integrity with which he approached each given task were distinguishing characteristics wherever he was and whatever he did.

A heart condition caused Don not to seek reelection in 1992, and it was his heart that suddenly took his life on Sunday, July 28, 2002 while at home in Oberlin. Regardless of our political persuasion, Ohio, especially the 13th Congressional District, is a better place because of individuals like Don Pease.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in remembering the life of a former colleague, Donald J. Pease. Our democratic institutions and the American people are better served through the diligence and determination of public servants, like Don, who have dedicated their lives to serving the needs of others. I am confident that Don's life will continue to serve as a model for future generations on how one individual can serve his community and positively influence others around him. Our thoughts and prayers are with Don's family and friends during this difficult time. We wish them the very best.

IN MEMORY OF FAY LATHAM

HON. J. RANDY FORBES

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember my dear friend, Fay Latham.

Fay was a loving mother, grandmother, and servant of God, but to me she was first and foremost a trusted friend. If I can convey but one overriding memory of Fay, it is that she was always there for me from the earliest days onward. As I embarked on my career in government service, she was active in each of my campaigns, contributing even more than I could have asked. I owe her much.

While Fay's loss to the community will be considerable, her dedication and commitment to principal will continue to inspire. We must continue to remember and honor people like Fay Latham who steadfastly step in the breach when principle and duty call. Her husband Jesse and her family have my continuing gratitude and respect.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, September 12, 2002 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. TERRY).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

September 12, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable LEE TERRY to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,

PRAYER

The Most Reverend John R. Gaydos, Bishop of Jefferson City, Missouri, offered the following prayer:

From the eighteenth psalm of King David we read: "The breakers of death surged round about me; the menacing floods terrified me. The cords of Sheol tightened; the snares of death lay in wait for me. In my distress I called out: Lord! I cried out to my God. From his temple he heard my voice; my cry to him reached his ears."

Almighty God, the first anniversary has passed. The sorrow abides in our hearts, but it does not dwell there alone. Gratitude abides there, too. We are sorry for the lives lost and the suffering of those who survive. We are grateful for the renewed solidarity and spirit of generosity that has been enkindled across this great country. As we continue the binding up, we experience the power of Your providential care. Make each of us, this day, instruments of Your light and strength for our blessed Nation. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain one 1-minute at this time.

WELCOME TO BISHOP JOHN RAYMOND GAYDOS

(Mr. SKELTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to welcome our guest chaplain, the Most Reverend John Raymond Gaydos, bishop of Jefferson City, Missouri. Knowing of his higher calling since he was a young man, Bishop Gaydos has dedicated his life to serving his church and his community.

Born in St. Louis, Missouri, he attended the St. Agnes School of St. Louis, which is the St. Louis Preparatory Seminary; Cardinal Glennon College of St. Louis; and the Pontifical Gregorian University in Rome, Italy. Bishop Gaydos was ordained on December 20, 1968 at St. Peter's Basilica in Vatican City.

Bishop Gaydos has been a pastor at several parishes in the St. Louis area, in addition to being secretary to the archbishop and vicar general of the St. Louis archdiocese. He was appointed bishop of Jefferson City, Missouri, in 1997, where he presently serves. He is well known for his leadership within the Church, serving as chairman and member of various archdiocese and national committees.

I welcome Bishop Gaydos to the House of Representatives and thank him for his opening prayer this morning.

MOTION TO GO TO CONFERENCE ON H.R. 1646, FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2002 AND 2003

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with rule XXII of the rules of the House, and by direction of the Committee on International Relations, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1646) to authorize appropriations for the Department of State for fiscal years 2002 and 2003, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This 15-minute vote on the motion to go to conference will be followed by a 5-minute vote on the Journal.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 382, nays 0, not voting 50, as follows:

Mr. TANCREDO changed his vote from “nay” to “yea.”

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, with regard to rollcall vote 385 on the motion to go to conference on H.R. 1646, the State Department authorization, I missed that vote en route back to the Capitol. Had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, this morning, September 12, my plane back to Washington was delayed and I missed rollcall vote number 385 on the motion to go to conference on the State Department authorization, H.R. 1646. On this vote I would have voted “yea.”

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TERRY). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the pending business is the question of the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question is on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a 5-minute vote.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 342, noes 42, answered “present” 1, not voting 47, as follows:

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, on September 12, 2002, official business in Washington, D.C., caused this Member to unavoidably miss two rollcall votes. On rollcall No. 385 (motion to go to conference on H.R. 1646, the State Department Authorization bill), this Member would have voted "yea." On rollcall No. 386 (approving the Journal), this Member would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, on September 11 I was in my district taking part in September 11 ceremonies and remembrances and I missed rollcall vote number 384. Had I been present, I would have voted an emphatic "yea" on this vote expressing the sense of Congress on the anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, on the morning of Thursday, September 12, 2002, I was in my congressional district participating in ceremonies honoring constituents who perished in the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on America. Due to this circumstance, I was unable to cast votes for rollcalls 385 and 386.

Had I been present, I would have voted in the following manner: "yea" on rollcall 385; "yea" on rollcall 386.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 1646, FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEARS 2002 AND 2003

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TERRY). Without objection, the Chair appoints the following conferees:

From the Committee on International Relations, for consideration of the House bill and the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference:

Messrs. HYDE, SMITH of New Jersey, LANTOS and BERMAN and Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN.

From the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration of sections 234, 236, 709, 710, and 844 and section 404 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference:

Messrs. SENSENBRENNER, SMITH of Texas and CONYERS.

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5193, BACK TO SCHOOL TAX RELIEF ACT OF 2002

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 521 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 521

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 5193) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow a deduction to certain taxpayers for elementary and secondary education expenses. The bill shall be considered as read for amendment. The amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means now printed in the bill shall be considered as adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate on the bill, as amended, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means; and (2) one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

(Mr. REYNOLDS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 521 is a standard closed rule

providing for the consideration of H.R. 5193, the Back to School Tax Relief Act of 2002. The rule waives all points of order against consideration of the bill and provides one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, one of the great successes of this Congress and this administration was the enactment of the No Child Left Behind Act, legislation to extend and amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

Containing some of the most sweeping education reforms in decades, the act incorporates four key principles: Stronger accountability to ensure results; increased flexibility and local control that sends dollars and decisions directly to the classroom; expanded options for parents; and an emphasis on teaching methods that have been proven to work. It is one of these principles, expanded options for parents, that brings us here today.

The Back to School Tax Relief Act of 2002 will give parents the opportunity to take advantage of the Tax Code and take control over financing their child's education. According to the National Center for Education Statistics, student enrollment at public and private elementary and secondary schools peaked to a record level of 53.2 million in the fall of 2000, a 14 percent increase since 1990. In my home State of New York, enrollment in grades K through 12 increased more than 4 percent from 1994 to 2000, and in many parts of the country, enrollments are expected to continue increasing through at least 2005.

As more and more students hit the books, more and more parents are straining the family finances trying to make ends meet as they put their kids through school. Under present law, above-the-line deductions are allowed for qualified tuition and related expenses for higher education only. The legislation before us today simply extends that deduction of up to $3,000 to qualified elementary and secondary education expenses paid in connection with eligible K through 12 students. This includes expenses at public, private, religious or home schools.

Not every school district is the same nor is every family. By incorporating this tax deduction we can provide parents the flexibility to tailor their education expenses to best suit the needs of their families and their children. Quality education should be available and affordable to all parents.

Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means, especially the gentleman from California (Chairman THOMAS), for advancing this legislation through committee and bringing it to the House floor. With our children now back in school, there is no better time for this body to consider and pass legislation that will help families offset the cost of education.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to support this rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from New York for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, anyone who plays popular sheet music knows that at the beginning of a piece there is always a place called "vamp until ready" where the pianist literally kills time until we are ready for the main act when the singer comes on. I think this bill comes into the category of vamp until ready.

Obviously, we all understand, those of us who serve in Congress and all of the wonderful staff here, that we need the appropriations bills on the floor of the House to be passed by October 1 to keep the government running. I am beginning to think we are not going to do that this year and expect we will probably come up with a giant continuing resolution.

But this is certainly a vamp until ready bill, and I certainly rise in opposition to it, because, in addition to everything else, it has a closed rule. The underlying bill is part of a continuing wave of election year gimmicks that the majority knows will never be signed into law.

At a time when the body is woefully behind in the most basic task of passing bills funding the Nation's priorities, we should be using our time more constructively; but, instead, we are considering a resolution that shuts out consideration of a meaningful bipartisan substitute that would improve school facilities across the country.

It does not have to be this way, Mr. Speaker. Surely expanding educational opportunities for our children would be an issue where this Congress could set aside its differences and work together. Education remains at the top of everyone's priority list, for rich and poor, Democrat and Republican, and any other category of persons. Instead, we have before us today a purely partisan bill, a bill that the minority leadership on the Committee on Ways and Means dubbed an embarrassment, and not a single member of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means defended the substance of this bill when the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and others raised concerns about its uncertain and likely overly broad definition of eligible expenses.

This measure will not improve the education of a single child, because it is designed to make a political point and not to become law. The problems with the bill are numerous.

First, the legislation is the first step towards shifting funds away from public schools and into private and religious schools. This comes at a time when States are reeling from lost revenue and being forced to cut everything from teachers' salaries to laying off firefighters and policemen. We do not need to utilize the limited time of this body before adjournment debating another scheme to get the Federal Government to pay for private school tuition.

Ninety percent of our children are in public schools, and those schools need our help drastically, now more than ever. I would also note that the $20,000 limit for singles and $40,000 limit for couples will not be enough to take advantage of the tax deduction, which is not refundable. Therefore, we are giving them absolutely nothing.

Several months ago you recall we passed the No Child Left Behind Act that reauthorized the elementary and secondary education programs, and the congressional leadership and the President pointed with pride to the enhanced levels of education spending that were authorized in the legislation, and it was a fine bipartisan bill. But now the administration and leadership have allocated funds for that program for the next fiscal year, and they are $7 billion short. In other words, Mr. Speaker, many children will be left behind. And while they are supporting this bill, which is estimated to cost $5 billion, it seems to me that it would have been much better to have put this money into leaving no child behind. The substitute that the Democrats were attempting to offer would go a long way toward addressing the reversal.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot expect our children to learn and our teachers to teach unless they are provided with safe and modern school buildings. Forcing students to go to school in trailers or dilapidated school buildings is a clear message to them that they do not matter, and surely we can do better.

Currently our public school system has extraordinary unmet needs for funds to construct and modernize our schools. The new estimates based on data collected by the State departments of education indicate that more than $300 billion will be needed to repair or replace existing public school facilities. That $300 billion cannot be met without significant commitment of funds from all levels of government, including the Federal Government.

The substitute we had hoped to have made in order would provide a meaningful down payment for school construction and modernization. In my home State of New York, it would have meant an infusion of close to $2.5 billion, incredibly needed money for school construction and rehabilitation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, listening to my colleague's remarks, I just must say in our research of the bill that 90 percent of the families that would benefit have children in public schools, and $3 out of every $4 of the tax benefits would be spent on public school education.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this rule and of the underlying legislation.

We marked the tragic first anniversary of September 11 yesterday; and I think, as we focus on our priorities, clearly national security, winning the war on terrorism, dealing with the threats that exist from tyrants around the world is our number one priority.

But it is important to note the very key distinction that exists between those evil-doers, as the President calls them, and those here in the United States. It is clear that before September 11 of last year, education was our top priority. It was the issue that both Al Gore and George Bush agreed on in the election; not exactly how to do it, but they all agreed.

As my friend, the gentleman from Rochester, New York (Mr. REYNOLDS), has just said so well, Democrats and Republicans, rich and poor, all agree that it is very important for us to focus on the importance of education. That is why this House, in a bipartisan way, did pass the No Child Left Behind Act. It saw broad bipartisan support, and President Bush was able to sign it.

In the tax measure, we were able to focus attention on that very important group of Americans who have to deal with the challenge of paying for higher education. So what is it that we did? We were able to provide tax incentives for people to deal with the horrendous costs that exist today for higher education. So now we have moved ahead with legislation to deal with those at the lower end of the economic spectrum, those who are trying to focus on the very important primary and secondary education challenges that we have.

Now, it has been labeled "nothing but politics," and it cannot be signed into law. I will tell the Members, we can look at a wide range of legislation that began in this House with Members saying it would not become public law that in fact did become public law, I think all the way back to welfare reform measures in the middle part of the last decade.

I look at this tax measure that dealt with the issue of providing incentives for people to move with higher education costs. That measure, as Members will recall, we tried to move it. People said it would never be signed into law; but, in fact, as we repeatedly have proceeded with measures from this House, we have been able to see them become public law.

Similarly, this Republican majority is saying to those who are at the lower end of the economic spectrum, we want to make sure that they can get into that first rung of the ladder. We know that $3,000 would go a long way towards dealing with the challenge of making sure that books are available; and tuition, any tuition costs for those on the private side, although, as my friend, the gentleman from New York, has just said, 90 percent of those benefiting from this are in public schools; dealing with the issue of transportation; dealing with computer technology.

These are the kinds of costs that families face today, and we believe that single parents earning less than $20,000, married couples with incomes of $40,000 or less, they should be able to specifically benefit from this package. It is a program that is focused on ensuring that those who are not in the upper income brackets have an equal opportunity to get the best quality education possible.

That is why this is a very good piece of legislation. I commend my colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means for proceeding with this. I believe that it is specifically geared towards that. That is why we should keep it on that issue, so we should vote against a motion to recommit that my colleagues want to move on the other side of the aisle, want to move on that, which does not even relate to this issue of providing incentives for those who are seeking opportunities to improve their education.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage an "aye" vote for this rule and an "aye" vote for the very important underlying legislation, and opposition to any measure which would jeopardize the potential success of it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI), a valued member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from New York for yielding me the 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that there are so many reasons why we should vote "no" on this rule that it is really hard in the period of 4 minutes to really compress it, but I am going to do the very best I can.

First of all, this will cost $5 billion over the next 3 years. The reason it is only for the next 3 years is because it expires at the end of 3 years. As we know, we have not got any of the appropriations bills to the President's desk, even though the fiscal year will end in about 3 weeks.

The reason for it is because, rightfully, the appropriators are having a very difficult time trying to come up with bills that would stay within at least some reasonable budget confines.

That is because the tax bill that was passed last year, which incidentally was about $1.4 trillion, and 40 percent of it goes to the top 1 percent of the taxpayers, which basically makes about $1.1 billion a year on their tax returns; but the fact of the matter is that here we are now passing a bill that will cost $5 billion over the next 3 years, and we cannot move appropriation bills. That is somewhat odd, obviously.

But more importantly, this $5 billion will invade the Social Security trust fund. As we are getting close to the election on November 5, I think the American public is entitled to know who really cares about Social Security, making it ensured as a defined benefit plan. Obviously, by passing this bill, we are going to make that much more difficult. Senior citizens of America and those people who are concerned about being disabled or, obviously, survivors' benefits, should be very concerned about what we are doing on this particular piece of legislation.

But most importantly, this is bad legislation. No one gave it a lot of thought. We did not have a hearing on it. What is interesting is that one can get up to $3,000 a year on a tax credit, tax deduction, if one is an elementary or grammar school parent; so they go out and buy a flat screen television and say, we use this for our children's education, because we can put it up to a computer. A flat screen TV costs about $4,000; take $3,000 and use it for a deduction. We know they are going to do that. We know this is not really going to go for education. They can even purchase a car if they say they need a car in order to take the child to school in the morning, up to $3,000, of course.

This tax bill is ridiculous. It makes no sense at all. It is only a political document. In fact, we know the Senate is going to take it up because they have been stopping all this bad legislation we have been moving out of the House.

Obviously, I think, the Chair and the leadership is probably very happy about that. In fact, when I asked the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and I said, how are you going to make this fit within the budget, he said, it does not make any difference until the President signs it. Everyone on their side of the aisle chuckled because they know it is not going to become law.

We should also vote against this because there is one very important piece of legislation that should pass this year, in spite of the fact that we have Social Security problems, and others. That is school construction. We estimated that it would cost $127 billion over the next decade, $127 billion over the next decade just to repair and modernize the public schools throughout the United States. $127 billion.

mittee on Ways and Means, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), the ranking Democrat, over the years have put together a piece of legislation that would cost over the next 35 years $25 billion. That bill would go at least as a downpayment for school construction for all the public schools in America. This would be a great start.

I have a public school that I went to when I was in high school, C.K. McClatchy. I go there all the time. The roof is leaking. They cannot do anything about it. We need to pass a bill that makes sense, not bills for flat screen TVs or for automobiles. We need a bill that undoubtedly will help America's schoolchildren.

I would suggest a "no" vote on this rule.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART), my colleague on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the opposition to this legislation. I am trying to figure it out, but I do not understand it, because education is supposed to be a top issue for everybody, important for everybody. So a bill that says that if a family makes less than $40,000 a year they get a tax deduction of up to $3,000 for education expenses, it would seem to me that if education is an important issue, this is a bill that should be important to them.

We just heard the dear friend who spoke before say that one could even get a car paid for with this tax deduction. I am not sure about that because the school has to certify first that it is education-related, the cost, before they can get a tax deduction.

But let us say a family does have a situation where they do not have transportation, let us say, because in that school district, for whatever reason, there is no transportation. I do not think there is a situation like that; I do not think that a school is going to certify a car. But if there would be a need for that family to have transportation and that $3,000 tax deduction to solve that transportation problem, I think it is a worthy thing to do, like I also think it would be worthy to help a family with academic tutoring or books or uniforms or supplies, which clearly would be said by the school to be education related. That is what we are talking about here. We are talking about families who make $40,000 or less, helping them out with their needs.

Other things should be done as well on education. Sign us up, of course. By the way, we got together in a bipartisan fashion, which is the way in which we should work, and the way I thought we would work with this legislation, as well, when we are talking about education. We passed the legislation that was proposed initially by the President. It was modified here.

So I would ask my colleagues to realize that we are talking about education and we are talking about families who make less than $40,000, and to at least move the process forward, so hopefully, and whether or not the Senate acts, I do not know if the Senate is going to act, but I know education is important.

So I would say, let us move forward and let us improve upon the legislation if necessary, instead of minimizing it like we are hearing with the opposition.

This is a good bill. I commend the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) for it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I think we do realize that $40,000 is the limit on that. What we are saying is that is not an income that one would be paying taxes on and would allow them to get this refund.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS).

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague on the Committee on Rules for yielding time to me. I was hoping the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) would stay so I could help to educate my good friend, the gentleman from Florida. Perhaps he will hear it back in his office.

He began his remarks by indicating he does not understand. What part of, if you have no tax liability, this bill provides no relief, does the gentleman not understand, I say to the gentleman, or any of the other Members that rise in support of this measure?

I am in opposition to the closed rule for the so-called Back to School Tax Relief Act. As soon as I hear that the teachers in my district, along with teachers and parents throughout the country, are voicing strong opposition to an education bill, that bill gets my full attention.

The teachers of America have good reason, as do parents, to be wary of this particular measure. Under the pretense of offering tax benefits to low-income families, this charade, I repeat, charade, and footnote right there, this is not going to become the law this year, and if it is, that my colleagues on the other side are setting the stage for something that is going to pass at some point in the future, then say that; but do not give the impression here on this floor that this measure is about to become the law. It is not going anywhere.

As matters go, this tax relief bill could cost the American taxpayer close to $5 billion over the next 5 years. That said, what happens when we take that out of the Federal Treasury is there is no additional money for States and localities, so some of the same parents and some of the other parents who have no relief here at all are going to wind up paying more real estate taxes.

To add insult to injury, the actual educational benefits are negligible, and the actual number of families who might benefit is amazingly small. This bill will allow two-parent families with incomes of $40,000 or less and one-parent families with incomes of $20,000 or less, almost all of whom have no tax liability, to claim deductions for educational expenses in public, private, religious, or home schools.

The fact is that most families in this tax bracket clearly do not have a tax liability and would not benefit from this bill. I know that supporters of this bill claim that it provides educational tax benefits to all low-income families. The truth is that this bill would provide educational tax benefits to a few families in America who choose to send their children to private school. Make no mistake, this bill allows tuition deductions; and it is little more than a private school voucher bill. They can put a diamond tiara and a ball gown on an elephant; but when all is said and done, it is still an elephant.

The gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER) and the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) pointed to a measure that would help these parents. That is the measure offered by the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON) and the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), that would add to renovation and modification and new school construction.

If that is not something that is important, I do not know what is. I urge my colleagues to reject this rule.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would just point out as I am managing this rule that the discussion is on tax deductions, and my understanding, looking at Committee on Ways and Means, is that even the parliamentarian ruled that the school construction portion was not germane to the legislation that was brought forth out of the Committee on Ways and Means and to the Committee on Rules.

So while there may be great merit on school construction, and some of my colleagues here are saying that we cannot afford and should not do the tax deductions and yet have advocated school construction, there ought to be another place and time in the Committee on Ways and Means or some other vehicle in the body to bring forth the discussion on school construction.

This legislation before us is a rule bringing forth consideration by the entire body of the legislation introduced by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER) which deals with a tax deduction for K through 12.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER), the sponsor of the legislation.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, this rule is important. It is important because by its passage it will bring the underlying legislation to the floor. This is a bill that is about rich versus poor. And it is surprising to me to hear the opponents of the rule and the bill speak so viciously against the poor in America because that is what they are doing. See, if one is wealthy in America today, one gets a deduction for every donation made to a school whether it is public or private. But if one is poor, one does not get that deduction. Since most poor people do not itemize, they do not take the deduction.

This is an above-the-line deduction that we are proposing in the legislation which means poor families, those earning $20,000 or less on an individual return, 40,000 for a joint return, would receive a deduction on money they spend on education of their children which is a benefit they do not get today. It is a benefit that will amount to about $475 for a family in America. It is a benefit they do not have today. And the cost of educating their children is not a cost that is borne exclusively by government. It is a cost that is borne by families as well when they buy uniforms, when they buy band equipment, when they buy computers, books, school supplies, transportation; and, yes, for maybe 10 percent of those who are part of the beneficiaries of this bill, maybe tuition, maybe, at a private school.

Ninety percent of the benefit of this bill will result in more money being available for public schools, not private. And this is a benefit that occurs to poor families with children in schools and these families want to invest more money in their child's education. Those who say that $5 billion is too much to spend on the poor children of America, I say shame on you. We are going to squander more than that on every agency, department we can name, A, B, C, D departments down the street here.

But all we are talking about doing here is setting aside about $5 billion over 10 years so that poor families can afford to spend more money on their child's education, not on bridges, not on post offices in all our districts, not on new university projects, not on water projects, not on dams, not on agriculture research, but on education. I believe it is important. I believe it is one of our highest priorities, and I regret that there are people here who cannot agree with that. In fact, we agreed when we passed the budget because we built this fund, we built the $5 billion right into our own budget. And we have accommodated the spending that we are contemplating here. Let us just do it. Let us pass the resolution.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. WYNN).

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this rule as well as to the underlying bill. When we first listened to the bill and we listened to the gentleman who just spoke, this bill sounds appealing. It is aimed at the working class whom he calls the poor. It is designed to help them afford education, and we would think on first blush that that is good idea. But on closer examination what we find is this bill is really a very bad idea.

First of all, it is fiscally irresponsible. They do not want to talk about that, but the fact is for the same duration of this bill we will also be experiencing tremendous deficits in this country and this bill will only make that situation worse.

Second, we find this bill is very disingenuous. They tell us they are trying to help the working class poor, but in fact most of those people will not be eligible because this is a deduction, and if they have other deductions that do not have the requisite income levels, they will not get the benefit of this deduction. So do not believe that they are really helping the poor. This is basically an election year gimmick bill.

Third, the bill is very contradictory. In the No Child Left Behind bill, the appropriation, they have underfunded education by $7.2 billion. They are indeed leaving children behind.

Let us look specifically at special education. We made a commitment several years ago to fund 40 percent of special education costs for local school districts. We are only funding 18 percent. But now they have a new gimmick bill while they are not fulfilling the commitments they already made in the area of special education. I find that very disturbing.

They want to talk about the poor. Title I is specifically the program designed to help the poor. The No Child Left Behind bill calls for $16 billion in funding. But they actually only appropriate $11.3 billion. We are short $4.7 billion. About the same amount that they want to claim they can give back in their bill. Remember, most of the poor will not be eligible, but they will be shortchanged because we underfunded Title I.

After-school programs, certainly low income residents and students need after-school programs. They underfund after-school programs by half a billion dollars, but yet they come up with an election year gimmick bill.

As we will hear from the Democratic side, what we really need in poor communities is school modernization, technology, improved roofing, air conditioning. Young people come to me and say, We need air conditioning. It is 90 degrees and our building is not air-conditioned. That would really help the poor.

But at the end of the day what we find is this is a gimmick bill. They do not expect it to be signed into law. It is disingenuous. It suggests that people will get benefits when they are really not eligible. It is fiscally irresponsible. And it contradicts promises they have already made. There are abundant reasons why we should reject this bill and I urge my colleagues to do so.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDI).

Mr. TANCREDI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the opportunity to speak on behalf of this bill and to once again state the obvious, and that is, in fact, the poor will benefit.

I do not know how many ways we can put this. This is an above-the-line deduction that we are proposing. It does not matter about the deductions that they have. It is above-the-line. It will come to them regardless. It will, in fact, help the poor. I do not know how many ways there are to say that in order to, in fact, get people to understand the nature of an above-the-line deduction which is being proposed here.

Let us also talk about the possibility that this thing may not become law. Well, I do not know what will happen from this point on with this bill. My only responsibility is to determine how I should vote on this bill before me at this time and why. And I recognize that it may not become law. I recognize that there are many forces arrayed against it, mostly the forces of monopoly education, those people who say there is only one way to educate a child. It is our way or the highway; that the only money that can be possibly be spent on education is in the system we, the government, can control.

We know that that is where the real opposition is in this bill. It has nothing to do with the amount of money being spent. For heaven's sake, Members of the Committee on Ways and Means, Democratic Members of the Committee on Ways and Means have introduced 6 bills that I have in front of me that take an awful lot more money away from education than this even purports to, and this, of course, puts it into education. It is just not their kind of education. Not the education system that is run by the government that gets all of the money. It will get 90 percent of it. But a tiny little trickle may end up going to a private school and God knows we cannot have that. Why? Because we do not have control over that process.

Well, I tell you we should not. The only people that should have control over that process are the parents of the kids that are being sent to those schools. They are the ones who should make this determination as to where their kids are going to be educated, where the best educational experience can be obtained. We do not mind having that happen for people who are rich, for people who can any single day stand up and say I want my child in this district or in this school and I am willing and able to pay for it. We do not do that. Why do we do it to the poor?

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Washington State (Mr. McDERMOTT).

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule and to the bill which underlies it. I just came from the Committee on the Budget, on which I sit, and listened to Mr. Greenspan tell us about the chaos in our economy, and he is talking about a Congress that has abandoned fiscal discipline. Essentially what he said was this Republican Congress in this 40th act of the fiscal follies of 2001 and 2002 has absolutely decided to eat their desert before they eat their vegetables. You have been doing it for 2 solid years. You passed the tax cuts, but you cannot pass a budget. You have given all the goodies away and you cannot pass the budget. That is why we are not anywhere near completion here.

This private school voucher is just one more example of the same stuff. The President has clapped himself on the back, and all the Members have, about "we passed No Child Left Behind," and that promised an increase of 15 percent funding in education, but the President's budget only had 2.8 percent increase in spending. Why did you promise 15 percent and then the President puts out a budget for less than a fifth of that? That does not make any sense. You are leaving kids behind, and we are going to give you an opportunity to change your priorities.

This picture has on it some of what we want to do in the motion to recommit. You can take the same money that you are giving away and throwing out there for people to buy gym shoes and TVs and whatever they want as long as they say it is for education. That is all they have to do is say it is for education. You take that same money and you can do something for public schools. With $7 billion you can leverage $25 billion of construction.

I put these pictures up here because I want you to understand we are not talking about theoretical stuff. We are talking about drinking fountains, we are talking about broken steps, we are talking about rotten ceilings in schools. We send kids to those public schools and say, "Why do the teachers not teach them well? I think people ought to have a choice to go to a private school to get away from this." Because we will not put the money into something that makes real sense.

This voucher, when we questioned the people from Treasury and said what can one use this money for, it was appalling. You can do it for broadband access for your TV or maybe you do not have a TV; so because you want your computer to go through the TV, you can buy a TV, one of those nice flat-screen ones and you can deduct the whole thing. You can buy gym shoes, some of those Michael Jordan $100 gym shoes, because your kid has to take gym and that is related to gym. Babysitters or maybe a cab ride to school. The school says we are not going to have any buses and you have got to get your kid there any way you can. All you have got to do is call a cab and deduct it from your income tax.

If this makes sense when we are putting the children of the United States in these kinds of schools, this is San Diego, but I could bring some from Seattle, and I bet there is not a Member on this floor that could not bring pictures just like this from their district, and yet we have a bill. It has been in the Congress. It was introduced. It has 228 signatures. That is more than half the House of Representatives, and we cannot get the chairman to even have a hearing. Now tell me, are we going to leave any children behind? It is pretty obvious we are because we have to continue the tax giveaway follies. Vote no on the rule, vote yes on the motion to recommit, and vote no on the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) for yielding.

I rise in support of this underlying rule and in support of the underlying bill. This is the first full week of school in many areas of our country. In Florida, where I come from, they went back into school in August, but for millions of Americans things are really getting underway right now and they are being faced by significant costs.

Particularly I want to address the people who have their children in public school. Many of these families have to buy gym clothes, as the gentleman from Washington State (Mr. McDERMOTT) mentioned. Some of them have to pay yearbook fees, they have to pay fees for new software, lots of additional fees. I had one parent with two kids in public school tell me that they were out several hundred dollars in cheerleading fees and other fees. Obviously for people who have their children in private school, this is a much greater expense.

This body spoke and this body voted, and the Senate approved it and it was signed into law; and we allowed a tax deduction of $3,000 for higher education.

What this debate is really about is are we going to allow the same thing for K through 12 and why not? Why not? The gentleman from Washington State talked about putting more money into education for Washington. I have been here for 8 years now. When I got here, the education budget was $30 billion. What is it now, 48 billion or something like that?

I want to address this issue of school construction. We could probably get a bill out of this body, but one of the things that holds this issue up is there are a lot of people on that side of the aisle that want to mandate that any school construction funds adhere to Davis-Bacon union work requirements; and in the State of Florida, this is going to drive up school construction costs by 30 percent. Frankly, for us in Florida, we do not want Federal money if it has those kinds of strings attached; and that gets me to what really is the issue here.

We are trying to help families, and we are not trying to help rich families. This is targeted for the $20,000 to $40,000 range. We are specifically trying to help working families that have kids and have struggled making ends meet. Why should they send 30 cents to Washington for every 70 cents they spend on their kids' education? Give them the whole dollar to spend on their kids' education.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. THURMAN).

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from New York for yielding me the time, and I would just say to the last speaker that he is correct that we gave a $3,000 deduction for higher education. However, he also must know that that expires at the end of 2005. It is not a permanent tax part of this.

Secondly, I would say that it is kind of interesting to listen to some prior speakers who talked about the poor and who would get this. First, no single mother with an income more than $20,000 is going to be eligible because, by the way, $20,000 is the statutory income cutoff for noncouples.

Second, no single mother with less than a $20,000 income will benefit if she has significant child care expenses. The reason is that for every potential dollar of tax cut from a new K through 12 education deduction, she loses a dollar of benefit under the dependent care tax credit. The credit is nonrefundable so the usable credit is limited to the amount of tax liability prior to the credit if the liability is already as low as the credit or lower, which is the case for such a single mother; then reducing her tax liability with a new deduction just reduces the credit. There is no net gain.

I might point out that after reading all of this, one of the things I think the American people are very concerned about is how we make our Tax Code less complicated rather than more complicated, and this certainly is causing us to have more complication and for people to even have the ability to use this.

Third, even among mothers without dependent care expenses, for a single mother with two children to get a benefit, her income has to fit within a very narrow range of $19,250 to $20,000. A single mother, two children and a $19,250 income or less is not going to benefit because the child credit is only partly refundable and because her tax before credit is low. She is unable to use all of the $600 per-child credit, so her tax before credit is reduced by a new deduction; her usable child credits fall by that same amount.

So as my colleagues can see, there are some concerns as to who would be able to use this and particularly at those levels.

I also have to say that I always can tell when there is a bad bill because, quite frankly, the rule then governs the debate. Guess what. Today, we have a closed rule with no substitute allowed. Are we afraid to have debate in the U.S. Congress about issues that are of concern to the American public? I do not think the American public is concerned about debate. So why would we close the rule?

What we are going to have is an opportunity to at least take advantage of one area that they cannot take, and that is the motion to recommit; and in that motion to recommit, we are going to ask this Congress to look at what every State is asking for and, that is, funds for the ability to build schools. With that, let us take down this rule.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

In listening to my colleague from Florida, I looked at the number of families and kids who could potentially benefit from the education tax deduction in 2000. The State of Florida, the number of families is 722,518. The number of children is 1,283,971.

I would also say, and I cannot speak for the Committee on Rules, but I can talk about our precedent in the Committee on Rules, and I can speak for me as an individual. I want to remind the gentlewoman that there was no substitute brought before the Committee on Rules that could have been considered and would have been routinely added as a substitute consideration to come to the floor.

Then I will also point out that I have not seen any motion that has referred to school construction that has been made available to me as a member of the Committee on Rules or to anyone else that I have asked. So I want to make sure that my colleagues both on the floor and throughout the buildings clearly understand that the rule before us today says that it is a legislation, I will ask the gentleman from Colorado to speak on again, of a deduction, of $3,000 above the line for K through 12.

School construction may be a worthy subject. It is one that we know there are sponsors on both sides of the aisle. The Parliamentarian ruled that school construction would not be part of this as it was presented in the Committee on Ways and Means and was defeated on a party-line vote. There will be a future bill on construction, I am sure, because I have not seen it go away, but this does not address that.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT) will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, has the Parliamentarian made a decision on the amendment which is going to be offered later in the day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot respond with an anticipatory ruling or advisory opinion.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) is recognized.

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Florida.

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, let me ask this in the form of a question. It is my understanding, and I would like to be corrected if not, that in fact there was a substitute that was brought to the committee. My understanding is that it was out of order. But is it not customary, on occasion, that we have the opportunity to waive the rules?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Number one, it is my understanding the substitute was not germane. Number two, we usually do not waive the rules on germaneness.

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would continue to yield, is it my understanding that the rules were waived on this bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. We waived points of order for technical reasons.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. THURMAN).

Mrs. THURMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would just say to the gentleman, the number he has read back to me of the children and those who would have been affected by this piece of legislation, let me just say also to him that under America's Better Classroom Act, quite frankly the State of Florida would have received $1.1 billion in new additional dollars for classrooms. This could have given us some ideas of what we could have done with classroom size.

I would also say I watched after this body, and I thought we have a very good debate. We talked about education; we did a bipartisan bill. We all believed that the President was right in putting this bill of Leave No Child Behind. It was historic across the Nation. We watched people go around in a bipartisan way. I mean, we had the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) and others standing hand in hand; how wonderful this legislation was going to be.

I also remember the day that the debate took place, and the debate went something along the lines, this is a good piece of legislation if the money's there. Lo and behold, we get a budget proposal this year that cuts $8 billion. Instead of restoring dollars to the budget, for things like classroom size and other things, the fact of the matter is we are going to end up cutting $7 billion to give $5 billion to probably where very few people will be able to use this because of their other tax liabilities.

I would suggest to this body that if my colleagues are going to make promises and go out and talk about historic legislation, they ought to back it up with the money and quit playing tax breaks for a few.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, our last speaker is the bill's sponsor. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFER) to help us clearly see the intent of what he has sponsored in his legislation, because the debate on education has taken us in varied directions.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time, and I thank him for putting the final discussion here in the right context because the debate has drifted far away from the intended subject, and that subject is America's children who are in schools and primarily those who are poor.

I have always appreciated the gentlewoman from Florida for her candor, and I appreciate it again today because she really revealed the motivation behind many of the votes that will take place today. It is motivated by unrelated issues, about school construction, other bills; and unfortunately, if they succeed, the casualty in the outcome of that debate would be poor children in America.

The bill that precipitated the debate and brought the rule here is all about focusing on families that earn $20,000 per individual, $40,000 per married couple, and allowing them to deduct from their taxable income up to $3,000 of expenditures for costs associated with educating their children, for books, supplies, materials, tuition, transportation, those items that those families believe to be in the best interests of furthering their child's education.

I understand there are many here who have opposed and been in opposition of this idea because they do not trust these parents. They think they might buy flat screen TVs. Guess what, the Department of Education buys flat screen TVs. In fact, the Department of Education has a very bad record over the last several years when it comes to waste, fraud and abuse. We have investigated it. I did not see anybody over on that side of the aisle stand up saying, wait a minute, since they spent money on Cadillacs, flat screen TVs, have lost cash, hundreds of millions of dollars, let us not give them anymore. Nobody raised that argument. In fact, my colleagues' argument then was let us give them more money so they do not waste as much.

I tend to trust families and individuals to spend money right when it comes to their children, and I trust them more than I do government. That is just what I believe, and that is really what this debate is all about.

For those who believe that there is not really an appreciable benefit for families, they should just vote for it, because as my colleague pointed out, this costs $5 billion. That is $5 billion of children who stand to benefit from this legislation. Let us spend it on them rather on the bureaucracy, and let us vote for the rule.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to make two points. One is that we do trust American families on this side of the aisle. We trust them enough that we do not want to perpetrate a hoax on them this morning, which we think is exactly what is happening here, and to point out that had the gentleman from New York's (Mr. RANGEL) substitute been allowed and passed, that our State of New York would receive $2.5 billion in much needed construction money.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 208, nays 201, not voting 23, as follows:

Mr. TERRY changed his vote from “nay” to “yea.”

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 387 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Ms. Wanda Evans, one of his secretaries.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Ms. PELOSI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to inquire of the distinguished majority leader what the schedule is. Was that the last vote of the day, and how are we going to proceed?

I am pleased to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY).

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the House has completed its legislative business for the week. The House will next meet for legislative business on Tuesday, September 17, at 12:30 p.m. for morning hour and 2 o'clock p.m. for legislative business. I will schedule a number of measures under suspensions of the rules, a list of which will be distributed to Members' offices tomorrow. Recorded votes on Tuesday will be postponed until 6:30 p.m.

For Wednesday and the balance of the week, I have scheduled the following measures: H.R. 1701, the Consumer Rental Purchase Agreement Act, and H.R. 4687, the National Construction Safety Team Act.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I would like to inquire of the majority leader when he expects the bill that was just pulled to be rescheduled?

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her inquiry.

We do have some technical considerations. We will have to have some discussions among ourselves, the bill sponsor and the committee of jurisdiction. I will announce in ample time for everybody's consideration before we reschedule it again.

Ms. PELOSI. I would further like to inquire of the majority leader when the appropriations bills will come to the floor?

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentlewoman's concern on that. We wait upon the circumstances that allow us to bring our appropriations bills to the floor in a manner that is consistent with the budget passed by the House. We know this is a difficult circumstance for the House, in light of the fact that the other body has not passed a budget whatsoever and is seeking to spend anywhere from $9 billion to $19 billion beyond the President's request and the House budget. So we continue to work on these difficult problems.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I was particularly interested in the Labor, Health, Human Services and Education bill, when that would come to the floor, because in its present form it cuts $7 billion in education from the Leave No Child Behind bill that was passed, H.R. 1, with great fanfare early in the year. So we are very, very interested in the resolution and the debate on that bill.

Would that bill be coming up next week?

Mr. ARMEY. Again I want to thank the gentlewoman for the inquiry.

The Labor, Health and Human Services bill has always been a bill that this side of the aisle, the Republican majority, has given special attention to. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have more than doubled spending on that bill since 1996, going from $67 billion at that time, the first year in which we had majority jurisdiction, to $130 billion today. So we continue to have great emphasis on that bill. Indeed, we plan a 5.3 percent increase over the previous year; a 3.7 percent increase over last year for education and a 14.2 percent increase over last year for title I. So we continue to work with a sense of priority for that.

Obviously, we always understand that the very definition of "underfunded" in this town is the difference between what a bill's original sponsor seeks to authorize and what in fact is indeed appropriated. But we are continuing, as we have done, to increase appropriations in this bill and its jurisdiction more than other appropriations bills.

Ms. PELOSI. Reclaiming my time, I am glad the gentleman ended on that note, because further to remind our colleagues, the President's Leave No Child Behind bill, H.R. 1, the flagship bill on education that was passed by this body, had $7 billion in the President's bill for education, but in this bill cutting the investment in education leaves millions of children behind. So it is a high priority for us, and we look forward to that bill coming to the floor.

Would the distinguished majority leader tell us when the bankruptcy conference report would be scheduled?

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her inquiry.

It is particularly timely to talk about bankruptcy within the context where 3.7 percent increase and a 14.2 percent increase is considered a cut. That is exactly the kind of thinking that leads to bankruptcy dilemmas across the country. The bankruptcy bill, too, is an extremely important bill. We intend to do so.

Unfortunately, the bill is inflicted by a totally extraneous provision having to do with abortion put in by the other body. That has made it very difficult for Members who have a commitment on both of these two very important moral issues to reconcile their conflicts between that.

Unfortunately, we risk this bill's passage by virtue of the kind of extraneous riders that are all too commonplace in the other body. This body, being the more disciplined and responsible body, will, as it many times must do, find a way to come to terms with that irresponsibility in the legislative process, and as soon as we have found that way, I promise we will bring that bill to the floor.

Ms. PELOSI. Is the gentleman referencing the provision in the bill that was put in by the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE), from the gentleman's own party?

Mr. ARMEY. I appreciate the gentlewoman's inquiry.

The gentlewoman also understands it is contrary to the rules of the House for me to mention Senator SCHUMER by name, and I would never do that.

Ms. PELOSI. And the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE).

Mr. Leader, can we assume that since here we are, it is 20 after 12 on Thursday, we are in the middle of a great economic uncertainty in our country, America's seniors are clamoring for prescription drug benefits, we need to invest more in education, we have a list of priorities that the American people are concerned about, including their pension security, we came in just the other night, we are going out at 20 after 12 on Thursday and there will be no votes tomorrow, is that our understanding? We finished our business for the week?

Mr. ARMEY. Again, if the gentlewoman will yield, I appreciate so much the gentlewoman's frustration. We passed investment security over to the other body in August. We passed the education bill. We passed the prescription drug bill. We passed the homeland security bill.

We in this body are stuck with watching these bills languish in the other body as we await any kind of competent action from the other body. As soon as they can manage to pass any of these bills and get to conference on these bills, we would be willing to sit down and work on these bills, and I promise you we will bring them back for completion.

The gentlewoman is absolutely correct. All of this is too important to the people of this Nation for the other body to continue to dillydally.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I think that if there is a person out there who has lost their pension or a senior making a decision about how much of a dosage you are able to afford to take or whether you can even afford to take any prescription drug over purchasing food, or if your child is going to a substandard school and you want a better investment, and the list goes on and on, you would think that what we were doing here is irrelevant, especially when we are not even here. We are missing-in-action on some of the struggles of the American people.

Will the gentleman inform us whether we will have votes next Friday?

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the gentlewoman's inquiry.

Of course, all of these concerns are exactly why our pension bill was passed out of this body, as I said, last April.

Whether or not we are able to have votes on Friday will depend upon the appropriators, particularly those appropriators that must reconcile themselves against the excesses of the other body. But we will try to get these bills to the floor, and I will announce as early as I can whether or not there will be votes on Friday.

Ms. PELOSI. So it is our understanding we are leaving at 20 after 12 on Thursday, coming back at 6:30 on Tuesday, and we may be out next Friday?

Mr. ARMEY. If the gentlewoman will yield, the incredible thing, Mr. Speaker, is that even keeping these hours, we get three times as much work done as is done in the other body.

Ms. PELOSI. Our standard must be the standard we set for the American people, and we cannot hide behind anyone else's schedule. We have leadership that we can take ourselves to meet the needs of the American people.

I thank the distinguished majority leader for the information, and, as always, his gracious presentation.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The Chair would remind Members that references to the Senate or to Senators are closely circumscribed by the rules and inappropriate references must be avoided.

HOOR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT FROM FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 2002, TO TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 2002

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Friday, September 13, 2002, it adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Tuesday, September 17, 2002, for morning hour debates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

LAYING ON THE TABLE CERTAIN RESOLUTIONS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following resolutions be laid on the table:

H. Res. 500;

H. Res. 501;

H. Res. 506; and
H. Res. 508.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CONTINUATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN TERRORIST ATTACKS—
MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC.
NO. 107-261)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on International Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1622(d), provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent to the Federal Register the enclosed notice, stating that the emergency declared with respect to the terrorist attacks on the United States of September 11, 2001, is to continue in effect for 1 year. Proclamation 7463, Declaration of National Emergency by Reason of Certain Terrorist Attacks, was published in the Federal Register on September 18, 2001 (66 Fed. Reg. 48199).

The terrorist threat that led to the declaration on September 14, 2001, of a national emergency continues. For this reason, I have determined that it is necessary to continue in effect after September 14, 2002, the national emergency with respect to the terrorist threat.

GEORGE W. BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 12, 2002.

WELCOMING BULGARIAN PRESIDENT
GEORGI PARVANOV TO

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, I welcomed Bulgarian President Georgi Parvanov to Capitol Hill, along with Ambassador Elena Poptodorova and Foreign Minister Solomon Passy. Joining me in this meeting were the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER) and the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN), who are two members of the newly formed Bulgaria Caucus, also cochaired by the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER).

The Bulgarian caucus was created to spread awareness in America about Bulgaria's strategic location and critical assistance in the war on terrorism. Members of the Bulgaria Caucus are also strongly committed to helping Bulgaria gain admittance to NATO this November.

President Parvanov presented proclamations to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER) and I to honor the creation of the Bulgaria Caucus. The presidential proclamation affirms "Bulgaria is committed to standing by the United States in the war on terrorism for the long haul," and that the leaders of Bulgaria are looking forward to working with members of the Bulgaria Caucus to further interest and awareness in America about Bulgaria.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WILSON of South Carolina). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

SADDAM'S VIOLATION OF U.N.
RESOLUTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the wake of the remarks by the President of the United States before the United Nations, words that resonated not only around this Nation but around the world, to respectfully repeat the question the President asked that august and historic body today: Will the United Nations choose to be relevant on the planet Earth?

As the President described, Saddam Hussein, the dictator of Iraq, has systematically and continually violated 16 United Nations resolutions over the past decade. The United Nations, for incomprehensible reasons, has chosen to retreat in the face of Hussein's audacity.

Mr. Speaker, we must learn the lessons of history. Over 60 years ago, Neville Chamberlain retreated in the face of tyranny in Central Europe when he returned to the people of England and held aloft a sheet of paper, an agreement of peace with the dictator of Germany, and pledged that he had achieved peace in our time.

For the past decade, the United Nations has repeated the mistakes of the past. President Bush demonstrated by his speech in the United Nations that he will not play the role of a modern-day Chamberlain, but he has chosen to play the role of Churchill. As the President said today, Saddam has made the case against himself. A dictator who routinely murders his own people, harbors terrorists, develops weapons of mass destruction is a threat to the civilized world.

President Bush has made the case for military action against Iraq, and it is now time for the United Nations to fully support regime change in that nation and for that people.

Iraq has refused weapons inspections for almost 4 years. Mr. Speaker, 4 years is 4 years too long. Are we to believe that Saddam Hussein stopped developing biological and chemical weapons and his pursuit of nuclear capability at the exact moment he prevented weapons inspections from going forward? As the President said memorably today to the United Nations, logic and common sense scream otherwise.

Are we willing to gamble, as the President asked, the lives of hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of people on the possibility that Saddam Hussein can be trusted, or is it more reasonable to assume that when that dictator attains a nuclear weapon, that he will be prepared to use it?

Saddam Hussein has already used weapons of mass destruction. A nuclear capability is simply the next and logical macabre step. As the President said today, this is a gamble that opponents of military action are taking in the world. It is a gamble that I and many in this institution, as the debate ensues in the weeks and months ahead, I pray will not be willing to take.

Mr. Speaker, military conflict is a serious business. There is not a night that I do not go into my 11-year-old son's room late, pull up the covers and brush back his hair, that I am not aware of the cost of war. But I must say today, the risk of inaction against this malevolent dictator, who has flaunted the resolutions of the civilized world, is greater than the risks of action.

The United Nations, as the President said memorably today, Mr. Speaker, was designed to be able to respond to threats from dangerous dictators who threaten the peace of the world. I say again that question which the President asked today. The United Nations must now choose whether it will be relevant on planet Earth.

If they choose against relevance, as the President was clear today, let the world be assured that by this Congress and its war powers authorizing our Commander in Chief, the United States and its courageous allies will not choose irrelevance; we will choose justice. We can seek the safety and security of our people and the people of the civilized world.

ELECTIONS IN KASHMIR

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise on the House floor this afternoon to express my deep concerns regarding the upcoming elections in Kashmir, which begin on September 16.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to first make it clear that Kashmir is a state within India, which is the largest democracy in the world. Given that India has operated under the traditions of democracy since independence, I am confident that Indian officials and their electoral commission are doing everything possible to ensure that the elections proceed under free and fair circumstances.

In fact, this week myself and some of my colleagues who are members of the India Caucus met on a bipartisan basis. I should say, with the external minister, Sinha; and he told us very dramatically that the Indian Government, together with the electoral commission, are doing everything possible to make sure that these elections are held in free and fair circumstances. They have learned some of the lessons from the past about how to improve the voter turnout and to make sure that violence is not committed against those who would choose to exercise their right to vote.

However, my concern stems not only from increased infiltration of terrorists at the Kashmiri line of control, but also from the surge of violence in the Kashmir region by Islamic fundamentalists, whose primary purpose is to thwart the elections in Kashmir.

It is no coincidence that the new wave of infiltration at the border and the specific violence aimed at candidates running in Kashmir are occurring now just days prior to the beginnings of the election. On a near-daily basis for over a year, we have been witnessing cross-border terrorism in Kashmir that has led to countless murders of Indian army officials and innocent civilians.

This leads me to believe that there is very little possibility that infiltration by Islamic militants at the Kashmir line of control has subsided, even though President Musharraf of Pakistan pledged that infiltration would decrease several months ago. Mr. Speaker, increased cross-border activity, augmented by targeted attacks against those running in the elections, and President Musharraf's calling the elections a sham, are cause for serious alarm.

Just yesterday, it was reported that a candidate, a Kashmiri state government minister, along with seven others, was killed by militants. This was the second murder of a candidate in less than a week and is the most recent addition to a string of murders by militants that have killed 40 political workers in the past several weeks.

Militants have vowed to escalate violence prior to the election in an effort to disrupt the elections, and they go so far as to say that they will attempt to kill anyone who participates.

Mr. Speaker, unless there is a clear directive from the Pakistani President to the militants to end this violence surrounding the elections, and an acknowledgment from President Musharraf that these elections are not to be interfered with, and that they should proceed free and fair, it is unclear to me what type of outcome there will be between now and the conclusion of the elections. The elections go, Mr. Speaker, from September 16 until sometime in October.

I would urge President Musharraf of Pakistan to take a leadership role and to ensure India that the elections can take place without any threat of violence. I urge the Bush administration to put more pressure on Musharraf to end cross-border infiltration and not condone interference at the polls in Kashmir.

Mr. Speaker, I mention that when the Indian external minister, Mr. Sinha, was here, he spoke to our Secretary of State, Mr. Powell, and asked him to do whatever he could to put pressure on Musharraf to make sure that the elections in Kashmir are not interfered with.

But, of course, the concern is whether Musharraf is going to carry through. He has to be made to uphold his commitments to ending terrorism, and the first step he can take is to do everything in his power to ensure that cross-border terrorism into Kashmir ceases and that the elections in Kashmir take place freely and fairly, without the threat of violence to the candidates or Kashmiri voters.

A TRIBUTE TO CONNELLY SPRINGS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BALLENGER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, let me just say, nestled halfway between Raleigh and Asheville in North Carolina is a little town called Connelly Springs. It is a small town built around an old stagecoach stop which now serves railroad passengers.

Named for its healthful spring waters, Connelly Springs was incorporated in 1920; but due to taxes, licenses, fines, and other onerous government impositions, residents decided to repeal the town charter in 1933.

As time passed, residents needed a water supply system as local wells became less productive. Residential roads needed paving, and the State only paved highways. To address these community needs, a group of citizens petitioned the State legislative bodies to allow a vote on reincorporation; and in 1989, 266 out of the 400 town voters approved the effort.

Amazingly, the first government decided a nickel per hundred dollar property tax would cover the cost of government. City offices were established in the old filling station with a volunteer clerk to handle the details. In addition, six volunteer council members would set town policy.

The council did an outstanding job meeting the community's needs. When two larger towns on either side of Connelly Springs decided to run a large water line connecting those two, the town of Connelly Springs' council realized the lines would pass near the northern boundary of the new town. They decided to go into the deal for $200,000 paid over 20 years.

The plan worked beautifully. With several backhoes and other equipment to aid in the installation, Connelly Springs installed the water lines and became the first North Carolina self-help program member whose local residents provided the time and the resources to install their own water lines.

With the aid from their Rensselaerville Institute and the Appalachian Regional Commission, a $60,000 loan from the Ford Foundation, and local funds, the town reached the necessary projected cost of $282,000.

Three years ago, I shoveled a little dirt to prepare the land for a new town hall. This September 7, I helped cut the ribbon to open the finished town hall. The upper floors contain offices and the council chamber, and the lower floor will be a community center for all local groups to use whenever they need it.

We ate hot dogs and hamburgers to celebrate the grand opening. It is all paid for, and they have money in the bank. In all my life, I have never seen a more dedicated group of citizens who manage their efforts and money so carefully. I only wish I had some of that dedication in Raleigh, North Carolina, and also in Washington, D.C.

HONORING CONGRESSIONAL STAFF AND GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday our Nation and this House paid a fitting tribute to those who lost their lives on September 11, to the heroic rescuers, and to their families.

Today, I would like to take just a moment to honor another group of people who serve this Nation in a less dramatic way, but who are heroes in their own right and in their own quiet ways.

Last year, just 1 day after our Nation came under attack, and this very building was among the targets, the men and women who work here in this building, in our offices and in countless other government offices throughout this land, came right back in to work to serve this great Nation. When they came in to work on that September 12 morning, they knew then and they have known each and every day since then that they work in a potential target.

Scarcely a month later, they then faced a new challenge when anthrax entered our buildings, and for some of our staff, entered their bodies. The Capitol Police, the janitors and maintenance workers, the grounds crews, the people who serve food, the secretaries, the Parliamentarians, the clerks, the young pages, our legislative and our committee staff, our field and case-workers, and all the other dedicated and courageous people who make this place and our government run all deserve our thanks and our praise.

With tears in their eyes, with sadness and with fear in their hearts, but with indomitable courage they came right back to work to serve this country we all love.

A year has passed now, and the immediate danger may have been diminished; but it remains in our awareness. Still, our staffs and the rest of the employees come to work, and in doing so, they serve our country.

In these times, this takes courage. So, and for that courage, I am grateful and this country is deeply fortunate.

HONORING OFFICER CRYSTAL D. SHEFFIELD

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CUMMINGS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to pay tribute and honor Crystal D. Sheffield, a Baltimore City police officer who was killed in the line of duty while coming to the aid of a fellow officer on August 21, 2002. She was the city's first female officer ever to die in the line of duty.

Following a family tradition of public service, Officer Sheffield became a Baltimore City police officer in 1999, joining 3 family members already on the police force. Officer Sheffield was raised in Baltimore and loved her city. She wanted to give back to Baltimore and the community she loved. She worked the midnight shift in the western district of Baltimore, which is one of the more dangerous districts.

I had the opportunity to attend Officer Sheffield's wake and funeral services a few weeks ago. It was a moving ceremony with more than 300 people in attendance. Political officials, ordinary citizens, police officers and firefighters from Baltimore, the State of Maryland and other jurisdictions were among the attendance. Many people approached the family, telling them stories of how Officer Sheffield helped them with a problem. The testimonial showed how much she was loved and will be missed.

She worked the western district, which was near my house, and I got a chance to know her. It is interesting to note that when told of her tragic death, some of my neighbors simply wept. Not only was Officer Sheffield a dedicated police officer, she was also a dedicated wife and mother. She is survived by her husband, Lt. William Sheffield, a Baltimore City firefighter, and her son, Darian. It was said that she wanted to be a role model for her son so she worked hard, building a wonderful reputation of being dependable and a great police officer who could easily resolve conflicts. Officer Sheffield could often be found at her son's school, talking to his teachers and encouraging him to excel.

Police officers work and put their lives at risk for all of us. Like all police officers, Officer Sheffield took an oath to protect and to serve. She was simply doing her job. Officer Sheffield did not know that her next call would be her last call, but she lost her life going to the aid of a fellow officer. That was the type of officer and the type of person Officer Sheffield was.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to pay special tribute to Officer Crystal Sheffield, a real American hero and a role model for us all. I extend my condolences to the family, friends and colleagues of Officer Sheffield, and my thanks for a job well done.

VACATION OF SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the 5-minute special order of Mr. JONES of North Carolina requested on September 9, 2002 is vacated.

There was no objection.

DROUGHT AID THROUGH THE FARM BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor today to discuss a very pressing and most distressing issue in the Great Plains States and much of the mountain West; and as can be seen by the map here, the drought map, we are currently experiencing a drought across the United States that affects roughly 45 percent of the land mass of the country.

In a normal year we can expect drought in maybe 10 percent or 15 percent of the country. And you can see by the severe brown marks and the red marks that the drought is not only extensive, it is extreme.

These are areas where essentially all the pastures are gone. The cattlemen have no feed left for the winter. They have had to sell off their herd in many cases because there is no way that they can feed their cattle. And as we have had the glut on the cattle markets, prices have declined and a great many cattlemen have taken huge losses, so we are seeing tremendous distress in the livestock industry, particularly in the cattle industry.

Also, what we have found is those who have raised crops have experienced a similar difficulty. The dry land crops are totally gone in all of those areas that are red and brown. And, of course, this has caused huge economic distress. Even those areas that are irrigated have lost substantially because one cannot run a center pivot fast enough to keep up with the drought. In many areas they have lost their ditch water. The water has been cut off because the rivers are dry. There is no water available. So even irrigated crops are severely impacted.

So some have said, well, what we have to do is take the money out of the new farm bill because there is a huge amount of money in there and just take it out of there. We have not been able to figure out how we can get enough money out of the farm bill without destroying the farm bill that will undo this huge problem. So as a result, the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. THUNE), the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN) and myself have introduced legislation that we think addresses this problem.

At the present time we are estimated to lose $1.4 billion in the State of Nebraska alone. Kansas also is roughly $1.4 billion and the other States that we see here will have similar losses, so it is a huge loss. The thing that we are concerned about is if there were a hurricane that affected that amount of land mass in the United States, or if we had a wildfire that burned up that much area in the United States, or if we had a tornado that affected that much, or a flood or whatever, we would immediately have assistance. But a drought occurs slowly over time and it is not quite as visible, but the economic devastation is every bit as great as what these other disasters might have.

So we need help and we need it now. We cannot take the money out of the farm bill because there simply is not that much there. So what we have proposed is another solution, and that is that we look at this, at the spending currently in the farm bill.

We will see in the heavy blue line here what has been budgeted for the farm bill in the year 2002, roughly $19 billion. Yet, recent projections by CBO indicate that roughly $13 billion will be spent this year. So it is a $6 billion shortfall. And, you say, why is that? Well, the reason is because the drought, the drought has reduced production of corn, soybeans, milo, sorghum, rye, many other crops by 10 to 15 percent. Therefore, the price has risen. So as the price has risen, there is no need for government payments, no countercyclical payment, no loan deficiency payments. So as a result we will see a savings, so to speak, of roughly $6 billion, and the reason for the saving, if you want to call it that, is simply because we have had a drought. And those people who have been affected most by the drought, who have been hurt by the drought, will not receive any payments.

What we are proposing is we take this shortfall, this $5 billion or whatever, and allocate it to emergency drought assistance. It does not break the budget. It falls within what has already been budgeted. This contrasts sharply with what the other body has proposed. They want to add roughly $6 billion of new spending. We think this is fiscally responsible. We think it certainly addresses the issue that is going on in the West and other parts of the country, even in the southeastern part of the country. But the main thing we are trying to drive home is this is critical and this is not emergency spending. It is not because of low prices. It is because of natural disaster. It is disaster spending which we need badly.

Mr. Speaker, I urge careful consideration of my colleagues to this dilemma that we are now facing.

LESSONS LEARNED FROM SEPTEMBER 11

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, as we continue our reflection on September 11, I wanted to take a moment to enter into the RECORD a piece written by the Speaker Pro-tempore of the Florida House of Representatives, Sandra Murman from Tampa, Florida, and it goes like this:

"When I hear the date September 11, images immediately flood my mind. I see the plane hit the second tower. I see the Pentagon on fire and I can hear the sickening crunch as the towers fall while throngs of people run to escape the thick gray cloud. I also remember the utter horror I felt when I realized this was not simply one plane off course but rather a planned attack. This was our generation's Pearl Harbor. But unlike Pearl Harbor, terrorists hijacked planes full of innocent civilians and crashed those planes into buildings filled with more innocent civilians. On that day we saw the face and felt the hand of evil, but we also saw extraordinary goodness through the lives of heroic Americans in Washington, New York, and a Pennsylvania field.

"As we gather here to mark the one-year anniversary of the attack, I would like to share my thoughts on what I have learned since last September," she writes.

"Lesson one: I have been reminded that life is short and precious. That argument with a spouse, the concern over which car to purchase on September 10, suddenly seemed so petty after the attacks. As I evaluated my own life, I realized what mattered most was my relationship with God, my family, loved ones and community. Everything I do now needs to have meaning, purpose, and positively impact those around me.

"Lesson two: Before September 11 we knew we had enemies and lived in a dangerous world, but September 11 we discovered that organized groups of terrorists had both the desire and the ability to create devastation within our country. We can no longer take this security for granted. There is our new reality.

"Lesson three: On September 11 America showed that we are still a nation of heroes. Incredible courage was shown by the New York City firefighters who slapped on their gear and charged into the burning buildings to help victims escape. New York lost 343 of its finest that day. Hundreds of workers in the World Trade Center helped one another escape. I remembered hearing the story of one man who, instead of escaping Tower Two, chose to remain behind with a disabled colleague who could not make it down the stairs. They both perished that day. And, of course, we all heard the story of Flight 93, those extraordinary men and women who said their good-byes to their loved ones, prayed the Lord's Prayer, and with the words of 'Let's roll,' charged the cockpit to save countless lives in Washington, D.C.

"In an instant these ordinary Americans became legends. All the sacrifices on September 11 have left us speechless with gratitude.

"Lesson four: We have the responsibility to ensure that the lives lost on September 11 were not in vain. We were attacked because of who we are. The principles on which our country was founded, freedom, equality and the dignity of the individual, are a threat to Islamic extremists. They view open, democratic societies as the enemy and want to create a society where there is no religious freedom and no civil liberty. As defenders of liberty we stand in their way.

"At this very moment our servicemen and women are defending the cause of freedom throughout the world. Here on the home front we, too, have a responsibility. Our defense involves upholding the values of America. We have a civic duty to participate in our democratic institutions. We have a responsibility to instill in our children a love of liberty, a love of country, the difference between right and wrong and the willingness to make sacrifices in this ongoing struggle between freedom and tyranny.

"Let me close by reading President Bush's September 20th speech to the Nation:

"'Great harm has been done to us. We have suffered great loss. And in our grief and anger we have found our mission and our moment. Freedom and fear are at war. The advance of human freedom, the great achievement of our time, and the great hope of every time, now depends on us. Our Nation, this generation, will lift the dark threat of violence from our people and our future. We will rally the world to this cause by our efforts, by our courage. We will not tire. We will not falter. We will not fail.

"'Thank you. May God bless you all.'"

Sandra Murman, majority leader of the Florida House of Representatives.

POLITICAL SPEECHES IN CHURCHES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, it is kind of ironic that I would be following the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY) as he was paying tribute to those who have lost their lives and their families, and then he talked about our military who today are in Afghanistan defending the freedoms that we all enjoy, and our way of life.

My purpose today in asking for this time is that I have put in legislation, House bill 2357. It is called the Houses of Worship Political Speech Protection Act. I believe that the strength of this country depends on our spiritual leaders having the freedom to talk about issues of the day, whether they be the moral issues of the day or the biblical issues of the day or the political issues of the day, quite frankly.

When I started looking into this legislation and doing the research and the history on why there was a law in the Tax Code that would somehow prevent certain political speech, and the more I looked into it, the more concerned I became because I believe sincerely that the first amendment right of all the American people and all the groups in this country, I mean, must be protected and has been for years and years by men and women who have served this Nation and many who gave their lives for America.

As I looked into why there was some type of political speech restriction on our churches and synagogues and mosques, I found out that in 1954, Lyndon Baines Johnson, United States Senator from Texas, and actually the majority leader of the Senate, had the H.L. Hunt family opposed to his reelection. At the time, the H.L. Hunt family had two think tanks that were conservative in nature and they were not churches, but they were 501(c)(3)-type status.

What Mr. Johnson did on the Senate side, he introduced an amendment to a revenue bill that was never debated. The amendment was never debated, and the Republican minority at that time accepted the Johnson amendment on what they call "unanimous consent," or UC. Basically, what the Johnson amendment did was to put a gag order on any type of political speech by a preacher or priest or rabbi; and I would like to explain that just a little bit for practical reasons.

It happened in the 3rd District of North Carolina, which I have the privilege to represent, that a priest in a Catholic church was asked by a parishioner, a friend of mine named Jerry Schill, if the priest would just say at the end of the homily, or the sermon, on Sunday that George Bush is pro-life, not really anything more than that, but just that one statement. The priest said to Jerry Schill, "Jerry, I cannot do that. If I do, I might be violating the 501(c)(3) status of this church and we would lose that status."

Mr. Speaker, I decided that, working with other Members, including the Chair, that I would introduce the legislation to return the first amendment right to our churches and synagogues and mosques in this country. That was taken away primarily by one man who, in his arrogance being Senator Johnson, wanted to stifle the speech of opposition.

I must tell my colleagues, with a great deal of humility, that we have 130 cosponsors of this legislation. We have recently picked up three or four from the Democratic side, which I am very grateful for. In addition, we recently have received a letter of support from a former Member of the House who is a Democrat, and the former Member's name is Reverend Floyd Flake.

I served my first term with Dr. Flake, and he was a man that we all respected for his integrity and his honesty, and Dr. Flake decided to leave the House and go back to his church. It is the Greater Allen Cathedral of New York; and quite frankly, I found out after we put this legislation in that Reverend Flake had received a letter of reprimand from the IRS, Internal Revenue Service. They have the authority because the Johnson amendment went on the revenue bill, and Reverend Flake had at that time candidate Al Gore in his church and after Presidential candidate Gore was speaking, Reverend Flake got up behind him and said to his congregation that, "I think this is the right man to lead this Nation." That was a violation. So, therefore, instead of losing the status, he was given a warning.

I contacted Reverend Flake, and he wrote me a letter that I want to submit for the RECORD, but I want to read just one paragraph. It says: "I praise God for the stand you have taken to defend the first amendment right of houses of worship. It is unjust that churches and clergymen and women are unfairly targeted when they exercise their rights as American citizens."

Mr. Speaker, I want to read a couple more letters that we have received in support of this legislation. One is from Rabbi Daniel Lapin. He heads a group called Toward Tradition. He is a wonderful man of God. I have heard him on the radio several times, and I am going to submit his letter for the RECORD with the Chair's permission. I will read just two paragraphs: "I hope that Congress and the President would join your campaign to revive one of the most basic principles of the American founding, the freedom of unhindered political speech." That is Rabbi Lapin.

In addition, a letter from D. James Kennedy. Dr. Kennedy says, and this is the Coral Ridge Ministries, "In a culture like ours, which sometimes seems on moral life support, the voice of the church in her message of reconciliation, virgin hope is more important now than ever before. Yet the current law enacted by Lyndon Johnson has effectively silenced the church. We are a poorer Nation for it." D. James Kennedy in support of H.R. 2357.

Then James Dobson sent us his letter. I will submit the letters again with the Chair's permission: "I was encouraged by your work on H.R. 2357, for I have been troubled by the increasing pressure on churches and other religious organizations to desist from speaking out on the moral issues of our day."

A letter of support from the former ambassador to the Vatican, Ray Flynn, also former mayor of Boston, Massachusetts.

The last letter I want to read is from the Southern Baptist Convention, Dr. Richard Land; and Mr. Speaker, I would also with the Chair's permission like to submit the entirety of this letter for the record, also. The paragraph I would like to read, Mr. Speaker, is this: "We endorse your bill because we believe it provides an appropriate barrier to hinder the government from seeking to define the mission of the church. If it should become law, we will encourage Baptist churches to speak freely on the issues of the day as we believe they should already but to refrain from formally endorsing candidates."

The reason I wanted to close with that letter is because this legislation that we have 130 cosponsors on is not anything more or less but to return the freedom of speech to the churches should the churches and synagogues decide that that they would like to talk about such issues of the day.

I include those letters for the RECORD at this point.

THE GREATER ALLEN CATHEDRAL
OF NEW YORK,
Jamaica, NY, June 24, 2002.

Hon. WALTER JONES,
House of Representatives, Cannon House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN JONES: I am grateful that we were finally able to connect by telephone regarding H.R. 2357, the Houses of Worship Political Speech Protection Act.

I praise God for the stand that you have taken to defend the First Amendment Right of Houses of Worship. It is unjust that churches and clergymen/women are unfairly targeted when they exercise their rights as American citizens.

I am pleased to offer my wholehearted support with sincere prayer for passage of this important and liberating legislation.

Sincerely,
Hon. Rev. FLOYD H. FLAKE, D.Min.,
Pastor, U.S. Congressman, Retired.

TOWARD TRADITION,
Mercer Island, WA, October 12, 2001.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN JONES: Thank you for the courageous leadership you so consistently demonstrate along with your steadfast commitment to the founding principles of our blessed country.

I feel honored to stand shoulder to shoulder with you and to offer my full support for H.R. 2357, "The Houses of Worship Political Speech Protection Act," which will revive every American's Constitutional right to free speech in all houses of religious assembly.

Along with most Americans of faith, both Christian and Jewish, I heartily applaud your efforts and determination in promoting this crucial legislation. You perceptively recognize that this long overdue legislation is important to all religious faiths and all political parties.

Use of taxation to influence religious activity is unarguably a violation of every American's First Amendment rights, and H.R. 2357 is a step in the right direction. I hope that Congress and the President will join your campaign to revive one of the most basic principles of the American Founding, the freedom of unhindered political expression.

May our friendship continue to flower in an America moving ever closer back to our founding principles, or as I like saying, Toward Tradition.

I should mention that I am honored to be speaking this coming Tuesday night at the Adam's Mark in Charlotte for the NC Family Policy Council. I am sure you know those good people.

God bless you, your family and your efforts.

Best wishes to Joanne.

Sincerely,
Your friend,

RABBI DANIEL LAPIN,
President.

CORAL RIDGE MINISTRIES,
Fort Lauderdale, FL, September 20, 2001.

Congressman WALTER JONES,
Cannon House Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR WALTER: Congratulations on your efforts thus far in advancing HR 2357 (The Houses of Worship Political Speech Protection Act). I am very encouraged to hear about the number of cosponsors you have received and hope a great many more will join you in the days ahead.

As you know, I feel this legislation is a vitally important step in reversing a long-standing injustice, whereby free speech seems to be protected everywhere, except in the pulpits of our churches and other houses of worship. In culture like ours, which sometimes seems on moral-life support, the voice of the church and her message of reconciliation, virtue, and hope is more important now than ever before. Yet the current law (enacted by Lyndon Johnson) has effectively silenced the church. We are a poorer nation for it.

I strongly encourage our friends in the House leadership and Chairman Thomas to schedule early hearings on this important piece of legislation. I hope you will communicate these sentiments to them on my behalf.

Walter, I commend you for your forthright and courageous stance in taking on this issue. When this bill becomes law, future generations of Americans may view it—and rightly so—as an important milestone in the reformation of our culture.

Sincerely in Christ,

FOCUS ON THE FAMILY,

Colorado Springs, CO, August 21, 2001.

Hon. WALTER B. JONES,

U.S. House of Representatives, Cannon House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE JONES: It was a pleasure to talk with you over the phone recently. I was encouraged by your work on HR 2357, for I've been troubled by the increasing pressure on churches and other religious organizations to desist from speaking out on the moral issues of our day. It's heartening to know that the Lord has raised up those who, like yourself, are willing to take a stand and defend First Amendment rights. Our prayers will be with you and your staff as you attempt to move this important bill through the House of Representatives. I was pleased to hear that you've already received a promising response from many of your fellow congressmen.

Thanks again for taking the time to discuss this issue with me. It was an honor to become acquainted with you—I commend you for your commitment to the Lord and dedication to your family. All the best as you persevere in the vital role in which God has placed you. Blessings!

Sincerely,

JAMES C. DOBSON, Ph.D.,
President.

SOUTH BOSTON, MA,

October 12, 2001.

Congressman WALTER B. JONES,

Congress of the United States, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

CONGRESSMAN WALTER B. JONES: Thank you for introducing H.R. 2357, legislation guaranteeing the right of free speech to everyone. This proposed legislation is timely and appropriate. Since the events of September 11th, our country has been brought together by President Bush and many religious leaders in a public manifestation of patriotism and civic unity never experienced before in my many years in public service.

I join with other concerned Americans in supporting this legislation and would urge members of Congress to do likewise.

God bless your efforts and thank you for your courageous political and moral leadership.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND L. FLYNN,

National President of Catholic Alliance,
Former United States Ambassador to the Vatican, and Mayor of Boston.

SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION,
ETHICS AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY
COMMISSION,

Washington, DC, October 16, 2001.

Hon. WALTER JONES,

U.S. House of Representatives,

Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN JONES: Thank you for your leadership in introducing H.R. 2357, the "Houses of Worship Political Speech Protection Act." This bill is critical to the free exercise of religion in the United States.

H.R. 2357 is consistent with the Constitutional principle that the church should be separate from the state. The government should not have the power to define what the church believes or practices in principle or in effect. With the unbridled discretion given to the Internal Revenue Service to selectively target those it wishes to silence or threaten, this principle is not currently being protected.

Your bill will restore the proper balance by providing a "substantiality" test similar to that already applied in the area of legislation or lobbying.

The Ethics & Religious Liberty Commission believes that while the government should not restrict the activities of the church to define its mission, the church should restrict its own activities consistent with its mission. We believe that the church should speak to the current issues of the day consistent with its own doctrine and teachings. Nothing in the law or practice of government should hinder this freedom. However, we do not believe it is wise, prudent or appropriate for Baptist churches to endorse candidates.

We endorse your bill because we believe it provides an appropriate barrier to hinder the government from seeking to define the mission of the church. If it should become law, we will encourage Baptist churches to speak freely on the issues of the day (as we believe they should already) but to refrain from formally endorsing candidates.

Because not all churches hold the particular constraints of Baptist doctrine and history, we do not expect others to apply this particular bill in the same way. However, consistent with Baptist and Constitutional principles, we believe every church should be free to be the church in the way their own doctrine dictates.

Once again, thank you for your leadership.

Sincerely,

RICHARD D. LAND, D.Phil.

Let me go back to the Catholic priest in the 3rd District of North Carolina.

Why should a preacher or priest or rabbi not, if they choose to believe that the Lord has talked to them in their heart and say that I want your sermon today to be about protecting life or it could be the other side of the issue, where the preacher maybe feels that it is a pro-choice candidate that he or she feels is the right person? Whether they are pro or con on the issue, they should have the right to talk about the issue; but because this law is so vague, and I want to touch on that in just a moment, Mr. Speaker, this law is so vague that half the churches do not know what they can and cannot do when it comes to giving sermons on the biblical issues that are today the political and moral issues of the year 2002.

Mr. Speaker, I believe again that the strength of this country is that its foundation was built on Judeo-Christian principles; and if the spiritual leaders of America do not have the freedom to choose to talk about certain issues, then I think America's future is in trouble.

On the 14th of May of this year, I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) and the Subcommittee on Oversight. They held a hearing on this issue, as well as the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) has always been very interested in this issue, also. He has just taken a different approach from this bill, but what I wanted to say was that the testimony for the side in support of this law or this bill to change the law, we had Dr. D. James Kennedy fly up from Florida to speak in behalf of this bill. Then a former Member of the House, and a Democrat, who also at one time was the vice mayor of Washington, D.C., Pastor Walter Fauntroy, spoke in behalf of this legislation; and then the attorney for the American Center for Law and Justice who helped me draft this legislation, Colby May, was also one of the witnesses in behalf of this legislation.

At a later time I am going to bring to the floor testimony of two of the IRS representatives, a Mr. Miller and a Mr. Hopkins, who appeared before the Subcommittee on Oversight on that day, and I am going to just paraphrase a couple of comments they made, but I am going to come back next week and submit for the RECORD a couple of statements that they made.

First of all, they acknowledged that this was a very difficult law to enforce, when they were asked by the chairman, "How do you enforce this law?" They said that it was very difficult to do.

Secondly, what really, really got my attention is that they acknowledged that they were dependent on a third party to report the church or synagogue. Mr. Speaker, that reminds me of my days of studying the history of the forties, when the government is looking for a third party to report a violation of a law, that really, being a man of faith that I am, and a man that believes strongly in the Constitution, that really gives me trouble, to be very honest about it.

In addition, what the IRS agent said was that possibly the legislation that we have introduced would help them better understand the vagueness of the Johnson amendment. So I am very hopeful that sometime this year that we as a House will take this bill up for a debate and a discussion and a vote.

I want to, as I begin to start towards my closing, I am going to take maybe 5 or 6 more minutes, I would like to read a quote by a former Congressman, George Hansen. I believe and I stand to be corrected, he is from the State of Idaho, but he served years ago, but this is what I want to say today and to get in the RECORD. This is what Congressman Hansen said: "It is impossible to have religious freedom in any Nation where churches are licensed to the government." I am going to repeat that, Mr. Speaker, because I think what Mr. HANSEN said is absolutely correct: "It is impossible to have religious freedom in any Nation where churches are licensed to the government."

For those again, let me remind the House that if this was 1953, I would not be on this floor because, Mr. Speaker, there would not be any restrictions of speech on the churches. I have done the research, and I have found that when the churches and synagogues in this country qualified for the 501(c)(3) status, there was no restrictions at all on the speech of those churches or synagogues or mosques in this country. It is the Johnson amendment that was never debated that put the government into the churches and synagogues of this Nation, and I again believe so much in the first amendment right of each and every American citizen that certainly our spiritual leaders, should they choose to talk about the issues of the day, whether they be political issues of the day or moral issues of the day, they should have the right to do so.

Let me also use another quote, if I may, from Martin Luther. Martin Luther said: "The church must be reminded that it is neither the master nor the servant of the State but, rather, the conscience of the State." Mr. Speaker, what he is saying is that the church should not be the servant of the State. It should be the conscience of the State. How can it be the conscience of the State if the Federal Government, through the IRS, is trying to intimidate what they say?

Mr. Speaker, I am going to close in just about 2 or 3 minutes and yield back my time to the Chair, but I want to close this way by saying that I am a person who believes that this country's strength is the fact that we are a Nation under God, and those people that are opposed to this legislation, in my opinion, do not either understand the history of America and the history of the Johnson amendment, or they are for whatever reason concerned about the churches and the synagogues having the freedom, the total freedom of speech that they enjoyed in 1953, that was taken away from them in 1954.

Mr. Speaker, with the help of my colleagues, and I thank the Democrats who have joined me in this effort, we will continue to fight this battle for returning the First Amendment to our churches and synagogues.

I want to close by a certain way I close in my district every time I speak, and that is to ask God to please bless our men and women in uniform. I ask God to please bless the families of our men and women in uniform. I ask God to please bless the Members of Congress, both House and Senate, and their families. I ask God to please bless the President of the United States as he has some very difficult decisions in the days ahead of him, as we do. And I always close by saying three times, I ask God to, please, God, please, God, please, continue to bless America.

HONORING GENERAL BERNARD A. SCHRIEVER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PENCE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) is recognized for the remainder of the majority leader's hour, 44 minutes.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES) for his courageous stand, and his desire to ask for the Almighty's blessings on this country again and again.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Bernard A. Schriever, United States Air Force (retired), for his dedication and service to the United States Air Force, for his essential service in the development of the United States ballistic missile program, and for his lifetime of work to enhance the security of the United States of America.

He was born in Bremen, Germany in 1910. Bernard Schriever came to America in 1917 and became a naturalized citizen in 1923. After graduating from Texas A&M, he began his military career in 1931 as an Army artillery officer, later transferring to the Army Air Corps for flight school and flying 36 combat missions during World War II. In 1943, General Schriever became chief of staff for the Maintenance and Engineering Division of the Fifth Air Force Service Command, and then commander of the advance headquarters, Far East Service Command, which supported theater operations from bases in Hollandia, New Guinea, Leyte, Manila, and Okinawa.

He was promoted to lieutenant colonel in August 1943 and then to full colonel in December at the young age of 33.

Following World War II, General Schriever was assigned to the position of Chief of the Scientific Liaison Section under the Deputy Chief of Staff for Materiel, Army Air Force headquarters, and while in that post, he developed planning documents that linked ongoing research and development efforts with long-range military planning.

In 1954, the Air Force's highest priority was the development of the first intercontinental ballistic missile, the Atlas, and soon thereafter development of that missile became a top national priority under the Eisenhower administration to counter the Soviet nuclear threat. At that time the Soviet Union had produced nuclear and thermonuclear bombs and was pursuing an aggressive rocket technology program culminating in the October 1957 launch and orbit of the Sputnik satellite.

General Schriever led the development of the new United States ballistic missile program and headed the Western Development Division, later called the Ballistic Missile Division, which was solely responsible for planning, programming and developing the intercontinental ballistic missile. In fact, the size and funding of the Western Development Division was actually larger than the Manhattan Project.

On December 17, 1957, the Air Force conducted the first successful test launch of an Atlas missile, and by 1963 the Strategic Air Command had deployed 13 Atlas missile squadrons with nearly 120 missiles on alert to meet the contemporary Soviet Union threat. General Schriever oversaw the simultaneous development of the Atlas missile and the intermediate-range ballistic missile, Thor, which achieved an initial operating capability in 1959. Furthermore, the more advanced Titan intercontinental ballistic missile reached initial operating capacity by April 1962. And by October of 1962, 10 Minuteman intercontinental ballistic missiles were placed in service in response to the Cuban missile crisis.

Mr. Speaker, it is nothing short of amazing that General Schriever's efforts produced, within only 8 years, four complete missile systems for the United States, each system being more advanced and more complicated than its predecessor. Both the Atlas and the Titan systems were modified and became the workhorses for America's space program, and the Atlas missile is still used as a satellite launch vehicle today.

General Schriever retired in 1966 as a four star general, and continued his service to the United States as a member of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, the Defense Science Board, and the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization Advisory Committee. His expertise is still sought in the continuous development of America's space systems.

Walter J. Boyne, former director of the National Air and Space Museum of the Smithsonian Institution, wrote, "Today's navigational, meteorological, intelligence, and communication satellites owe their existence to the work of Schriever and his team." Furthermore, the Air Force in its official biography of General Schriever recognizes him as "the architect of the Air Force's ballistic missile and military space program."

Furthermore, the Falcon Air Force base outside of Colorado Springs was renamed the Schriever Air Force Base.

Mr. Speaker, during my service in the United States Air Force, I had the opportunity to work on many of the systems that General Schriever and his team pioneered. His name was spoken with an air of reverence, and the enormity of his accomplishments in developing a viable deterrent to the Soviet threat and ensuring American predominance in space was not lost on all of the Air Force personnel. I remember an article in Air Force News back in 1999 where General Schriever stated, "We envisioned that space would become critical to our warfighters. Even back in the 1950s when we were talking about deterrent capabilities, we believed space would become an important factor. Nowadays, thanks to space, in the first few days of a conflict, we can shut their eyes, ears and their ability to talk. Then you can apply your forces with much less risk. Just look at what happened in the Persian Gulf and the Balkans, entirely different from Korea and Vietnam. Space had everything to do with that."

General Schriever continues to uphold that premise, as he recently stated at a ceremony last month honoring space and missile pioneers when he said, "We have to be number one in space. We need to keep that position to deter that kind of capabilities to make war."

Mr. Speaker, America's dominance in space today is due in large part to the leadership, talent, and selfless service of General Bernard A. Schriever. I stand here today to state that Congress recognizes and honors him for his dedication and service to the United States Air Force, for his essential service in the development of the United States ballistic missile program, and for his lifetime of work to enhance the security of the United States.

Thank you, General Schriever. God bless you, and God bless America.

HONORING JOHNNY UNITAS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the untimely death of Johnny Unitas, whom I think everyone would agree is the greatest football quarterback of all time.

Johnny, "The Golden Arm," died Wednesday, September 11, 2002 of a heart attack at age 69. The Hall of Famer came to Baltimore from Pittsburgh to work for Bethlehem Steel at Sparrow's Point. He played for the Baltimore Colts from 1956 until 1973.

The Baltimore Sun described Johnny's legacy perfectly: "Baltimoreans fell in love with a plain-spoken, rough-hewn hero who epitomized their city of steelworkers and longshoremen." Unitas retired in 1973, holding 22 NFL records. He completed at least one touchdown pass in 47 straight games, a record that no one has even come close to matching. He did that during the years from 1956 through 1960. He led the Baltimore Colts to the NFL championship in 1958 and 1959, and the Super Bowl in 1970. Johnny Unitas was inducted into the Football Hall of Fame in 1979.

On the NFL's 50th anniversary, Johnny was voted the greatest quarterback of all times. With the aid of national television, Johnny catapulted the NFL into the public's eyes every day, driving the growing popularity of professional football.

Mr. Speaker, he was responsible for developing the national phenomenon of enjoying football the way we do today.

Johnny's trademark hunched shoulders, crew cut, black high-top cleats and stern look found a home in the heart of every Baltimorean. I was a teenager when Johnny Unitas played for the Colts. I remember fondly the days of his 18-year NFL career. More than a football player, Johnny touched the community with his devoted service to charitable causes; he was kind, warmhearted and affable.

This past week I had the opportunity to be with him at Towson University. He was continuing his community service. He never denied a person an autograph, not because he thought he was a star, but he knew that he would disappoint the youngster, or even an older person, if he would not give that person his autograph. He was always available to help in our community for charitable events.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in remembering Johnny Unitas, a legacy not only in Baltimore, but across the Nation. On the field, he will always be known as No. 19, but he will surely remain number one in our hearts. We offer our condolences to his family. We will always remember what he has meant to professional football, and what he has meant to Baltimore.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. BOEHNER: Committee on Education and the Workforce. H.R. 5091. A bill to increase the amount of student loan forgiveness available to qualified teachers, with an emphasis on special education teachers; with an amendment (Rept. 107-655). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas (for himself, Mr. BOEHNER, Mr. BALLENGER, and Mr. NORWOOD):

SENATE—Thursday, September 12, 2002

The Senate met at 9:45 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The prayer today will be offered by the guest Chaplain, the Reverend F. Kenneth Hoffer, Mount Culmen Evangelical Congregational Church, East Earl, PA.

PRAYER

The guest Chaplain offered the following prayer:

Please join me in prayer.

Almighty God, we lift our thanks for Your guidance which has preserved our Nation, a nation "under God," and for the peaceful continuity of government in America.

We look gratefully to the past, thanking You that from the foundations of America, You granted our forefathers courage and wisdom, as they trusted in You.

By their example to lead, guide, and direct, inspire the women and men of this Senate whom You have entrusted leadership to serve and wage the struggle to find peace and justice in our world. May they see Your vision and wisdom for the problems of this hour that we face as a nation.

Bless the Senators as they render dynamic leadership and thank You for all our leaders, diplomats, and military personnel. Let our resources be a strength to all, regardless of race, creed, faith, age, sex, or national origin.

May we work together toward peace, righteousness, and goodness for all peoples of all nations. We pray to You, O God. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JACK REED led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, September 12, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JACK REED, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. REED thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. The Senate is going to vote on Timothy Corrigan to be a district judge for the middle district of Florida. Following disposition of that nomination, we will go to the Interior bill; that is, the pending Craig amendment. The Dodd amendment also has been offered. We hope there can be some resolution of the forest amendment. If we could do something about the fire suppression amendments that are around, the Craig amendment and there is another to be offered, we could resolve this bill quickly. It appears at this stage that has not been done yet.

After 2 o'clock, we hope there will be a couple of back-to-back votes. They have been cleared on this side and tentatively cleared on the other side to vote on the Thompson amendment and also on the Hollings amendment. That has not quite been done yet, but Members should understand there very possibly could be votes at 2 o'clock today.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REID. I am happy to yield.

Mr. CRAIG. I think the leader has certainly appropriately explained where we are with the Craig-Domenici amendment and our efforts. We have met consistently over the last several days with colleagues on both sides of the aisle to see if we could strike a bipartisan agreement. At this time we are working with Senator FEINSTEIN and Senator WYDEN to see if we can come together so they can come to your caucus to determine whether we can pick up support in a bipartisan way.

We would like to have the remainder of the day to work. At the same time, I recognize the frustration holding up the Interior appropriations bill for this purpose. I think both the Senator and I recognize the critical character of what we are trying to do here—or the nature of it—in resolving this issue. If you can give us a little more flexibility, I think at some point—probably by the end of the day—we will know whether we can or cannot go any further.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is really a waste of the Senate's time to debate his amendment today and, further, we pretty well know the respective positions. Senator BYRD will be here to manage the bill this morning. I know he has an amendment to offer, as others do. Maybe there could be an agreement made to set aside the Senator's amendment, recognizing that it would be the matter before the Senate at any time you call it. We will try to work on something like that.

Mr. CRAIG. I appreciate the Senator saying that. I am certainly willing to look at that and allow other amendments that the chairman would think are appropriate to move on this amendment—to move without it being an obstruction.

The Senator is right, this issue is defining it. I will probably want to speak on it, and others may want to do the same. We have at least a 2-hour time-frame to get some work done. I hope we can do it.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I didn't mean to say that anybody speaking on the amendment is a waste of time. I meant to say there is no need to be speaking unnecessarily when we can do other things. If the Senator or people who oppose his amendment want to speak, that will be helpful to the Senate. What I am saying to the Senator from Idaho is, you don't need to maintain the floor to protect your rights, nor do we. I have received calls, as has the majority leader, from some Democratic Senators who believe there may be some ability to work out a compromise.

Mr. CRAIG. Good. I thank the Senator for saying that. I did not take that characterization in any critical way.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF TIMOTHY J. CORRIGAN, OF FLORIDA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF FLORIDA

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will go into executive session to proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 960, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Timothy J. Corrigan, of Florida, to be United States District Judge for the Middle District of Florida.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time until 10 a.m. shall be equally divided between the chairman and ranking member of the Judiciary Committee.

The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, how much time is available to the Senator from Vermont in his capacity as chairman of the Judiciary Committee?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Three minutes 40 seconds.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer.

Yesterday marked the first anniversary of the September 11 terrorist attacks on the United States. Americans, very appropriately, honored the memory of the brave men and women who died in that terrible time. Our thoughts were and are with those who perished that day, the loved ones they left behind, and the heroes who acted with fearlessness, bravery and hope.

The world has changed during the last year, but, fortunately, the principles on which this country was founded have not changed. I want to especially commend Chief Judge William Sessions of the U.S. District Court for the District of Vermont for proceeding with an immigration and naturalization ceremony in Vermont yesterday. What a wonderful gesture, granting citizenship to a new group of Americans and reminding us that we are a nation of immigrants and that our borders are open to immigrants who come to America seeking freedom, opportunity and a better life for their children. Whether our relatives came here for religious or political freedom in the 17th or 18th centuries, or to escape famine and persecution in the 19th and 20th centuries, many of us are descendants of those immigrants. Senator KENNEDY reminded us all earlier this year that immigrants are not the problem, terrorists are the problem. When the President appeared last night on Ellis Island, framed against the backdrop of the Statue of Liberty, that setting likewise reminds us that we are a nation of immigrants. Let this country, and what it stands for, always be a beacon of hope and freedom for the oppressed and downtrodden.

I am glad to see the President before the U.N. today. When our President speaks before the United Nations, we should not be looking at it as Democrats or Republicans, but as Americans. We want him, in his representation of our Nation and as our chief spokesperson on foreign policy, to be successful, and I wish him that success. I also appreciate his invitation to be there for the speech. Of course, our Senate votes will keep me here.

The Judiciary Committee continues working hard to make progress on judicial nominations and on legislation to respond to the new challenges that face our great nation. The Senate met on September 12 last year, and the Judiciary Committee held a business meeting on September 13. I kept the agenda that day to consensus items and bipartisan legislation. I felt strongly that we did not need partisan bickering but that we needed to come together and show that we can unite and that there is much that unites us all. We were able to report the first United States Attorneys nominated by President Bush. We worked on our bill to authorize the activities of the Department of Justice, a bipartisan drug use prevention, treatment and rehabilitation bill and the bipartisan Drug Competition Act.

That same afternoon we held a confirmation hearing for judicial nominations, including a judicial nominee from Mississippi. Just as we continued to meet and work in the immediate aftermath of the attacks on September 11, we also proceeded with hearings through and in the immediate aftermath of the receipt of the anthrax letters sent to Majority Leader DASCHLE and to me.

We worked hard to improve what became the USA PATRIOT Act with bipartisan support in the weeks that followed in September and into late October. In addition to our work on this landmark legislation, as well as continued oversight of the Justice Department, the FBI and the INS, we continued to hold judicial nominations hearings to help fill vacancies in our Federal courts with fair-minded judges.

We have now reported 80 judicial nominees out of committee. With today's confirmation of Judge Corrigan for the Middle District of Florida, we will confirm our 75th judicial nomination from President George W. Bush. We have confirmed more of President Bush's nominees in less than 15 months—75—than were confirmed in the last 30 months that a Republican majority controlled the Senate and the pace of judicial confirmations—73. We have also now confirmed more of President George W. Bush's judicial nominations since July, 2001—75—than were confirmed in all of 1989 and 1990, the first 2 years of the term of his father President George H.W. Bush—73.

As I have noted through the year, we could have accomplished even more with a modicum of cooperation from the White House. I regret that the administration and some Senate Republicans have been unwilling to acknowledge what we have accomplished in this regard but have, instead, chosen a strident posture and rejected our efforts toward bipartisan cooperation. The administration has chosen division rather than consensus with respect to its selection of Federal judges, which is unfortunate and unnecessary. The White House has insisted on sending forth a number of nominees who are divisive. Their records evidence judicial activism to reach ultra-conservative outcomes. Thus, in addition to reporting favorably 80 judicial nominees since the change in majority, the Judiciary Committee has, after a hearing and careful consideration, voted against reporting two nominations.

I regret that with respect to the important matter of our independent Federal judiciary, a matter that affects all Americans, the White House has chosen the path of partisanship. I regret that some in the White House and among Republicans would rather raise campaign funds and stir up their most extreme supporters than fill judicial vacancies quickly with consensus nominees.

Senate Republicans are running away from their own record. It is revealing that they refuse to make a fair comparison to the actual results during their most recent period of Senate control, which shows starkly how far we have come. Had they, in the 6½ years they were in the Senate majority, acted as fairly and as quickly on President Clinton and President Bush's judicial nominees as we have, we would have far fewer vacancies.

The truth is that we have done about twice as much as they. With today's vote, the Democratic-led Senate will confirm its 75th judge—exceeding the number of circuit and district court nominees the Republican Senate majority was willing to confirm in the last 30 months of their control of the process. Democrats have done more than Republicans did in less than half the time. Likewise, in less than 15 months of Democratic control of the committee, we have held more hearings, for more nominees, and voted on more nominees in committee, and the Senate has confirmed more nominees, than the Republicans did in their first 15 months of control of the committee in 1995 and 1996.

That today the Senate will confirm the 75th judge since July, 2001, is indication both of what we have been able to accomplish and what could be accomplished with some cooperation from the White House and Senate Republicans. I have noted how simple procedural accommodations that I suggested would have already resulted in another 10 to 15 fewer vacancies and more confirmations.

Unfortunately, my efforts to increase cooperation with the White House have been rebuffed. We continue to get the least cooperation from any White House I can recall during my 26 years in the Senate. This is not the way to get judges through the Senate. Rather, with cooperation, with work, with something more than just words, nominees get through.

A New York Times editorial this week, on September 10, noted: "We must fight the enemies of freedom abroad without yielding to those at home." We know that the terrorists are our enemy; they attacked all of us last September 11 and in the attacks that preceded it on U.S. embassies and the USS Cole and the 1993 World Trade Center attack. Republicans are wrong to try to make Democrats or the Judiciary Committee the enemy. We all want to ensure an independent and impartial Federal judiciary as a protector of our freedoms. Thus, ends-oriented, ideologically driven nominees selected to push the circuit courts and the law in a rightward direction are going to be scrutinized and may well be rejected.

I hope that, as we did in the days immediately following September 11, 2001 last year, we can come together and demonstrate unity. Since last July, we have greatly reformed the confirmation process and brought it out of the shadows and into the light of day. We now hold hearings, debate nominations, cast our votes, and abide by those votes. That was not the committee practice in the recent past, when secret holds and anonymous objections stalled scores of nominees by President Clinton. We have returned to the Democratic tradition of regularly holding hearings, every few weeks, rather than going for months without a single hearing. In fact, we have already held 23 judicial nominations hearings, including one the week of September 11, 2001, and others during the period in which committee offices and hearing rooms were closed because of the anthrax letters.

Yesterday I noticed our 24th hearing to be held next week. I intend to call Professor Michael McConnell of Utah as a nominee at that hearing. Despite the fact that the committee has already acted upon and the Senate has already confirmed Judge Harris Hartz last December and Judge Terrence O'Brien this April to the 10th Circuit, the first new 10th Circuit judges in 7 years, I will proceed with a third hearing on a 10th Circuit nominee at the request of Senator HATCH. The other circuit court for which we have held hearings on three nominees has been the 5th Circuit. There, we proceeded with nominees at the request of Senator LOTT and Senator HUTCHISON.

In addition, at the nominations hearing next week we will hear from District Court nominees from California, Delaware, New Jersey, Tennessee, and Texas. By proceeding next week we are able to proceed with a full complement of District Court nominees. That leaves only one District Court nominee with the support of home-State Senators and an ABA peer review who has not yet been scheduled for a hearing.

Today's vote is on the nomination of Judge Corrigan to the United States District Court for the Middle District of Florida. Judge Corrigan has an extensive career, serving as a general litigator in private practice for over 14 years and as a U.S. Magistrate Judge for the Middle District of Florida since 1996. He received a unanimous "Well-Qualified" rating from the ABA and has strong bipartisan support. While so many nominees of President Clinton had that rating but were never given a vote by the Republican majority, Judge Corrigan received a hearing and a vote within days of his file being complete in July.

The confirmation of Judge Corrigan today will bring additional resources to the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida. Judge Corrigan was nominated to fill a new position Congress created by statute in 1999 to address the large caseload facing the federal courts in Florida. He makes the second Florida district court nominee that we will have confirmed in one week. I congratulate Judge Corrigan and his family.

During the Clinton administration, we all worked very hard in cooperation with Senators GRAHAM and Mack to ensure that the Federal courts in Florida had its vacancies filled promptly with consensus nominees and had the judicial resources it needed to handle its caseload. Due to bipartisan cooperation among the Senators and with the White House, during the Clinton administration, the Senate was able to confirm 22 judicial nominees from Florida, including 3 nominees to the 11th Circuit. It is most unfortunate that such tradition of cooperation, coordination and consultation has not been continued by the current administration.

My recollection is that the only Florida nomination that generated any controversy or opposition was that of Judge Rosemary Barkett of the Florida Supreme Court to the 11th Circuit. I do recall that Judge Barkett was strongly and vociferously opposed by a number of Republican Senators because of what they viewed as a judicial philosophy with which they did not agree. Those voting against her confirmation include Senators HATCH, GRASSLEY, MCCONNELL, SPECTER, and THURMOND, all of whom are now on the Judiciary Committee, as well Senators LOTT, NICKLES, and HUTCHISON of Texas. Judge Barkett received the highest rating of the ABA, "Well Qualified," and yet 36 Republicans voted against her confirmation, but she was confirmed with bipartisan support, including the support of her home-State Senators. Indeed, there was extended opposition both before the Judiciary Committee and on the Senate floor.

Unfortunately, the cooperation, coordination and consultation that Senator Mack and Senator GRAHAM shared with the Clinton White House do not seem to be the model for the way this White House has chosen to communicate with Senator GRAHAM and Senator NELSON. That is most unfortunate.

It is a tribute to Senator GRAHAM and to Senator NELSON that we have made the progress that we have. I know that it has not been easy. They have been more than gracious in their willingness to support these nominees. We urge the White House to work with these Senators to nominate qualified, consensus nominees for the remaining vacancies in the courts.

With today's vote, the Democratic majority in the Senate has demonstrated once again how it is fairly and expeditiously considering President Bush's judicial nominees. We have worked very hard to provide bipartisan support for the White House's nominations in spite of its lack of willingness to work with us in partnership.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise in support of the confirmation of Tim Corrigan to the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida.

I have had the pleasure to review Judge Corrigan's distinguished career and I can say, without hesitation, that his confirmation will bring to the Federal bench, not just a legal scholar with impeccable credentials, but a caring individual who used his many skills and talents to serve his community and his less fortunate fellow citizens.

Tim Corrigan graduated with distinction from Duke University in 1981, where he was a member of the editorial board of the Duke Law Journal. After graduation, he served as a law clerk to the Honorable Gerald B. Tjoflat of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit.

Following his clerkship, Judge Corrigan spent 14 years in private practice with a prominent Jacksonville law firm, where he focused on civil litigation. He also engaged in a substantial appellate practice, including preparing appellate briefs and delivering oral argument in several district courts of appeals in Florida, the Supreme Court of Florida, and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. Moreover, Judge Corrigan served as co-counsel in a case in the U.S. Supreme Court where he had a primary role in the preparation of the briefs.

Judge Corrigan became a U.S. Magistrate Judge in 1996. Because of the heavy caseload of the Middle District of Florida, the magistrate judges are entrusted with substantial responsibilities. Thus, in addition to handling a broad array of civil and criminal non-dispositive motions, he has conducted numerous evidentiary hearings in criminal cases and issued many reports and recommendations regarding dispositive criminal motions. He has also exercised full jurisdiction over Federal civil cases, including a lengthy jury trial.

Judge Corrigan has published a number of legal writings and recently participated in a revision of the Middle District of Florida's Civil Discovery Handbook. He has also taught law school classes as an adjunct instructor.

Judge Corrigan has been recognized by the Jacksonville Bar Association for the many hours he has spent doing pro bono work. Throughout his career he has volunteered his time for the United Way, Big Brothers, the Special Olympics, the Jacksonville Area Legal Aid, and the Guardian of Dreams, an organization that provides scholarships to low-income students.

Judge Corrigan will make a fine member of the Federal Bench.

Mr. President, I wish to respond to some of the remarks of my colleague from Vermont about the Judiciary Committee's treatment of President Bush's judicial nominees.

My colleague from Vermont says that the Judiciary Committee has moved 80 nominees and only voted against two. This, he says, is a record which hasn't been equaled in years and years, certainly not during President Clinton's administration. I am frankly amazed by this assertion. In fact, under my chairmanship the Judiciary Committee did not vote against a single nominee. Not a single nominee in the span of six years of Republican control of the Senate. Even when one of President Clinton's nominees was voted down, the Committee under my chairmanship permitted the nomination to go to the floor for a full Senate vote. My colleague from Vermont certainly cannot say the same. In the last fifteen months, the Democrat-controlled Judiciary Committee has already voted against two nominees in committee and voted against allowing their nominations to go to the floor for a vote. This is not a record to promote.

The real story is the Senate's Democratic leadership is treating President Bush unfairly when it comes to judicial nominees. Some would justify this unfair treatment of President Bush as tit for tat, or business as usual, but the American people should not accept such a smokescreen. What the Senate leadership is doing is unprecedented.

Historically, a President can count on seeing all of his first 11 circuit court nominees confirmed. Presidents Reagan, Bush, and Clinton all enjoyed a 100-percent confirmation rate on their first 11 circuit court nominees. In stark contrast, seven of President Bush's first 11 nominations are still pending now for almost a year and a half since they were nominated.

History also shows Presidents can expect almost all of their first 100 nominees to be confirmed swiftly. Presidents Reagan, Bush, and Clinton got 97, 95, and 97, respectively, of their first 100 judicial nominations confirmed. I know that is true. I helped to get President Clinton's 97 of his first 100 judicial nominations confirmed. In this case, the Senate has confirmed only 73 of President Bush's first 100 nominees.

Some try to blame Republicans for the current vacancy crisis, and that is pure bunk. In fact, the number of judicial vacancies decreased by three during the 6 years of Republican leadership of the committee. There were 70 vacancies left by the Democrats when I became chairman of the Judiciary Committee in January 1995, and there were 67 at the time the Republicans left.

I might add again—I have said it many times, but it needs to be said—President Reagan was the all-time judicial confirmation champion with 382 judges confirmed. He had 6 years of a Republican—his own party—Senate helping him. President Clinton had virtually the same number confirmed, 377, and he had 6 years of the opposition party, meaning the Republican Party, to assist him, and he got basically just as many as President Reagan. He was treated very fairly, and I know because I was the Judiciary Committee chairman for those 6 years.

Some have tried to blame the White House for the committee's sluggish pace on nominees, and that again is pure bunk.

Specifically, I want to respond to the unbelievable allegations that the White House has failed to consult with home State Senators about judicial nominations.

In contrast to the claims of the distinguished Senator from Vermont, there has been an abundance of consultation by the White House with home State Senators. In my 26 years, I have not seen anything like it. The White House has risen above and beyond the call of duty insofar as consultation is concerned.

My colleagues who complain about the alleged lack of consultation from the White House really want something else altogether. What they want is for the President to defer to them 100 percent on judicial nominations. They want to be the one to nominate judges with only minimal, if any, input from the White House.

This, of course, would turn the Constitution on its head. The Constitution plainly gives the President the power to nominate Federal judges. The Senate's role is only that of advice and consent. It is an important role, but it is certainly not as important as the right to nominate judges.

Maybe they should offer an amendment to the Constitution if they would like it otherwise, but I know that amendment would not see the light of day.

The bottom line is that President Bush will continue to consult in good faith with home State Senators about judicial nominations. He deserves the same courtesy of good faith in return, not the partisan rejection of qualified nominees that the committee Democrats have handed him.

Mr. President, last week in the Judiciary Committee, one of my colleagues appeared to partially justify his vote against Justice Priscilla Owen by claiming that the White House failed to consult him on the nomination of Judge Reena Raggi from his home State of New York.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from the White House counsel totaling the number of consultations that were made with the distinguished Senator. I think the record needs to be made clear.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, September 5, 2002.

Hon. CHARLES E. SCHUMER,
Hart Office,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SCHUMER: I write in response to your statement this morning during a Senate Judiciary Committee meeting that you were not consulted by the White House prior to the nomination of Judge Reena Raggi to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. I was surprised and very disappointed to hear of your comments, given the extensive consultation that took place between us prior to President's Bush's nomination of Judge Raggi in early May, 2002.

Our records reflect that beginning in early September, 2001—more than eight months before Judge Raggi's nomination was submitted to the Senate—my staff called your office numerous times to seek your input on prospective candidates for the Second Circuit vacancy to which Judge Raggi was ultimately nominated. By early November, 2001, my staff had provided your office with a list of the names of candidates, including Judge Raggi, who we planned to interview for the vacancy.

In mid-November, I advised you that we were prepared to submit Judge Raggi's names to the President in advance of commencing an FBI background investigation. Immediately after receiving the President's approval, my staff informed yours that Judge Raggi's names had indeed been submitted to the FBI. At that time, we invited your staff to contact us at any time with any questions or concerns as you reviewed Judge Raggi's qualifications. No such questions or concerns were ever raised.

In late April, 2002, upon completion of the FBI background investigation, my staff informed yours of the President's intention to nominate Judge Raggi. Following the nomination, you returned your "blue slip" reflecting your support for Judge Raggi's nomination. Today, you joined your colleagues on the Judiciary Committee in unanimously voting to approve the nomination.

In my view, the extensive consultation that took place between us concerning Judge Raggi's nomination reflects the common practice we have followed to date regarding federal judicial nominations in New York and elsewhere. In light of this record, I find your statements this morning very troubling. I trust that you share my desire to continue the same extensive practice of consultation on federal judicial nominations in New York that has been in place since the President took office. In light of that past practice and the history of Judge Raggi's nomination, I know that you will want to issue a public correction of your statements this morning.

Sincerely,

ALBERTO R. GONZALES,
Counsel to the President.

Mr. HATCH. Finally, some might suggest that the Republicans left an undue number of nominees pending in committee without hearings at the end of the Clinton administration. We did leave 41, which is 13 less than the Democrats left without hearings in 1992 at the end of the Bush administration. In fact, a number of the nominees now who have been submitted to the committee were submitted by Bush 1 back in the early nineties. They were never given a hearing, never given a chance, and they are still being dragged through the mud—not so much the mud, but through the difficult times of the confirmation process without any hearings.

President Bush deserves to be treated at least as well as the last three President. Instead of thinking up new ways to rewrite history, the Senate Democratic leadership of the committee should begin confirming President Bush's first 11 and first 100 judicial nominations at a pace that matches or exceeds the rate we reached for President Reagan, President George Herbert Walker Bush, and President Clinton.

I think it would be fair, and I hope we can some day in the future work it out where both sides on the Judiciary Committee will work together to see that these nominations are brought to the floor where, in an expeditious fashion, the Senate as a whole can decide whether or not to confirm them. We have to work towards that end. I am going to be dedicated towards working toward that end.

I know there are colleagues on the other side on the Judiciary Committee who would like that as well. I believe it will end a lot of this partisan confusion. Frankly, I hope we can see that the Constitution will be implemented and that the Senate as a whole will decide whether or not to confirm these people. If that were the case, I have no doubt that Judge Pickering would have been confirmed to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, and I think there is no question that Justice Priscilla Owen would have been confirmed to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. I have high hopes they will be confirmed in the future anyway.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I would like to thank the Judiciary Committee for recognizing the needs of Florida and favorably reporting the nomination of Judge Timothy Corrigan. Tim Corrigan, an experienced Judge in Florida's Middle District, has been nominated to serve as a Federal judge in the Middle District of Florida.

Tim Corrigan's qualifications make him an excellent candidate for service on the Federal bench. Prior to his appointment as a Magistrate Judge, Judge Corrigan spent 14 years in private practice with the Jacksonville law firm of Bedell, Dittmar, De Vault, Pillans and Cox, P.A. As a Magistrate Judge since 1996, he has considerable experience handling a broad variety of civil and criminal matters, including conducting numerous evidentiary hearings and misdemeanor trials.

Judge Corrigan received his law degree, with distinction, in 1981 from Duke University School of Law, where he served as a member of the editorial board of the Duke Law Journal. He received his undergraduate degree, with honors, from the University of Notre Dame in 1978.

Mr. Corrigan is a member of the Florida Bar, the Jacksonville Bar Association, the Federal Bar Association and the American Bar Association. The Jacksonville Bar Association recognized Judge Corrigan in 1991 for his pro bono services. From 1987–1989, Judge Corrigan served on the board of Jacksonville Legal Aid and was honored for his efforts.

I thank my colleagues for considering this nominee. I am confident that they will agree that Judge Timothy Corrigan possesses the qualities needed to effectively serve on the Federal Bench.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, as Senator HATCH just mentioned, last Thursday, on September 5, 2002, the Judiciary Committee met in an executive business meeting and considered the nomination of Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen to be a Federal Court of Appeals Judge for the 5th Circuit. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I participated in the debate on her nomination and then cast my vote in Owen's favor. Unfortunately, Owen's nomination was rejected on a straight party-line vote of nine in favor and ten against. I thought that the issues that had been raised against Justice Owen were unfounded. I won't go into Justice Owen's excellent qualifications here today, nor will I address objections that have been raised regarding her nomination.

However, had the full Senate engaged in a debate on Justice Owen, and I think she deserved such a debate, I would have pointed out significant mischaracterizations that have been made about her decisions in a series of parental notification cases before the Texas Supreme Court. I discussed this issue in the Judiciary Committee debate, so for the information of other Senators who did not have the opportunity to participate in that debate, I ask unanimous consent to print my committee statement for the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT REGARDING 5TH CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS NOMINEE JUSTICE PRISCILLA OWEN

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we are headed for a very momentous vote today and I would like to follow up on a comment made by Senator FEINSTEIN in regard to the closeness of the last election. I would simply say that whether an election is decided by a few votes or whether it is a landslide, the President still has the constitutional duty that is prescribed in the Constitution and the Senate has its constitutional obligation. I candidly do not think that how close an election is or whether it was a landslide matters one bit.

Let me talk about Justice Owen's opinions in the Doe cases that Senator FEINSTEIN was talking about. I think we need to put this in its proper perspective. First of all, these are not abortion cases. These are parental notification bypass cases.

As we all know, these were a series of Texas Supreme Court cases interpreting a Texas statute that requires a minor to tell one of her parents before she has an abortion. None of these cases had anything to do with whether a woman could get an abortion. That was not before the court. In Texas, as in the rest of the country, women may legally get abortions.

The question of a right to abortion is not what these cases were about. The only question in any of these Doe cases was whether a minor child could avoid the requirement of Texas law to get parental consent to tell one of her parents before she got an abortion.

The Doe cases came to the Texas Supreme Court only after an act of the Texas Legislature in 1999, when it passed a law that requires parental notification when a minor is seeking an abortion. Let me just reiterate, the Texas legislature created this notice requirement, not the Texas Supreme Court, and certainly not Justice Owen.

When the legislature enacted this law, it included a process that a minor could use to circumvent the notice requirement. The legislature looked to the United States Supreme Court and looked to the precedent of the Supreme Court on parental notice rights to craft what was intended to be a limited exception to the parental notice rule, but an exception that was constitutional.

The process allowed a teenage girl to go to a State court judge and ask for a "judicial bypass". The legislature instructed the court to grant the bypass if the young lady could demonstrate one of the following. Senator FEINSTEIN has outlined these, but I am going to read them again because I think it is important to understand the context of these decisions.

One, the minor is mature and sufficiently well informed to make the decision to have an abortion performed without notification to either of her parents; OR if she could demonstrate that notification would not be in the best interests of her; OR, three, if she could demonstrate that notification may lead to physical, sexual, or emotional abuse of the minor.

Now, while these exceptions appear straightforward, as with all statutes in a common law system—and that is what we are dealing with—the terms are, of course, subject to interpretation by the courts. And I would submit that what we see in the Texas Supreme Court is that give-and-take on the interpretation; that when you look at both the majority and minority opinions in each one of the cases, you will see interpretation. So that should not be the issue.

Many, many, many statutes every single day are construed by our courts, and the courts are obligated to interpret and apply the statutes as they believe the legislature intended.

Senator FEINSTEIN and others at the hearing raised the issue of statutory construction, and basically the charge was that Justice Owen had become a judicial activist. Let me talk, if I could, about some questioning I did of Justice Owen at the hearing on three separate issues.

I asked Justice Owen about her analysis of the Texas parental notification statute. She made these three points about decision making in state courts of appeals, and although

I think these points are obvious, I would like to repeat them because I think it gives us a better understanding of what the issues are in front of us.

I think that it is particularly important for the Committee to consider how the Texas Supreme Court analyzed the Doe cases and whether that analysis was consistent with standard appellate review.

First, Justice Owen told me that the Texas Supreme Court applied the standard presumption, something that all courts must apply, that a state legislature is aware of U.S. Supreme Court precedent on an issue on which it is legislating. So in interpreting the statute, both the majority and, in a dissent, Justice Owen applied this rule of construction.

The language of the Texas statute tracks closely with language in Supreme Court precedent on the issue. It therefore was simply standard procedure for the justices to look to the U.S. Supreme Court case law to interpret the Texas law. You can't interpret one without the other. It was not an act of activism in any sense. It was merely standard appellate procedure to look at Supreme Court precedent. The only difference in the outcome of the majority's opinion and Justice Owen's dissent in one key case had to do with a pretty nuanced application of the precedent to the facts of the case.

Second, another important point Justice Owen made in response to my questions was that appellate courts almost always defer to trial courts on issues of fact. That was Justice Owen's position in the Doe cases and that is the standard applied to fact issues in a vast majority of cases in our country's courts of appeals.

That deference is necessary because the trial courts are in a much better position to judge factual issues. The trial courts get to see the witnesses firsthand and to judge their credibility. These Doe cases obviously hinge on that analysis, the analysis by the trial court, the trial court's ability to judge the demeanor of the witnesses, the trial court's determination of the facts. The trial court, for example, had the advantage of actually listening to the teenager's testimony to determine whether she was "mature" or not.

Now, in all the cases before Judge Owen—I think we need to keep this in mind—in all the cases, when we think about the factual determination that the teenager had not met the requirements for a judicial bypass. The trier of fact had already made that determination.

The final point, again to state the obvious, that was brought out in my discussion with Justice Owen was that before the Texas Supreme Court ever heard a parental notification case, a bypass case, a number of judges had already denied the bypass.

First, the trial judge would have ruled against the teenager not just once, but really on all three of the ways that she could achieve the bypass. The judge would have had to have found that she had not proven her case on any of the three.

Next, a three-judge court of appeals would have ruled against the teenager on these same issues. So before this case ever reached the Texas Supreme Court, the case had already been decided once at the lower court and already decided at the appellate court.

I believe these are important points, all of them, all three, about how Justice Owen analyzed the Doe cases. And I think it may be constructive to put these cases in the context of all the bypasses requested by teenage girls in Texas.

We don't know the total number and I am not sure really what great significance it has, but we do know that at least 657 bypass petitions were filed between January 1, 2000 and March 8, 2002. This is the number of cases in which the Texas Department of Health paid some of the expenses for filing the petition. So it is the minimum number of cases that were just filed.

Of all these cases, we ended up with 10, 12 cases that got to the Supreme Court, depending on how you calculate them. Some came up for the second time on review. Of these ten cases, Justice Owen thought the majority of the Texas Supreme Court got it wrong three times. So she is only in the minority three times in the Texas Supreme Court, and in these cases she agreed with both lower courts. I think these are things that we need to keep in mind to put this in its proper perspective.

What we are really talking about here is a small handful of cases. A handful of cases in which a minor was required under Texas law to tell one of her parents that she wanted to have an abortion. Justice Owen conducted a perfectly reasonable analysis in her opinions. In three of those cases, she came to a different conclusion than the majority of the court.

That conclusion would not, as some would imply, overturn 30 years of abortion precedent. It would simply require each of these three teenage girls to tell one of their parents that they are going to have an abortion. So, in my view, it is ludicrous to think that this is sufficient to disqualify Justice Owen for a seat on the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your time. I don't want to take the committee's time to talk about all the other issues. I thought I would just devote my time to that one particular issue.

Am I to understand the vote is to occur at 10 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. STABENOW). The Senator is correct.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I do not want to cut Senator HATCH off from speaking, but I have to acknowledge that this judge will be approved by, I think, a unanimous vote. Unless Senator BURNS feels strongly to the contrary, we should go ahead with the vote. If Senator HATCH has something to say, he can speak after the vote. If Senator BURNS wants him to speak, I will be happy to do that. Senators are waiting around to vote. Schedules have to be met.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—H.R. 5005

Mr. REID. Madam President, while the Senator is making that decision, I ask unanimous consent that at noon today, when the Senate resumes consideration of H.R. 5005, the homeland security legislation, the Thompson amendment be set aside and Senator HOLLINGS be recognized to offer a first-degree amendment relating to national security; that the Hollings and Thompson amendments be debated concurrently for a total of 2 hours, prior to a vote in relation to each amendment, which 1 hour equally divided and controlled between the proponents and opponents of each amendment, with no second-degree amendments in order to either amendment prior to a vote in relation to each amendment; that upon the use or yielding back of time, without further intervening action or debate, the Senator vote in relation to the Thompson amendment, to be followed by an immediate vote in relation to the Hollings amendment; that upon disposition of these amendments, Senator BYRD be recognized to offer a first-degree amendment, as provided for under a previous order; provided further, that following a vote in relation to the Thompson amendment, regardless of the outcome, the Senate vote in relation to the Hollings amendment; that if neither amendment is disposed of, then the amendments remain debatable and amendable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, the only caution I will make is that this order does not provide for who is for and against these amendments. We really do not know at this stage. When the time of noon arrives, the Chair will have to make some ruling as to who is going to control the time in opposition to these amendments, if, in fact, there is anyone opposed to them.

Has the Senator made a decision?

Mr. BURNS. Madam President, I suggest and recommend to the chairman of the committee that we move forward on this vote. I know Senators have made their schedules around the vote that was determined to happen at 10 o'clock this morning. We have other business to do on the Interior appropriations bill and a short time within which to do it. I suggest to the chairman that we move forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I suggest we go ahead with the vote. I will ask for the yeas and nays once it is reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have previously been ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Timothy J. Corrigan, of Florida, to be United States District Judge for the Middle District of Florida? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. CARPER), the Senator from New York (Mrs. CLINTON), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. DODD), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. TORRICELLI), and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. WELLSTONE), are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. ENZI), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. GREGG), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. HUTCHINSON), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SESSIONS), and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. SMITH) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 88, nays 0, as follows:

NOT VOTING — 12

Akaka	Enzi	Sessions
Carper	Gregg	Smith (NH)
Clinton	Helms	Torricelli
Dodd	Hutchinson	Wellstone

The nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the President will be immediately notified of the Senate's action.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. SPECTER, be recognized for a period not to exceed 5 minutes, and that following the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair to accommodate Senators who wish to watch the President's speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—S. 2924

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as in morning business to allow for the second reading of a bill. I understand there will be objection. However, this relates to the award of the special Congressional Gold Medal to the crew and passengers on flight 93.

I had said on Wednesday and Tuesday, yesterday and the day before, that I intended to do this. Since making that announcement, I have discussed the matter with the Senator from New York, who is in the Chamber, and also the Senator from Texas, who is the ranking member of the Banking Committee. I asked the chairman to be present, but he had other business to which he had to attend.

This unanimous consent request is to proceed to the second reading of the bill, which I will object to, and then to ask unanimous consent that S. 2924, which was previously introduced as S. 1434, be taken up, and the Senator from New York will object to that. I said that if he was absent I would object on his behalf.

I am doing this so it will be known that every effort is being made by this Senator to get a resolution of S. 2924, which seeks to give gold medals, special Congressional Gold Medals, to all those who were on flight 93.

There are others, including the Senator from New York, who would like to include other people. The Banking Committee ranking member wants to sit down—which we are committed to do early next week—to try to get it resolved. However, for purposes of the record, I would like to proceed now with the second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the title of the bill for the second time.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2924) to authorize the President to award posthumously the Congressional Gold Medal to the passengers and crew of flight 93 in the aftermath of the terrorist attack on the United States on September 11, 2001.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I will now ask the Senate proceed to consider the bill, and I object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST—S. 2924

Mr. SPECTER. I ask unanimous consent—and I understand there is an objection, but for the record I ask unanimous consent to take up S. 2924.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Reserving the right to object, and I will object, the intentions of the Senator from Pennsylvania are good and noble and I am supportive of them, but there are people in New York who should be taken into account as well. We have been negotiating for a little while. We will continue to negotiate and hopefully come to a happy resolution. That is why I object. I have no objection to the Pennsylvanian people being included, but certainly I have objection to leaving out some of the heroes in New York who were not police and firefighters—they were included—but we have lots of people who tried to carry people downstairs and everything else. That is what we have to work out. So I will reluctantly object and hopefully we can resolve this shortly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Senator from New York for his comments. As I said, I anticipated the objection. I am willing to work with the Senator from New York to give recognition to the many heroes who were involved in the rescue effort in the World Trade Center towers. There is no doubt about that. However, I do want to get it moved along. I think this is something that would have been better had we been able to finish it before September 11, 2002. However, since we did not do that, since it is September 12, we now have a calendar to move it ahead.

I thank the Chair and my colleague from New York for yielding the floor.

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 10:33 a.m., recessed until 11:09 a.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. EDWARDS).

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 5093, which the clerk will report.

A bill (H.R. 5093) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes.

Byrd Amendment No. 4472, in the nature of a substitute.

Byrd Amendment No. 4480 (to Amendment No. 4472), to provide funds to repay accounts from which funds were borrowed for emergency wildfire suppression.

Craig/Domenici Amendment No. 4518 (to Amendment No. 4480), to reduce hazardous fuels on our national forests.

Dodd Amendment No. 4522 (to Amendment No. 4472), to prohibit the expenditure of funds to recognize Indian tribes and tribal nations until the date of implementation of certain administrative procedures.

AMENDMENT NO. 4518

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise to support the Craig second degree amendment. This amendment will address the continuing problem of hazardous fuels buildup in our Nation's forests. Unfortunately, the excessive buildup of these fire producing fuels has reached a crisis stage.

Nowhere is this fact more evident than what is happening in our forests this year. Currently, conditions in our Nation's forests are terrible. The fire risks as a result of the buildup of these fuels are extremely high. According to the Society of American Foresters, "As a result of 80 years of fuels accumulation and several years of drought, the potential for wildfire is at an all time high in many regions of the U.S." In addition to this, recent forest service estimates indicate that approximately 73 million of the Nation's national forests are at risk from "catastrophic" wildfire.

For many of the states, the damage is already done. As you all know, many western states have experienced devastating wildfires—fires that have not only destroyed homes and property, but vast acres of trees and wildlife as well. As of late August, more than 6.3 million acres of land have burned this fire season—more than double the 10-year average. So far in this fire season, we have seen devastating fires in Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, Alaska, and Oregon.

Mr. President, these fires not only clean out and tear down living trees, they kill the wildlife, they threaten homes, they threaten lives; most of all, they scorch the Earth, subjecting it to disastrous soil runoff into our Nation's rivers, streams, and lakes, and knocking out the potential of forest regrowth for decades.

The time for addressing the problem of excessive fuels buildup in our forests is long overdue. Current efforts to reduce fuel loads are taking far too long due to senseless bureaucratic delays. According to the U.S. Forest Service, it can take up to 8 years to plan and execute a relatively routine fuels reduction project. We simply cannot afford to wait this long.

We are talking about good science-based forest management here. In a letter to the St. Louis Post Dispatch, Dr. Gene Garrett of the University of Missouri School of Natural Resources, who has studied and taught forestry for over 32 years, indicates that "In many forests in the west, trees become susceptible to insects and disease, die off, and add their wood mass to an already excessive fuel load on the forest floor. Studies have shown that fuel loads are 5-10 times higher per acre in the pine and mixed conifer types in the west than during pre-settlement times. Forest scientists all across the country believe that reduction of these excessive fuel loads is the necessary and prudent action to take to restore the health of our forests, to protect our environment, to protect our wildlife.

If we do not address this problem now, we risk losing many of America's most pristine forests due to wildfire devastation. Congress needs to pass legislation to streamline and expedite the clearing of these fire producing fuels.

I believe that the Craig hazardous fuels reduction amendment will accomplish this goal. This amendment is designed to cut through bureaucratic red tape and speed up the review and approval process for fuels reduction efforts.

Specifically, this amendment limits projects to areas that qualify as Condition Class 3 or high fire risk areas with priority placed on wildlife urban interface zones, municipal watersheds, diseased, dying, insect-infected or wind-thrown trees and areas susceptible to reburn.

Proposed projects must also be consistent with the applicable forest plan, resource management plan, or other applicable agency plan. Furthermore, this amendment limits the aggregate treatment area to 10 million acres of Federal land or roughly 6 percent of the 190 million acres of Federal lands that are at high risk of wildfire.

Finally, the Craig amendment allows parties to seek judicial review in Federal district court.

This amendment is important to Missouri because it addresses most of the causes of excessive fuels buildup in Missouri Forests.

No. 1, there has been a significant increase in fuels in the Mark Twain National Forest as a result of a serious tornado that occurred in Southeast Missouri on 4/24/02.

According to the U.S. Forest Service's Tornado Fuels Assessment for the Mark Twain, heavy winds from the tornado caused tops of trees to be broken off, stems splintered and whole trees to be uprooted. Because of this damage, fuels in this region of the forest have increased by anywhere from 5-25 times pre-tornado conditions.

Fuels in the tornado-affected areas are now classified under two levels: "very high to extreme fire danger" and "high fire danger." Currently, over 470 valuable private structures near this damaged area are endangered by this fuels buildup.

No. 2, Missouri has a significant number of wildlife urban interface areas. These are areas in and around forests that have a high population with a significant number of private structures. Some of these areas include individual residences, numerous rural subdivisions and small towns. These areas are particularly prevalent in southeast Missouri.

No. 3, in addition to the tornado, several years of drought, oak decline and oak mortality have accelerated the process of fuels buildup in other areas of the Mark Twain. The USFS has prepared an Environmental Impact Statement for oak decline and forest health for a 192,000 acre area of the Mark Twain where trees are dying from a combination of age, drought and insect infestation red oak—bores and two line chestnut bores.

The first of Missouri's two fire seasons starts next month. The most recent high wildfire season in Missouri occurred in 2000 when over 8,700 acres of wooded lands burned—more than 3,000 acres over the ten year average. The time for this body to act on this problem is now.

As stated earlier, I believe that the Craig amendment will address most of the fuels buildup issues in Missouri's forests, and prioritize them for expedited cleanup. In closing, I urge you to vote in favor of this amendment. By expediting the cleanup or clearing of these fuels, Missouri and the rest of the Nation can expect to see the risks of catastrophic wildfires reduced.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I proceed after the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. May I amend that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I wish to make a few comments directly following Senator WYDEN, if I may.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator from Missouri. He has stated the case very dramatically, not just for Missouri but in many respects for the rest of the West and many States in this Union where we are losing our forests because we cannot clean out from the forests the existing fuel. We cannot keep the forests thin so they are not susceptible to the tremendous losses we have been suffering.

Utah is no exception. We have lost thousands and thousands of acres of wonderful forests. We have not been able to take care of the forests because of basically what I consider to be environmental extremism. We are all environmentalists. We all want the forests to last. We all want to make sure it works.

My gosh, what has been going on in this country is environmental groups using the courts to override our professional land managers. It has led to a total neglect of the forests, a total neglect of what we consider to be not only natural resources but the beautiful forests of this land and the ability to keep them beautiful.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At 12 noon, the Senate will resume the issue of homeland security.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, the Senate has before it the Craig-Domenici amendment with respect to how we should spend the money we have in this appropriations bill designated for hazardous fuels reduction. It is an enormously important issue to my constituents.

I chair the Senate Subcommittee on Forest and Public Lands Management. There were devastating fires throughout this summer all over the west. Because of that, I have spent a large chunk of my waking hours in the last few months, both out in Oregon and here in DC, trying to find the common ground that would allow us to deal with the risk of fire on the millions of acres of national forest land that are fire prone and at the same time be sensitive to environmental values and legal processes.

It saddens me to rise today in opposition to this amendment because I had hoped by this morning to be able to come to the Chamber and talk about how the Senate had found common ground. I know the distinguished Senator from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, is very much committed to this as well.

I agree that hazardous fuels reduction on our national forests must be pursued aggressively. I strongly believe in the concept of expedited treatment for fire-prone areas, but I simply cannot agree to the excessively broad slashes that this amendment takes at our environmental laws.

For instance, let me spend a moment talking about some of the provisions with respect to access to the courts that are in the amendment that is before the Senate this morning.

First, I feel strongly that citizens have a constitutional right to access the courts with respect to concerns over the management of our national forests, but I also believe they do not have a constitutional right to a 5-year delay. So, I have made it clear I support reforms that address these questions and expedite the critical work that needs to be done. But, I want my colleagues to understand this amendment before us today goes too far and that is why I oppose it.

This amendment strips away a plaintiff's right to a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction. This means, essentially, that the plaintiff's case will be heard on its merits, but while he is waiting to be heard the agency does not need to wait to complete the project over which the suit was filed. In effect, people are going to be suing over stumps.

I do not think that is what the Senate wants. I do not think that is what makes sense.

They are going to say this keeps the courthouse door open. I want my colleagues to know that though the courthouse door may be open, the effect of this provision is the plaintiff never makes it past the coat closet of the courthouse. This is not a meaningful and balanced approach to forestry. Justice is not going to be found with respect to the provisions as written.

This issue is fundamentally about trust. Certainly, there are many good people at the federal land management agencies. But suffice it to say there are many in the environmental community that do not trust the natural resources leadership of these agencies. There are many on the other side and many people in rural communities who believe there are some in the environmental community that simply are committed to delay.

So what I have tried to do, along with Senator FEINSTEIN, Senator BINGAMAN, and others who spent many hours with us, is to come up with a reasonable, mainstream proposal to reduce hazardous fuels, improve the environment and protect communities.

For example, we have said there ought to be a categorical exclusion from required NEPA analysis of the hazardous fuels reduction projects that produce a significant amount of green timber and salvage when accompanied by environmental safeguards like protecting big old trees and the assurance that the building of new roads will not waste the limited resources we have for such projects. This provision that we have talked about could save between 1½ and 3½ years of time.

Going even further, we said—and this can only be done by statute—there should be no administrative appeals on these projects.

Senator BINGAMAN, Senator FEINSTEIN, myself and others, have said these are the kinds of ideas and approaches that help to bring the Senate together to try to find the common ground in this area. Unfortunately, that has been unacceptable to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle up to this point. That is why I believe the Craig-Domenici language that overreaches will polarize, in my view, this very contentious debate even further.

I would like to see the Senate make a very real and meaningful attempt to address the important forest management issues and reduce the risk of wildfire. I would like to see expedited treatment for key areas. My sense is there is broad agreement now that on 5 million acres, even 6 million acres—I have heard colleagues talk about 7 million acres—if we could address the questions of a fair and open process with respect to the courts, the Senate could come together.

I am very anxious to work with my colleagues to do that. But given the contentiousness of this issue, I think the amendment before us now so restrains people who would like to bring legitimate questions of forest policy to the courts, that provision is going to so polarize the Senate as to set back the effort to try to find common ground.

What I want to do is work on a bipartisan basis to implement the National Fire Plan. That is a collaborative effort. That is the kind of effort that would bring the Senate together. That is what we were able to do in the county payments law and I hope we can do it again.

We have to put firefighting dollars where they can best be used in a strategic way to reduce hazardous fuels, to start in the places where treatment would be most effective, the wild and urban interface ecosystems and municipal watersheds where fire can cause the most damage.

Senator BINGAMAN has worked with Senator FEINSTEIN and others on that. I think this is the kind of approach that brings people together. Certainly there is a commitment to cut these never-never land legal processes down in a significant way, but they have to maintain the integrity of the system.

Already I mentioned the prospect of being able to save 1½ to 3½ years of time when we are talking about the categorical exclusions from required NEPA analysis on hazardous fuels that myself and Senator BINGAMAN and others have supported. That is a significant step towards reducing the time line that so many folks are upset about in pursuing hazardous fuels reduction projects.

I am open to other ideas and suggestions but I hope the Senate will not support the amendment that is before us now. I do believe what will happen if this amendment passes is that plaintiffs will be suing over stumps. People will not be able to have the issues addressed, in effect, while it is appropriate, while the case is moving forward. That is why I think the amendment is an overreach.

I hope my colleagues will continue to work with Senator BINGAMAN, Senator FEINSTEIN and me, and the many colleagues who would like to find common ground come forward to work with us and support a package that would allow us to get expedited treatment for important projects while at the same time be sensitive to fair access to the courts and to environmental values.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I truly believe we have a real fire emergency in America's forests. It is precipitated somewhat by drought, but it is precipitated by a very flawed forest policy, a forest policy that has practiced fire suppression and spent over a billion dollars this year in suppressing the largest number of acres burned in the history of our Nation—6 million acres burned, 28 people lost, hundreds of millions of dollars of property lost, and a major concern of the American people. All the money cannot be spent suppressing fires. We have to begin to spend the money grooming forests so they are more fire resistant.

Over the past 100 years, there has been a buildup of underbrush, a buildup of dead, dying, and downed trees, a buildup of infested trees, and a buildup of nonindigenous species trees which become fire ladders. All of this presents fire ladders. So a fire begins, and it "ladders" up into the crowns of old growth, and there is a fire conflagration. I watched that happen in Colorado. I flew over the fires in Arizona. We watched it happen in New Mexico. Yes, it is happening in California, and we are not through with our fire season yet.

There is a true bona fide message. It needs to be met. I have been trying to work with Senator WYDEN, Senator CRAIG, Senator KYL, Senator DOMENICI, Senator BURNS. We have spent hours trying to come up with a bipartisan amendment which could get 60 votes on this floor. I believe we are relatively close to those 60 votes. Senator WYDEN has indicated some of the parameters in which we have been negotiating.

We have 74 million acres of forests in the highest risk of catastrophic fire; 24 million of those acres are Federal lands. We took the Federal lands—California alone has 7 million acres of the 24 million acres in what is called class 3, highest risk of catastrophic fire—to see if we could create for 1 year, as an amendment in an appropriations bill, an expedited program to address those acres, making 70 percent of the effort in urban interface areas where we find property, and people, where fire is devastating. Also, in some of the watershed areas, the areas of heaviest pest infestation, windthrow, as well as those acres which are apt to burn—highly catastrophic.

We are very close. We can agree on the number of acres which, after all, will be conditioned by the amount of money. We have agreed to truncate the administrative process. We concentrate on the areas I have mentioned.

But on this side of the aisle, there are very strong feelings we should not change the judicial review process. We are trying to come to grips with the Republicans on this issue. I am hopeful we can. Those on the Energy and Water Development Subcommittee who are negotiating hopefully will be on that subcommittee next year as well. If we can have a 1-year trial of moving the administrative processes faster, creating the emergency within these 5 to 7 million acres of the 24 million acres, confining most of it to the urban interface and the watersheds that are in the resource management and forestry plans, we can make a difference. We can see whether it works.

There are people who say it will not work because there are individuals or groups who will go into court to try to stop us. I am not sure that is entirely correct. I thought so initially, and then I looked at a GAO letter. I will read part of it into the RECORD. It is dated August 31, 2001. It says:

In summary, as of July 18, 2001, the Forest Service had completed the necessary environmental analyses and had decided to implement 1,671 hazardous fuel reduction projects in fiscal year 2001. Of these projects, 20 (about 1 percent) had been appealed and none had been litigated. Appellates included environmental groups, recreation groups, private industry interests, and individuals.

That is just with one program, that hazardous fuel reduction project in that year. It would indicate that in this small area court challenges have not been a big problem. Many people who believe in the National Environmental Policy Act, known as NEPA, believe very strongly that we should not vitiate the NEPA process in any way, and we should not vitiate the judicial process in any way in this 1-year pilot project.

I am hopeful we will be able to find an accommodation that will get 60 votes. On this side, we clearly have to get Democrats centered around an effort. And on the Republican side, we have to be able to convince them we are serious about moving in a constructive, emergency way to address the problem of catastrophic fire in our country. We can do it. Senator CRAIG, Senator KYL, Senator BURNS, Senator DOMENICI, all want to do it.

It is true that on both sides there are different approaches. I believe in a draft either called Bingaman 3 or Feinstein Modified—whatever one wants to call it. We are relatively close to that. I am hopeful we can, by unanimous consent, not take the vote on any of these at this time but continue to negotiate at least until tomorrow morning, and hopefully be able to get through the impasse we are in at the moment—or even to next week. This bill will not be included. I believe it is important we try to move more rapidly this year with hazardous fuels mitigation. In what is Bingaman 3 or Feinstein Modified—whatever anyone wants to call it—we have a very good first start.

We would like to hear from the other side of the aisle. We would like to continue these negotiations. I am hopeful there is not a vote at this time, that we are able to continue the matter, and we are able to continue to negotiate. I was present at meetings for 3 hours yesterday. I was in a conference call on it for an hour and a half last night. I want the Senate to know our efforts are sincere, they are earnest, that we would like to find an accommodation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I thank Senator WYDEN and Senator FEINSTEIN. There is no one better to work with as we have moved through the negotiations to change the way we look at management areas with regard to reduction of the fuel load on the floors of our forests and dealing with diseased forests.

It is most troubling to me that we are seeing the results of 20 years of frivolous appeals and putting the U.S. Forest Service and the Bureau of Land Management under such review that they cannot manage with any common sense; 20 years' experience, with a lot of folks on the ground who probably do not have 2 days' of education in their whole life, but they have been in the forest all their life, saying we are going in exactly the wrong direction and this will lead to disaster. But because they do not have a certain standing in the process to get their voice heard, their warning goes unheeded.

So we come to the years of 2000, 2002, even 1998. My State of Montana is just completing its fifth year in drought and also in low snowpack. We had devastating fires in 2000, with a lesser amount this year because we got a little rain. But now when the rains come, we see the mud slides, devastating mud slides that take streams out, destroy water quality, damage watersheds. I have heard people give endless speeches on watersheds. They have been damaged beyond repair. It will take years and years for them to be restored. It impacts municipalities and also impacts wildlife—fish.

How much do we have to show America that the past 20 years have been a disaster, an unmitigated disaster? This policy was recommended by groups who, at times you have to believe on the management of forests—there is an old saying that says they don't know the difference between "sic 'em" and "come here." Hocus-pocus science—a theory. Feel good, warm and fuzzy—but it burns. That is what we are talking about here and that is what should be at the crux of our discussions with one another in this Senate.

How do we avoid continuing this in a commonsense way, where if you want to debate the science or the decision made by an agency or a person with regard to the management of that land, that it cannot be open and all cards have to be on the table? That is what we are looking at here.

So I am going to work with my chairman, Mr. BYRD, as we try to move this piece of legislation along. I will tell you, I have never seen more earnest and dedicated people, people dedicated to solving a problem, than those in this debate, in the private meetings, the endless hours that negotiation have gone on. I appreciate that because basically I think we are driven to take care of our forests. But past practices have not given us much help.

Mr. President, I now yield time to my good friend from Colorado.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Colorado for yielding some of his time to me. I thank him for his leadership, trying to bring some common sense to the way we manage our forests. It is a pleasure for me to be on the Senate floor with my western colleagues who face a lot of problems similar to those I am facing in the State of Colorado.

The citizens of Colorado and the west are facing a challenging time. Faced with drought and fires across the state, our response to the test of mother nature is being measured, and will continue to be measured with the passage of time. Yet the message I want to send home today, and one that my colleagues rising in support of forest health also wish to convey, is that we must not fiddle while our forests burn.

We have studied forest fires, forest health, and forest management. We have studied while our forests burn and while our critical habitat turns to ash. Yet we continue to imperil life, property and nature with catastrophic wildfires.

I want to thank the rescue workers, fire fighters, police, sheriffs offices, aid workers, and the thousands of volunteers who have battled the blazes all summer long. I hope these brave fire-fighters realize that their efforts are not in vain, and that new policies will restore sound forest health and revitalize our management of our great forestlands.

Unfortunately, today there is an increasing threat of fire in millions of acres of forestlands and rangelands throughout the United States. This threat is especially great in the interior States of the western United States, where the Forest Service estimates that 39,000,000 acres of National Forest System lands are at high risk of catastrophic wildfire.

Today's forestlands and rangelands are the consequences of land management practices that emphasized the control and prevention of fires, disrupting the occurrence of frequent low-intensity fires that periodically remove flammable undergrowth.

As a result of these management practices, forestlands and rangelands in the United States are no longer naturally functioning ecosystems, and drought cycles and the invasion of insects and disease have resulted in vast areas of dead or dying trees, overstocked stands and the invasion of undesirable species.

Population movement into wildland/urban interface areas exacerbate the fire danger, and the increasing number of larger, more intense fires pose grave hazards to human health, safety, property and infrastructure in these areas. In addition smoke from wildfires, which contain fine particulate matter and other hazardous pollutants, pose substantial health risks to people living in the wildland/urban interface.

The budgets and resources of local, State, and Federal entities supporting firefighting efforts have been stretched to their limits. In addition, diminishing Federal resources—including personnel—have limited the ability of Federal fire researchers to respond to management needs, and to utilize technological advancements for analyzing fire management costs.

Now, I would like to share with my colleagues a little about Colorado's devastating fire season. Several months ago, one third of the State was blanketed in smoke from forest fires, blocking the sun, the mountain view, and creating major pollution problems, and asthma related deaths. Over 500,000 acres of Colorado has burned this year. The normal is 70,000 acres.

Over the course of the wildfires, safety and emergency personnel have had to evacuate 142 subdivisions, 85,000 people, and ended up spending more money on suppression because of the interface complexity. It is critical for life and property protection to mitigate this problem.

The result of the catastrophic fires is a hardened surface that is impenetrable by water. When the ground can't absorb the water, not only is the drought prolonged, but the water has to go somewhere. So it goes downhill. As the volume of the water increases, it picks up rocks, additional—possibly undamaged—soil and other debris.

This flow of tainted water and debris does not discriminate. It enters watersheds and people's homes. Right now in southwestern Colorado roads are closed, homes are damaged and people are trying to dig their yards out of up to ten feet of mud.

In the past six years, six major forest fires have affected the mainstem of the South Platte river, a major source of water for the Denver metropolitan area. The Hayman fire this summer was the first of these fires to destroy Denver Water property.

However, all of these fires have caused problems with the watershed which has negatively affected the quality of the water delivered to the two largest water treatment plants for Denver Water.

The Hayman fire completely consumed the trees on the acreage surrounding Denver Water's Cheesman Reservoir, except where Denver had applied Forest Service procedures of thinning and brush removal. As a result of the fire and the emulsified granite soil surrounding Cheesman, the burned trees and ash has been washing into the Reservoir as well as into the mainstem of the South Platte along the burn area. About 90 percent of Denver Water's property was burned.

At Cheesman Reservoir where Denver Water used Forest Service-type techniques, fire intensity was diminished and the fire did not destroy the entire forest. Therefore erosion and attendant water quality degradation will be minimized. One of the Forest Service mandates in its enabling legislation was protection of municipal water supplies. It is imperative that the Forest Service limit fire damage in municipal watershed areas.

This will take money, personnel, quick response and long-term dedication of public resources. In order to protect and preserve watersheds as public purpose resources, the Forest Service will need money and Congressional support to reverse policies that limit sound forest management.

It is estimated that damage to Denver Water facilities from sediment deposits and degraded water quality will occur for the next thirty years. To date, Denver Water's cost to try to mitigate some of the Hayman fire damage is over $500,000 for erosion prevention and protection of facilities.

It is estimated the cost for the next 8 weeks will be $100,000/week. Additionally, the life of our reservoirs impacted by the fire will be reduced by about 40 years due to increased sediment. Dredging of the reservoir will solve some problems, but will not prevent the continued inflow of sediment.

It is conceivable the total cost of dredging Cheesman Reservoir will exceed $20 million.

These examples are just a few of the tragedies created by the fires. Glenwood Springs, Durango, Steamboat and many more, have suffered as well. Yet the quiet tragedy of the fires will not be revealed for years—what have we done to the ecosystem, to habitat, and wildlife? Only after thousands of hours of human capital investment and millions of dollars in rehabilitation will we know.

We all value protection of our forests and the natural beauty of our land. But we can no longer respond and react—we must take the steps to achieve a healthy balance and return our forests to a state of good health.

We are facing some serious problems. My feeling on this is that the forest managers themselves—they are scientists—know how to best manage our environment. I think we need to give them some more latitude in practicing good science and protecting forest health.

I will elaborate on this a little later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for not to exceed 2 minutes before the Senate reverts to the homeland security bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—I will not object—I wonder if we could agree that the time would not go against either side with regard to the debate of this amendment. I ask unanimous consent it not go against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I seek the floor at this time to ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside temporarily so that I may offer this amendment on behalf of myself and Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is it my understanding that we would still allow the Craig-Domenici amendment to be in place when we return?

Mr. BYRD. Absolutely.

Mr. CRAIG. I will not object.

Mr. DOMENICI. I would like to know what it is.

Mr. BYRD. It will take me a little longer than 2 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me ask if it has to do with the budget or is in any way trying to perfect the budget.

Mr. BYRD. No. I think the Senator from New Mexico will embrace the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the 2 minutes I asked for be extended to 4 minutes so that we would have two additional amendments and I may show this amendment to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if the Chair will withhold temporarily until the distinguished Senator from New Mexico has looked at the amendment.

Mr. President, I renew my request.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection. I have looked at it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment is set aside.

AMENDMENT NO. 4532 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4472

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] proposes an amendment numbered 4532 to amendment No. 4472.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide critical emergency supplemental appropriations)

At the appropriate place in Byrd Amendment No. 4472 insert the following:

TITLE —SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, namely:

CHAPTER 1

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

(INCLUDING TRANSFERS OF FUNDS)

For an additional amount for "Office of the Secretary", $18,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the Secretary shall transfer these funds to the Agricultural Research Service, the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, the Agricultural Marketing Service, and/or the Food Safety and Inspection Service: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

OFFICE OF JUSTICE PROGRAMS

COMMUNITY ORIENTED POLICING SERVICES

For an amount to establish the Community Oriented Policing Services' Interoperable Communications Technology Program in consultation with the Office of Science and Technology within the National Institute of Justice, and the Bureau of Justice Assistance, for emergency expenses for activities related to combating terrorism by providing grants to States and localities to improve communications within, and among, law enforcement agencies, $50,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

EMBASSY SECURITY, CONSTRUCTION, AND MAINTENANCE

For an additional amount for "Embassy Security, Construction, and Maintenance," for emergency expenses for activities related to combating international terrorism, $10,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

FEDERAL FUNDS

FEDERAL PAYMENT TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

For a Federal payment to the District of Columbia for public safety expenses related to security events in the District of Columbia, $12,000,000, to remain available until December 1, 2003: Provided, That the Chief Financial Officer of the District of Columbia shall provide a report, within 15 days of an expenditure, to the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and Senate, detailing any expenditure of these funds: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

ENERGY PROGRAMS

SCIENCE

For an additional amount for "science" for emergency expenses necessary to support safeguards and security activities, $11,350,000: Provided, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

ATOMIC ENERGY DEFENSE ACTIVITIES

NATIONAL NUCLEAR SECURITY

ADMINISTRATION

WEAPONS ACTIVITIES

For an additional amount for "Weapons Activities" for emergency expenses, $138,650,000: Provided, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

CHAPTER 5

BILATERAL ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE

FUNDS APPROPRIATED TO THE PRESIDENT

UNITED STATES AGENCY FOR INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CHILD SURVIVAL AND HEALTH PROGRAMS FUND

For an additional amount for "Child Survival and Health Programs Fund" for emergency expenses for activities related to combating HIV/AIDS, tuberculosis, and malaria, $200,000,000, to remain available until June 30, 2003: Provided, That such activities should include maternal health and related assistance in communities heavily impacted by HIV/AIDS: Provided further, That additional assistance should be provided to prevent transmission, of HIV/AIDS from mother to child: Provided further, That of the funds appropriated under this heading in this Act, not less than $100,000,000 should be made available for a further United States contribution to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria: Provided further, That the cumulative amount of United States contributions to the Global Fund may not exceed the total resources provided by other donors and available for use by the Global Fund as of December 31, 2002: Provided further, That of the funds appropriated under this heading, up to $6,000,000 may be transferred to and merged with funds appropriated by this Act under the heading "Operating Expenses of the United States Agency for International Development" for costs directly related to international health: Provided further, That funds appropriated by this paragraph shall be appropriated to the United States Agency for International Development, and the authority of sections 632(a) or 632(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, or any similar provision of law, may not be used to transfer or allocate any part of such funds to any agency of the United States Government: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended: Provided further, That the funds appropriated under this heading shall be subject to the regular notification procedures of the Committee on Appropriations.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

CONSTRUCTION

For an additional amount for "Construction", $17,651,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the Congress designates the entire amount as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES
PUBLIC HEALTH AND SOCIAL SERVICES
EMERGENCY FUND

For emergency expenses to respond to the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States for "Public Health and Social Services Emergency Fund" for baseline and follow-up screening and clinical examination, long term health monitoring and analysis for the emergency services personnel, rescue and recovery personnel, $9,000,000, to remain available until expended, of which no less than $25,000,000 shall be available for current and retired firefighters: Provided, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION
FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION
GRANTS-IN-AID FOR AIRPORTS
(AIRPORT AND AIRWAY TRUST FUND)

For an additional amount to enable the Federal Aviation Administrator to compensate airports for the direct costs associated with new, additional, or revised security requirements imposed on airport operators by the Administrator on or after September 11, 2001, notwithstanding any other provision of law, $150,000,000, to be derived from the Airport and Airway Trust Fund and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

CHAPTER 9
DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE
SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For an additional amount for "Salaries and Expenses," $39,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

INDEPENDENT AGENCY
FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT PLANNING AND ASSISTANCE

For an additional amount for "Emergency management planning and assistance" for emergency expenses to respond to the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the United States, $200,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 2003, of which $150,000,000 is for programs as authorized by section 33 of the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974, as amended (15 U.S.C. 2201 et seq.); and $50,000,000 for interoperable communications equipment: Provided, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on Tuesday, September 10, 2002, the Attorney General announced an increase in the national threat level to the "High Risk" level. The President accepted the recommendation based on what the Attorney General described as specific intelligence received and analyzed by the full intelligence community and corroborated by multiple intelligence sources.

The Attorney General indicated that the likely targets include the transportation and energy sectors and symbols of American power such as U.S. embassies, U.S. military facilities and national monuments.

I intend to offer an amendment to the Interior bill for $937 million of supplemental funding. The package includes $647 million of homeland security funding that draws from the $5.1 billion emergency contingency fund that the President rejected those items that are most directly related to the increased threat. In addition, the amendment includes $200 million for international AIDS programs as was approved by the Senate 79-14 when Senator FRIST offered the amendment last June. The amendment also includes $90 million that the Congress had previously approved for providing long-term health screening and examinations for the emergency personnel who responded to the attack at the World Trade Center.

The Office of Management and Budget currently estimates that there is $940 million available under the discretionary caps for fiscal year 2002 budget authority. Therefore, this amendment does not require an emergency designation by the President. If the President signs the bill, the funds will be made available.

Highlights of the $937 million package include $150 million for security at our nuclear plants and labs, $150 million for the direct costs of new security requirements for our Nation's airports, $150 million to equip and train our Nation's firefighters for dealing with weapons of mass destruction and other threats, $100 million for grants to fire and police departments to improve the interoperability of their communications equipment, $39 million for the Customs Service for improved border security, $17.7 million for increased security at the Washington Monument and Jefferson Memorial, $18 million for USDA for securing biohazardous materials, $12 million for DC for law enforcement costs of the September 28 IMF conference and other national security events, $10 million for embassy security, $200 million for international AIDS, tuberculosis and malaria services, and $90 million for long-term health monitoring of World Trade Center first responders.

I thank the Chair, and I thank all Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Chair will shortly report H.R. 5005. This morning when the order was entered, we did not know if anyone would oppose either amendment. I have been advised that the comanager of this legislation is going to oppose the Hollings amendment. I, therefore, ask the Chair to designate the Senator from Tennessee as the person controlling the time against the Hollings amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will do so.

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 12 noon having arrived, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 5005, which the clerk will report by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5005) to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Lieberman Amendment No. 4471, in the nature of a substitute.

Thompson/Warner Amendment No. 4513 (to Amendment No. 4471), to strike title II, establishing the National Office for Combating Terrorism, and title III, developing the National Strategy for Combating Terrorism and Homeland Security Response for detection, prevention, protection, response, and recover to counter terrorist threats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from South Carolina is recognized to offer an amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 4533 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4471

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Hollings] proposes an amendment numbered 4533 to amendment No. 4471.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To modify the membership and advisors of the National Security Council)

At the end of subtitle D of title I, add the following:

SEC. 173. MODIFICATION OF MEMBERSHIP AND ADVISORS OF NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL.

(a) MEMBERS.—Subsection (a) of section 101 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 402) is amended—

(1) in the fourth undesignated paragraph, by redesignating clauses (1) through (6) as subparagraphs (A) through (G), respectively;

(2) by designating the undesignated paragraphs as paragraphs (1) through (4), respectively; and

(3) in paragraph (4), as so designated—

(A) by striking subparagraphs (E) and (F) and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

“(E) the Attorney General;

“(F) the Secretary of Homeland Security; and”; and

(B) in subparagraph (G), as so redesignated, by striking “the Chairman of the Munitions Board,” and all that follows and inserting “to serve at the pleasure of the President.”.

(b) ADVISORS.—That section is further amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (g) through (j) and subsection (i), as added by section 301 of the International Religious Freedom Act of 1998 (Public Law 105-292; 112 Stat. 2800), as subsections (i) through (m), respectively;

(2) by transferring subsection (l) (relating to the participation of the Director of Central Intelligence on the National Security Council), as so redesignated, to appear after subsection (f) and redesignating such subsection, as so transferred, as subsection (g); and

(3) by inserting after subsection (g), as so transferred and redesignated, the following new subsections:

“(h) The Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation may, in the performance of the Director’s duties as the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and subject to the direction of the President, attend and participate in meetings of the National Security Council.”

Mr. REID. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have been speaking to the manager of the bill, Senator LIEBERMAN. We have two amendments pending. Senator THOMPSON opposes the Hollings amendment. It would seem that the Senator from Tennessee should have one-half hour in opposition to that amendment. Senator LIEBERMAN opposes the Thompson amendment. He should have one-half hour in opposition to that. If the two managers agree with that, we should have that in the form of an order so somebody can designate the time on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Chair.

This amendment is so simple that it becomes suspicious, in a sense. All I amend here is the National Security Council so as to include the Attorney General, the future Secretary of Homeland Security, and the Director of the FBI in an advisory position similar to the CIA as presently included in the 1947 law. The reason for this, of course, is to get not only the responsibility of the Council fixed, but more particularly to realize now that domestic threats are far greater than any international threats. I don’t believe Russia is going to attack us. I don’t think China is going to attack us. I don’t think Saddam, after all he has heard about us attacking him, is going to attack us, except perhaps maybe overseas but not the homeland. But homeland security must be emphasized.

Let me refer immediately to that section of the 1947 act signed by President Harry Truman on July 26, 1947. I quote:

The functioning of the Council shall be to advise the President with respect to the integration of domestic, foreign, and military policies relating to the national security so as to enable the military services and the other departments and agencies of the government to cooperate more effectively in matters involving the national security.

In other words, the function of joining all the dots is with the National Security Council.

You have all these entities now, here with a new one, to take certain analyses: the Department of Homeland Security. But you still have the CIA, the FBI, the National Security Agency. You have intelligence sections of the State Department. They are all over the Government; Intelligence Committees within the Congress, and everything else like that. Wherein is the responsibility fixed to join the dots?

Harry Truman said it best in 1947. He said: “The buck stops here.” So my particular amendment is to fix that responsibility, and assist the President, so there would be no misunderstanding.

Incidentally, only the President of the United States can change this culture of the so-called “need to know.” I speak advisedly. I was in the intelligence game back in the 1950s. I was a member of the Hoover Commission. We investigated the CIA, the FBI, the Army, Navy, Air Force intelligence, the Defense Department, the Secret Service, the Q clearance, the atomic energy intelligence, and all the other functions.

I will never forget, in October of 1962, I got a call from my friend who would later operate this desk as a Senator, Bobby Kennedy. Bobby said: I would like to get that report from you with respect to this Cuban missile crisis, and the background on it. I turned over my report, my particular one. I never have gotten it back.

But, in any event, the glaring error that persists this minute is that there are no joining of the dots, people are not talking to each other. Intelligence has gone like economics and trade—globalization, globalization. I cannot emphasize that too much in the little bit of time that is given me.

Immediately after 9/11 the CIA, the FBI, the various intelligence agencies said: Oh, this was a surprise. They could know nothing about a plane going into a building.

Let me talk about terrorism and give you a dateline:

The bombing of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut in April 1983 by the Islamic Jihad; the bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut in October 1983, also by the Islamic terrorists; the Hezbollah restaurant bombing in April 1984; the Naples USO attack in April 1988; the attempted Iraqi attacks on U.S. posts on January 18 and 19 of 1991; the World Trade Center bombing in February of 1993; the attempted assassination of President Bush by Iraqi agents in April of 1993; the attack on U.S. diplomats in Pakistan in March of 1995; the Khobar Towers bombing in June of 1996; the U.S. Embassy bombings in Nairobi, Kenya, and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, in 1998; the attack on the U.S.S. Cole in October of 2000; and the terrorist attacks on, of course, September 11. And they have not stopped. We have the car bombing outside the U.S. consulate in Karachi, Pakistan, in June of 2002.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent this document be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRORISM TIMELINE

Bombing of U.S. Embassy in Beirut, April 18, 1983: Sixty-three people, including the CIA’s Middle East director, were killed, and 120 were injured in a 400-pound suicide truck-bomb attack on the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, Lebanon. The Islamic Jihad claimed responsibility.

Bombing of Marine Barracks, Beirut, October 23, 1983: Simultaneous suicide truck-bomb attacks were made on American and French compounds in Beirut, Lebanon. A 12,000-pound bomb destroyed the U.S. compound, killing 242 Americans, while 58 French troops were killed when a 400-pound device destroyed a French base. Islamic Jihad claimed responsibility.

Hizballah Restaurant Bombing, April 12, 1984: Eighteen U.S. servicemen were killed, and 83 people were injured in a bomb attack on a restaurant near a U.S. Air Force Base in Torrejon, Spain. Responsibility was claimed by Hizballah.

Naples USO Attack, April 14, 1988: The Organization of Jihad Brigades exploded a car bomb outside a USO Club in Naples, Italy, killing one U.S. sailor.

Attempted Iraqi Attacks on U.S. Posts, January 18-19, 1991: Iraqi agents planted bombs at the U.S. Ambassador to Indonesia’s home residence at the USIS library in Manila.

World Trade Center Bombing, February 26, 1993: The World Trade Center in New York City was badly damaged when a car bomb planted by Islamic terrorists explodes in an underground garage. The bomb left six people dead and 1,000 injured. The men carrying out the attack were followers of Umar and Abd al-Rahman, an Egyptian cleric who preached in the New York City area.

Attempted Assassination of President Bush by Iraqi Agents, April 14, 1993: The Iraqi intelligence service attempted to assassinate former U.S. President George Bush during a visit to Kuwait. In retaliation, the U.S. launched a cruise missile attack 2 months later on the Iraqi capital Baghdad.

Attack on U.S. Diplomats in Pakistan, March 8, 1995: Two unidentified gunmen killed two U.S. diplomats and wounded a third in Karachi, Pakistan.

Khobar Towers Bombing, June 25, 1996: A fuel truck carrying a bomb exploded outside the U.S. military’s Khobar Towers housing facility in Dharhah, killing 19 U.S. military personnel and wounding 515 persons, including 240 U.S. personnel. Several groups claimed responsibility for the attack.

U.S. Embassy Bombings in East Africa, August 7, 1998: A bomb exploded at the rear entrance of the U.S. embassy in Nairobi, Kenya, killing 12 U.S. citizens, 32 Foreign Service Nationals (FSNs), and 247 Kenyan citizens. About 5,000 Kenyans, six U.S. citizens, and 13 FSNs were injured. The U.S. embassy building sustained extensive structural damage. Almost simultaneously, a bomb detonated outside the U.S. embassy in Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, killing seven FSNs and three Tanzanian citizens, and injuring one U.S. citizen and 76 Tanzanians. The explosion caused major structural damage to the U.S. embassy facility. The U.S. Government held Usama Bin Ladin responsible.

Attack on U.S.S. Cole, October 12, 2000: In Aden, Yemen, a small dinky carrying explosives rammed the destroyer U.S.S. Cole, killing 17 sailors and injuring 39 others. Supporters of Usama Bin Ladin were suspected.

Terrorist Attacks on U.S. Homeland, September 11, 2001: Two hijacked airliners crashed into the twin towers of the World Trade Center. Soon thereafter, the Pentagon was struck by a third hijacked plane. A fourth hijacked plane, suspected to be bound for a high-profile target in Washington, crashed into a field in southern Pennsylvania. More than 5,000 U.S. citizens and other nationals were killed as a result of these acts. President Bush and Cabinet officials indicated that Usama Bin Ladin was the prime suspect and that they considered the United States in a state of war with international terrorism. In the aftermath of the attacks, the United States formed the Global Coalition Against Terrorism.

Car Bombing outside U.S. Consulate, June 14, 2002: A suicide bomber drives a car filled with explosives into a guard post outside the U.S. consulate in Karachi, Pakistan, killing 11 Pakistanis and injuring at least 45 people, including one U.S. Marine who is slightly wounded by flying debris.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Now, they say: Well, Senator, you point all those things out. But, after all, we didn't know anything about a plane going into a building.

Well, in December 1994, the al-Qaida hijacked an Air France plane that was headed into the Eiffel Tower. Who has not heard of flying a plane into a structure?

In 1995, the CIA was hot on the Philippines and thwarted the blowup or the crashing of eight planes at one particular time. They learned of the plan to do what? To crash a plane into the CIA building. That was back 6 years before 9/11.

And then, in January of 2000, in Malaysia, there was an article with respect to al-Qaida. Let me read from the article. I quote:

At the time, the men had no idea that they were being closely watched—or that the CIA already knew some of their names. A few days earlier, U.S. intelligence had gotten wind of the Qaeda gathering. Special Branch, Malaysia's security service, agreed to follow and photograph the suspected terrorists. They snapped pictures of the men sightseeing and ducking into cybercafes to check Arabic Web sites. What happened next, some U.S. counterterrorism officials say, may be the most puzzling, and devastating, intelligence in the critical months before September 11. A few days after the Kuala Lumpur meeting . . . the CIA tracked one of the terrorists, Nawaf Alhazmi as he flew from the meeting to Los Angeles. Agents discovered that another of the men, Khalid Almihdhar, had already obtained a multiple-entry visa that allowed him to enter and leave the United States as he pleased. (They later learned that he had in fact arrived in the United States on the same flight as Alhazmi.)

Yet astonishingly, the CIA did nothing with this information. Agency officials didn't tell the INS, which could have turned them away at the border. Nor did they notify the FBI, which could have covertly tracked them to find out their mission. Instead, during the year and nine months after the CIA identified them as terrorists, Alhazmi and Almihdhar lived openly in the United States, using their real names, obtaining driver's licenses, opening bank accounts and enrolling in flight schools—until the morning of September 11, when they walked aboard American Airlines Flight 77 and crashed it into the Pentagon.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD, in addition to another article of this particular week, where we had an informant from the CIA who was staying with them all the time. When he heard that they were the names, he said: "Oh, I knew them. Yeah, they were terrorists and everything else."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Newsweek, June 10, 2002]

THE HIJACKERS WE LET ESCAPE

(By Michael Isikoff and Daniel Klaidman)

The CIA tracked two suspected terrorists to a Qaeda summit in Malaysia in January 2000, then looked on as they re-entered America and began preparations for September 11. Why didn't somebody try to stop them? Inside what may be the worst intelligence failure of all. A Newsweek exclusive.

Kuala Lumpur is an easy choice if you're looking to lie low. Clean and modern, with reliable telephones, banks and Internet service, the Malaysian city is a painless flight from most world capitals—and Muslim visitors don't need visas to enter the Islamic country. That may explain why Al Qaeda chose the sprawling metropolis for a secret planning summit in early January 2000. Tucked away in a posh suburban condominium overlooking a Jack Nicklaus-designed golf course, nearly a dozen of Osama bin Laden's trusted followers, posing as tourists, plotted future terrorist strikes against the United States.

At the time, the men had no idea that they were being closely watched—or that the CIA already knew some of their names. A few days earlier, U.S. intelligence had gotten wind of the Qaeda gathering. Special Branch, Malaysia's security service, agreed to follow and photograph the suspected terrorists. They snapped pictures of the men sightseeing and ducking into cybercafes to check Arabic Web sites. What happened next, some U.S. counterterrorism officials say, may be the most puzzling, and devastating, intelligence in the critical months before September 11. A few days after the Kuala Lumpur meeting, Newsweek has learned, the CIA tracked one of the terrorists, Nawaf Alhazmi, as he flew from the meeting to Los Angeles. Agents discovered that another of the men, Khalid Almihdhar, had already obtained a multiple-entry visa that allowed him to enter and leave the United States as he pleased. (They later learned that he had in fact arrived in the United States on the same flight as Alhazmi.)

Yet astonishingly, the CIA did nothing with this information. Agency officials didn't tell the INS, which could have turned them away at the border, nor did they notify the FBI, which could have covertly tracked them to find out their mission. Instead, during the year and nine months after the CIA identified them as terrorists, Alhazmi and Almihdhar lived openly in the United States, using their real names, obtaining driver's licenses, opening bank accounts and enrolling in flight schools—until the morning of September 11, when they walked aboard American Airlines Flight 77 and crashed it into the Pentagon.

Until now, the many questions about intelligence shortcomings leading up to the attacks have focused on the FBI's clear failure to connect various vague clues that might have put them on the trail of the terrorists. Last week, in the aftermath of Minnesota agent Coleen Rowley's scathing letter ripping the FBI for ignoring warnings from the field, Director Robert Mueller announced a series of reforms aimed at modernizing the bureau.

All along, however, the CIA's Counterterrorism Center—base camp for the agency's war on bin Laden—was sitting on information that could have led federal agents right to the terrorists' doorstep. Almihdhar and Alhazmi, parading across America in plain sight, could not have been easier to find. Newsweek has learned that when Almihdhar's visa expired, the State Department, not knowing any better, simply issued him a new one in June 2001—even though by then the CIA had linked him to one of the suspected bombers of the USS Cole in October 2000. The two terrorists' frequent meetings with the other September 11 perpetrators could have provided federal agents with a road map to the entire cast of 9-11 hijackers. But the FBI didn't know it was supposed to be looking for them until three weeks before the strikes, when CIA Director George Tenet, worried an attack was imminent, ordered agency analysts to review their files. It was only then, on Aug. 23, 2001, that the agency sent out an all-points bulletin, launching law-enforcement agents on a frantic and futile search for the two men. Why didn't the CIA share its information sooner? "We could have done a lot better, that's for sure," one top intelligence official told Newsweek.

The CIA's belated and reluctant admission now makes it impossible to avoid the question that law-enforcement officials have tried to duck for weeks: could we have stopped them? Tenet has vigorously defended his agency's performance in the months before the attacks. In February he told a Senate panel that he was "proud" of the CIA's record. He insisted that the terrorist strikes were not due to a "failure of attention, and discipline, and focus, and consistent effort—and the American people need to understand that." Yet last week intelligence officials acknowledged that the agency made at least one mistake: failing to notify the State Department and the INS, so the men could have been stopped at the border.

CIA officials, who have been preparing for the start of Senate intelligence committee hearings this week, seem at a loss to explain how this could have happened. The CIA is usually loath to share information with other government agencies, for fear of compromising "sources and methods." CIA officials also say that at the time Almihdhar and Alhazmi entered the country in January 2000, they hadn't yet been identified as bin Laden terrorists—despite their attendance at the Malaysia meeting. “It wasn't known for sure that they were Al Qaeda bad-guy operators,” says one official.

CIA officials also point out that FBI agents assigned to the CIA's Counterterrorism Center were at least informed about the Malaysia meeting and the presence of Almihdhar and Alhazmi at the time it occurred. But FBI officials protest that they only recently learned about the most crucial piece of information: that the CIA knew Alhazmi was in the country, and that Almihdhar could enter at will. “That was unforgivable,” said one senior FBI official. This led to a series of intense and angry encounters among U.S. officials in the weeks after September 11. At one White House meeting last fall, Wayne Griffith, a top State Department consular official, was so furious that his office hadn't been told about the two men that he blew up at a CIA agent. (Griffith declined to comment.)

To bolster their case, FBI officials have now prepared a detailed chart showing how agents could have uncovered the terrorist plot if they had learned about Almihdhar and Alhazmi sooner, given their frequent contact with at least five of the other hijackers. “There's no question we could have tied all 19 hijackers together,” the official said.

It was old-fashioned interrogation and eavesdropping that first led U.S. intelligence agents to the Qaeda plotters. In the summer of 1998, only a couple of weeks after bin Laden operatives truck-bombed two U.S. Embassies in Africa, the FBI got a break: one of the Nairobi bombers had been caught. Muhammad Rashed Daoud al-Owhali, a young Saudi from a wealthy family who became a fierce bin Laden loyalist, was supposed to have killed himself in the blast. Instead, he got out of the truck at the last moment and fled. He was arrested in a seedy Nairobi hotel, waiting for his compatriots to smuggle him out of the country.

Questioned by the FBI, al-Owhali made a detailed confession. Among the information he gave agents was the telephone number of a Qaeda safe house in Yemen, owned by a bin Laden loyalist named Ahmed Al-Hada (who, it turns out, was also Almihdhar's father-in-law).

U.S. intelligence began listening in on the telephone line of the Yemen house, described in government documents as a Qaeda “logistics center,” where terrorist strikes—including the Africa bombings and later the Cole attack in Yemen—were planned. Operatives around the world phoned Al-Hada with information, which was then relayed to bin Laden in the Afghan mountains.

In late December 1999, intercepted conversations on the Yemen phone tipped off agents to the January 2000 Kuala Lumpur summit, and to the names of at least two of its participants: Almihdhar and Alhazmi. The condo where the meeting took place was a weekend getaway owned by Yazid Sufaat, a U.S.-educated microbiologist who had become a radical Islamist and bin Laden follower. He was arrested last December when he returned from Afghanistan, where he had served as a field medic for the Taliban. Sufaat's lawyer says his client let the men stay at his place because “he believes in allowing his property to be used for charitable purposes.” But he claims Sufaat had no idea that they were terrorists.

After the meeting, Malaysian intelligence continued to watch the condo at the CIA's request, but after a while the agency lost interest. Had agents kept up the surveillance, they might have observed another beneficiary of Sufaat's charity: Zacarias Moussaoui, who stayed there on his way to the United States later that year. The Malaysians say they were surprised by the CIA's lack of interest following the Kuala Lumpur meeting. “We couldn't fathom it, really,” Rais Yatim, Malaysia's Legal Affairs minister, told Newsweek. “There was no show of concern.”

Immediately after the meeting, Alhazmi boarded a plane to Bangkok, where he met a connecting flight to Los Angeles on Jan. 15, 2000. Since the CIA hadn't told the State Department to put his name on the watch list of suspected terrorists, or told the INS to be on the lookout for him, he breezed through the airport and into America. Almihdhar was also on the plane, though CIA agents did not know it at the time.

The CIA is forbidden from spying on people inside the United States. Had it followed standard procedure and passed the baton to the FBI once they crossed the border, agents would have discovered that Almihdhar and Alhazmi weren't just visiting California; they were already living there. The men had moved into an apartment in San Diego two months before the Kuala Lumpur meeting.

The CIA's reluctance to divulge what it knew is especially odd because, as 2000 dawned, U.S. law-enforcement agencies were on red alert, certain that a bin Laden strike somewhere in the world could come at any moment. There was certainly reason to believe bin Laden was sending men here to do grave harm. Just a few weeks before, an alert Customs inspector had caught another Qaeda terrorist, Ahmed Ressaam, as he tried to cross the Canadian border in a rental car packed with explosives. His mission: to blow up Los Angeles airport. Perhaps agency officials let down their guard after warnings about a Millennium Eve attack never materialized. Whatever the reason, Alhazmi and Almihdhar fell off their radar screen.

Free to do as they pleased, the 25-year-old Alhazmi and 26-year-old Almihdhar went about their terrorist training in southern California. They told people they were buddies from Saudi Arabia hoping to learn English and become commercial airline pilots. The cleanhaven Alhazmi and Almihdhar played soccer in the park with other Muslim men and prayed the required five times a day at the area mosque. They bought season passes to Sea World and dined on fast food, leaving the burger wrappers strewn around their sparsely furnished apartment. And, despite their religious convictions, the men frequented area strip clubs. Neighbors found it odd that the men would rarely use the telephones in their apartment. Instead, they routinely went outside to make calls on mobile phones.

People who knew the men recall that they couldn't have been more different. Alhazmi was outgoing and cheerful, making friends easily. He once posted an ad online seeking a Mexican mail-order bride, and worked diligently to improve his English. By contrast, Almihdhar was dark and brooding, and expressed disgust with American culture. One evening, he chided a Muslim acquaintance for watching “immoral” American television. “If you're so religious, why don't you have facial hair?” the friend shot back. Almihdhar patted him condescendingly on the knee. “You'll know someday, brother,” he said.

Neither man lost sight of the primary mission: learning to fly airplanes. Almihdhar and Alhazmi took their flight lessons seriously, but they were impossible to teach. Instructor Rick Garza at Sorbi's Flying Club gave both men a half-dozen classes on the ground before taking them up in a single-engine Cessna in May. “They were only interested in flying big jets,” Garza recalls. But Garza soon gave up on his hapless students. “I just thought they didn't have the aptitude,” he says. “They were like Dumb and Dumber.”

Had law-enforcement agents been looking for Alhazmi and Almihdhar at the time, they could have easily tracked them through bank records. In September 2000, Alhazmi opened a $3,000 checking account at a Bank of America branch. The men also used their real names on driver's licenses, Social Security cards and credit cards. When Almihdhar bought a dark blue 1988 Toyota Corolla for $3,000 cash, he registered it in his name. (He later signed the registration over to Alhazmi, whose name was on the papers when the car was found at Dulles International Airport on September 11.) Of course, agents might have used another resource to pinpoint their location: the phone book. Page 13 of the 2000-2001 Pacific Bell White Pages contains a listing for “alhazmi Nawaf M 6401 Mount Ada Rd. 858-279-5919.”

By then, though, the case seems to have gotten lost deep in the CIA's files. But Almihdhar's name and face surfaced yet again, in the aftermath of the October 2000 bombing of the Cole. Within days of the attack, a team of FBI agents flew to Yemen to investigate. They soon began closing in on suspects. One was a man called Tawfiq bin Attash, a.k.a. Khallad, a fierce, one-legged Qaeda fighter. When analysts at the CIA's Counterterrorism Center in Langley, Va., pulled out the file on Khallad, they discovered pictures of him taken at the Kuala Lumpur meeting. In one of the shots, he is standing next to Almihdhar.

If, as the CIA now claims, it wasn't certain that Almihdhar had terrorist connections, it certainly knew it now. And yet the agency still did nothing and notified no one.

In mid- to late 2000, Almihdhar left San Diego for good. It appears that he spent the next several months bouncing around the Middle East and Southeast Asia. While he was away, his visa expired—a potentially big problem. Yet since the CIA was still not sharing information about Almihdhar's Qaeda connections, the State Department's Consular Office in Saudi Arabia simply rubber-stamped him a new one.

Almihdhar returned to the United States on July 4, 2001, flying into New York. He spent at least some of the time leading up to September traveling around the East Coast and, at least once, meeting with Mohamed Atta and other September 11 plotters in Las Vegas.

Meanwhile, Alhazmi, having flunked out of two California flight schools, decided to try his luck in Phoenix in early 2001. There he hooked up with Qaeda terrorist in training, Hani Hanjour, who eventually piloted Flight 77. In April 2001 Alhazmi headed east, and was pulled over for speeding. Oklahoma State Trooper C. L. Parkins ran Alhazmi's California driver's license through the computer, checked to see if the car was stolen and made sure there wasn't a warrant out for Alhazmi's arrest. When nothing came up, he issued the terrorist two tickets, totaling $138, and sent him on his way. (The tickets were not discovered until after 9-11.) Like Almihdhar, Alhazmi eventually went east, spending time in New Jersey and Maryland. On Aug. 25, he used his credit card to purchase two tickets for Flight 77.

Two days earlier, CIA officials finally, and frantically, awoke to their mistake. That summer, as U.S. intelligence picked up repeated signals that bin Laden was about to launch a major assault, Tenet ordered his staff to scrub the agency's files, looking for anything that might help them thwart whatever was coming. It didn't take long to discover the file on Almihdhar and Alhazmi. CIA officials checked with the INS, only to discover that Almihdhar had traveled out of the country, and was allowed back in on his new visa. On Aug. 23, the CIA sent out an urgent cable, labeled immediate, to the State Department, Customs, INS and FBI, telling them to put the two men on the terrorism watch list.

The FBI began an aggressive, "full field" investigation. Agents searched all nine Marriott hotels in New York City, the place Almihdhar had listed as his "destination" on his immigration forms in July. They also searched hotels in Los Angeles, where the two men originally entered the country back in 1999. But it's unclear whether agents scoured public records for driver's licenses and phone numbers or tried to track plane-ticket purchases. In preparation for their mission, the men had gone to ground.

Now, amid the escalating blame wars in Washington, federal agents are left to wonder how different things might have been if they'd started that search nearly two years before. The FBI's claim that it could have unraveled the plot by watching Alhazmi and Almihdhar, and connecting the dots between them and the other terrorists, seems compelling.

The links would not have been difficult to make: Alhazmi met up with Hanjour, the Flight 77 pilot, in Phoenix in late 2000; six months later, in May 2001, the two men showed up in New Jersey and opened shared bank accounts with two other plotters, Ahmed Alghamdi and Majed Moqed. The next month, Alhazmi helped two other hijackers, Salem Alhazmi (his brother) and Abdulaziz Alomari, open their own bank accounts. Two months after that, in August 2001, the trail would have led to the pilot's ringleader, Mohamed Atta, who had bought plane tickets for Moqed and Alomari. What's more, at least several of the hijackers had traveled to Las Vegas for a meeting in summer 2001, just weeks before the attacks. "It's like three degrees of separation," insists an FBI official.

But would even that have been enough? There's no doubt that Alhazmi and Almihdhar could have been stopped from coming into the country if the CIA had shared its information with other agencies. But then two other hijackers could have been sent to take their place. And given how little the FBI understood Al Qaeda's way of operating—and how it managed to mishandle the key clues it did have—it's possible that agents could have identified all 19 hijackers and still not figured out what they were up to. That, one former FBI official suggests, could have led to the cruelest September 11 scenario of all: "We would have had the FBI watching them get on the plane in Boston and calling Los Angeles," he says. "Could you pick them up on the other end?"

THE INFORMANT WHO LIVED WITH THE HIJACKERS

(By Michael Isikoff with Jamie Reno)

At first, FBI director Bob Mueller insisted there was nothing the bureau could have done to penetrate the 9-11 plot. That account has been modified over time—and now may change again. Newsweek has learned that one of the bureau's informants had a close relationship with two of the hijackers: he was their roommate.

The connection, just discovered by congressional investigators, has stunned some top counterterrorism officials and raised new concerns about the information-sharing among U.S. law-enforcement and intelligence agencies. The two hijackers, Khalid Almihdhar and Nawaf Alhazmi, were hardly unknown to the intelligence community. The CIA was first alerted to them in January 2000, when the two Saudi nationals showed up at a Qaeda "summit" in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia. FBI officials have argued internally for months that if the CIA had more quickly passed along everything it knew about the two men, the bureau could have hunted them down more aggressively.

But both agencies can share in the blame. Upon leaving Malaysia, Almihdhar and Alhazmi went to San Diego, where they took flight-school lessons. In September 2000, the two moved into the home of a Muslim man who had befriended them at the local Islamic Center. The landlord regularly prayed with them and even helped one open a bank account. He was also, sources tell Newsweek, a "tested" undercover "asset" who had been working closely with the FBI office in San Diego on terrorism cases related to Hamas. A senior law-enforcement official told Newsweek the informant never provided the bureau with the names of his two houseguests from Saudi Arabia. Nor does the FBI have any reason to believe the informant was concealing their identities. (He could not be reached for comment.) But the FBI concedes that a San Diego case agent appears to have been at least aware that Saudi visitors were renting rooms in the informant's house. (On one occasion, a source says, the case agent called up the informant and was told he couldn't talk because "Khalid"—a reference to Almihdhar—was in the room.). I. C. Smith, a former top FBI counterintelligence official, says the case agent should have been keeping closer tabs on who his informant was fraternizing with—if only to seek out the houseguests as possible informants. "They should have been asking, 'Who are these guys? What are they doing here?'" This strikes me as a lack of investigative curiosity. About six weeks after moving into the house, Almihdhar left town, explaining to the landlord he was heading back to Saudi Arabia to see his daughter. Alhazmi moved out at the end of 2000.

In the meantime, the CIA was gathering more information about just how potentially dangerous both men were. A few months after the October 2000 bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen, CIA analysts discovered in their Malaysia file that one of the chief suspects in the Cole attack—Tawfiq bin Attash—was present at the "summit" and had been photographed with Almihdhar and Alhazmi. But it wasn't until Aug. 23, 2001, that the CIA sent out an urgent cable to U.S. border and law-enforcement agencies identifying the two men as "possible" terrorists. By then it was too late. The bureau did not realize the San Diego connection until a few days after 9-11, when the informant heard the names of the Pentagon hijackers and called his case agent. "I know those guys," the informant purportedly said, referring to Almihdhar and Alhazmi. "They were my roommates."

But the belated discovery has unsettled some members of the joint House and Senate Intelligence Committees investigating the 9-11 attacks. The panel is tentatively due to begin public hearings as early as Sept. 18, racing to its end-of-the-year deadline. But some members are now worried that they won't get to the bottom of what really happened by then. Support for legislation creating a special blue-ribbon investigative panel, similar to probes conducted after Pearl Harbor and the Kennedy assassination, is increasing. Only then, some members say, will the public learn whether more 9-11 secrets are buried in the government's files.

Mr. HOLLINGS. So what you have, in January of 2000, is not only the informant, the CIA had the information. Again, like I said, they did not communicate it. The dots are never going to get joined. I can see poor Condoleezza Rice standing up and saying: We didn't have anything specific. We didn't have anything specific. She will never get anything specific. She will not get a phone call saying, "We are coming," like we have already called Saddam with. We have told him, "We are coming." But that is not the way the world works with the al-Qaida crowd.

So right to the point, on July 10, 2001, the FBI learned about the Phoenix, AZ, flight school. A memo was sent to the FBI. But it stopped at midlevel—never communicated to the White House, never communicated to the CIA. Again, the dots not joined. I can tell you that right here and now.

Here is a news story from July 21, 2001, before 9/11 of last year, in the Iraqi news. The name of that particular newspaper is Al-Nasiriya.

Quoting from it:

Bin Ladin has become a puzzle and a proof also, of the inability of the American federalism and the CIA to uncover the man and uncover his nest. The most advanced organizations of the world cannot find the man and continues to go in cycles in illusion and pre-suppositions.

It refers to an exercise called "How Do You Bomb the White House." They were planning it.

Let me read this to all the colleagues here:

The phenomenon of Bin Ladin is a healthy phenomenon in the Arab spirit. It is a decision and a determination that the stolen Arab self has come to realize after it got bored with promises of its rulers; After it disgusted itself from their abomination and their corruption, the man had to carry the book of God . . . and write on some white paper "If you are unable to drive off the Marines from the Kaaba, I will do so." It seems that they will be going away because the revolutionary Bin Ladin is insisting very convincingly that he will strike America on the arm that is already hurting.

In other words, the World Trade Towers. Here, over a year ahead of time in the open press in Iraq, they are writing that this man is planning not only to bomb the White House, but where they are already hurting, the World Trade Towers.

I ask unanimous consent to print this article in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Al-Nasiriya, July 21, 2001]

AMERICA, AN OBSESSION CALLED OSAMA BIN LADIN

(By Naeem Abd Muhalhal)

Osama Bin Ladin says that he took from the desert its silence and its anger at the same time.

He has learned how to harm America and has been able to do it, for he gave a bad reputation to the Pentagon as being weakened in more than one spot in the world. In order to follow one step taken by Bin Ladin America has put to work all its apparatus, its computers and its satellites just as the governor cowboy of Texas has done. Bin Ladin's name has been posted on all the internet sites and an amount of $5 million dollars has been awarded to anyone who could give any information that would lead to the arrest of this lanky, lightly bearded man. In this man's heart you'll find an insistence, a strange determination that he will reach one day the tunnels of the White House and will bomb it with everything that is in it.

We all know that every age has its revolutionary phenomenon. In Mexico there was Zapata. In Bolivia there was Che Guevara, during the seventies came out Marcos and the Red Brigades in Italy, the Baader Meinhof Gang in Germany and there was Leila Khaled the Palestinian woman and others. They all appeared in violence and disappeared quietly. During the nineties Bin Ladin came out in the open having been completely overtaken in his mind by the robbery happening to his country and its treasurers. For him it was the beginning of the revolution. For this endeavor he mobilized everything that he had of money, of investments and Sudan was his first stop. Bin Ladin ended up in Afghanistan where his revolutionary drive pushed this stubborn revolutionary to plan very carefully, and in a very detailed manner, his stand to push back the boastful American onslaught and to change the American legend into a bubble of soap.

Because Bin Ladin knows what causes pain to America, he played America's game, just as an oppressed man entertains itself with the thing oppressing him. He countered with the language of dynamite and explosives in the city of Khobar and destroyed two US embassies in Nairobi and Dar al Salaam.

America says, admitting just like a bird in the midst of a tornado, that Bin Ladin is behind the bombing of its destroyer in Aden. The fearful series of events continues for America and the terror within America gets to the point that the Governor of Texas increases the amount of the award, just as the stubbornness of the other man and his challenge increases. This challenge makes it such that one of his grandchildren comes from Jeddah traveling on the official Saudi Arabia airlines and celebrates with him the marriage of one of the daughters of his companions. Bin Ladin has become a puzzle and a proof also, of the inability of the American federalism and the C.I.A. to uncover the man and uncover his nest. The most advanced organizations of the world cannot find the man and continues to go in cycles in illusion and presuppositions. They still hope that he could come out from his nest one day, they hope that he would come out from his hiding hole and one day they will point at him their missiles and he will join Guevara, Hassan Abu Salama, Kamal Nasser, Kanafani and others. The man responds with a thin smile and replies to the correspondent from Al Jazeera that he will continue to be the obsession and worry of America and the Jews, and that even that night he will practice and work on an exercise called "How Do You Bomb the White House." And because they know that he can get there, they have started to go through their nightmares on their beds and the leaders have had to wear their bulletproof vests.

Meanwhile America has started to pressure the Taliban movement so that it would hand them Bin Ladin, while he continues to smile and still thinks seriously, with the seriousness of the Bedouin of the desert about the way he will try to bomb the Pentagon after he destroys the White House . . .

The phenomenon of Bin Ladin is a healthy phenomenon in the Arab spirit. It is a decision and a determination that the stolen Arab self has come to realize after it got bored with promises of its rulers: After it disgusted itself from their abomination and their corruption, the man had to carry the book of God and the Kalashnikov and write on some off white paper "If you are unable to drive off the Marines from the Kaaba, I will do so." It seems that they will be going away because the revolutionary Bin Ladin is insisting very convincingly that he will strike America on the arm that is already hurting. That the man will not be swayed by the plant leaves of Whitman nor by the "Adventures of Indiana Jones" and will curse the memory of Frank Sinatra every time he hears his songs. This new awareness of the image that Bin Ladin has become gives shape to the resting areas and stops for every Arab revolutionary. It is the subject of our admiration here in Iraq because it shares with us in a unified manner our resisting stand, and just as he fixes his gaze on the Al Aqsa we greet him. We hail his tears as they see the planes of the Western world taking revenge against his heroic operations by bombing the cities of Iraq . . .

To Bin Ladin I say that revolution, the wings of a dove and the bullet are all but one and the same thing in the heart of a believer.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Then on August 15, just prior to September 11 of last year, we had Moussaoui arrested in Minnesota. He wanted to know how to fly a plane, but not how to take off in a plane. And the FBI's Coleen Rowley, from Minnesota, testified before the Congress that she had written a memo, and the way she summed it up, they could crash the plane into the World Trade Towers.

Again, Mr. President, I could continue to go down the list, but we have this USA Today article of September 2 of this year, where the hijacker allegedly bragged what they were going to do on September 11. The year before the attacks, the Germans reported the particular terrorist saying that was exactly what they were going to do.

And there is a Time magazine article of May 27 of this year that sums up how the United States missed all of the clues. We have seen all the particular articles, and now we have the amendment in to fix the problem.

Let me just say a word about, and not in any criticism of our distinguished Director of the National Security Council, but Condoleezza Rice is about as steeped in domestic security as I am in foreign policy.

You can't find anyone more qualified in foreign policy. This young lady graduated at 20 years of age Phi Beta Kappa from the University of Denver. Then she earned her master's at the University of Notre Dame a year later, when she was 21. At the age of 27, she received her doctorate from the School of International Studies at the University of Denver, and then in 1981 became a faculty member of Stanford University in foreign policy.

So she has been steeped in that particular discipline all her life. Let me quote from her particular biography:

The Bush administration has substantially restructured the National Security Council during its first three weeks in office, providing an early indication of how the new White House plans to handle foreign policy.

She cut the NSC staff by a third, reorganized it to emphasize defense strategy, national missile defense, and international economics.

In a White House first, Rice has expanded her regular meetings with Secretary of State Colin L. Powell and Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld to include Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill.

It also indicates:

. . . Bush's desire to decrease U.S. involvement in the Balkans and signal to Russia "that this administration is not going to treat Russia as a special case." Other notable changes have been the elimination of the divisions handling international environmental and health issues, and of the NSC's communications and legislative offices.

The reason I point this out is that prior to coming on board, the previous Director of the National Security Council, Sandy Berger, had a one-on-one meeting, telling Dr. Rice: Look, you are coming on board, and most of your time is going to be taken up with counterterrorism. There isn't any question about it. But what does she do? Instead, she takes action on everything that she knows about and she is absolutely authoritative in, but is not the need of the moment.

My problem with this bill is that it doesn't include any of the agencies that had a failure on 9/11 in the proposed Department. The CIA failed. The FBI failed. The National Security Agency failed. On September 10, the NSA got a message in Arabic: Tomorrow is zero hour. But they didn't translate it from Arabic into English until September 12. And then the National Security Council, limply standing there, not being informed of anything, just said: Well, they didn't give us anything specific.

It is the National Security Council's function to bring all the elements together, the gathering of intelligence, the analysis of intelligence, the joining of dots, the fixing of responsibility. The buck stops here. That is what this simple amendment does.

It puts the FBI Director on the Council. Now we have a domestic intelligence effort, something we never had. I met immediately with Bob Mueller. I have his particular budget. I gave him some $750 million to up-date his computers and synchronize them with the FAA and the Immigration Service, the Border Patrol, and everything else, so that we could have one-stop shopping on knowledge of any kind of a terrorist threat.

We also gave him the money transfer of the funds last fall to institute his new Department of Domestic Intelligence. Now the Domestic Intelligence is supposed to give that over to the Department of Homeland Security. But the Homeland Department does not gather any intelligence. It only takes what it is given, and it only analyzes what is given and, in a sense, doesn't know what to ask for because they are not in the game. It is the same with the CIA. I can see right now a breakdown continuing between domestic and foreign intelligence.

I have talked to Director Mueller on this particular score. He has hired experienced CIA personnel at the FBI to help him set it up as a Department of Domestic Intelligence. He says he is talking with the CIA. But he hasn't really gotten all the way down to his agents and directors talking at the State level. They have yet to talk to the chiefs of police. I know because we have had meetings with respect to port security. It will take time. It may take 5 years for this new Department to really get in gear and work correctly.

But let me say here and now that we have to have this fixed. The only place I know to be able to fix it is with the President himself—and we have that type of President. That President is no nonsense. He wants to have on his desk timely reports on intelligence, just like he gets from Carl Rove, timely reports on politics. Let's give the emphasis and time—a little bit at least—to intelligence. Give me those timely reports. And that timely report has to be fused not just from the Department of Homeland Security, or the office, or the bureau, or whatever else they call Governor Ridge over there, but it has to be fused at the National Security Council level, with foreign intelligence.

I am not for the President having to get his director over here confirmed by the Senate. I would favor the Thompson amendment. We don't want the National Security Council Director to come here and be confirmed. I think Governor Ridge, in contrast to Condoleezza Rice, knows law enforcement. He has been a Governor, been in Congress, been chief law enforcement officer of Pennsylvania. He knows domestic security, which is something that Dr. Rice has never been into until 9/11. She will have a hard time learning at that level, unless she gets help.

So I think Governor Ridge is an excellent individual in that White House, or wherever they put him, to help her begin to report. But she has to ultimately, as Director, fuse domestic with foreign intelligence, and all the other intelligence you might get from places like the Drug Enforcement Administration. The financing of terrorism is drugs. We know it. They have to follow the banks. She has to get intelligence from the Secretary of the Treasury. She has to work with all these particular entities, and the President doesn't have to take this volumes and volumes of intelligence reports and sit down and read all day. It has to be not only analyzed but prioritized. So it is right in front of him, what he has to give his attention to at that moment and throughout the day, each day, on our homeland security.

I yield the floor temporarily.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I was going to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, as our highly esteemed colleague knows full well, he occupies a position in this Chamber almost second to none by virtue of his long experience and as a chief executive officer of his State, a Governor. In listening very carefully to what he said, it occurs to me that there is merit in this amendment.

However, my question to our colleague, given the rather dramatic points he makes here, is: Should we not allow the current President the opportunity to communicate with the Senate his views on this? It seems to me this council was established for the specific reason of being advisory to him. It is thought of as his means of establishing an infrastructure, as all Presidents have done, that best serves the method by which they wish to govern and discharge their responsibilities as President. My committee, Armed Services, the Foreign Relations Committee, the Committee on Governmental Affairs, and others that possibly have some oversight on this type of amendment, it seems to me, could quickly gather the views and, in all probability, we may end up with our colleague's amendment. But at least afford the courtesy to the President to share with the Congress—and most specifically the Senate—the views before they act on such a dramatic piece of legislation as this.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Of course, we have the President's views. He submitted a bill. In general, that particular view is before the Senate in the form of the House bill. While we have our own views—and that is our responsibility—this is not to preempt the President. In all fairness, when you see the distinguished chairman of Armed Services, he is who is disturbed. Talk about turf—not of the Senator from Virginia, but the Pentagon, the Department of State. Calls went out to the Department of State on this particular amendment. They don't want that FBI. They don't want the domestic intelligence. They don't want that Secretary of Homeland Security. They want their National Security Council to be solely engaged in foreign policy and foreign and international threats, not domestic.

So no siree, that would be a put off, as it would be for the Pentagon crowd. We worked very closely with the Army and Navy and their intelligence, and I have the greatest admiration for Secretary Rumsfeld. But they have to report in, too, to this domestic intelligence. That still has to be—the intelligence—fused with CIA foreign intelligence at the level of the National Security Council. There is no substitute for it.

If the President doesn't like it, he will say so to the House and it will be knocked out in conference. So don't worry about that. I am not worried about it. I want everybody to know here and now this bill does nothing to avoid and prevent another 9/11. All the agencies that, on 9/11, performed admirably—the Coast Guard was doing its job, FEMA was doing its job, and they got the agriculture people who were doing their job—they are the ones being included. Some 110,000 of the 170,000 people to be in this proposed department, with respect to seaport security, airline security, and rail security are already together in the Department of Transportation. We have been working on that. We have instituted an Office of Domestic Preparedness within the Justice Department. We have all of that going.

But the ones that failed are totally left out of the Department of Homeland Security—the ones that failed us on 9/11 go untouched. Please, my distinguished colleague, don't come up and say let's find out what he thinks and put this off. We know what he thinks. Vote for this amendment and send it to the House. If they knock it out, it will be dropped out.

For one, I go along with Senator THOMPSON. We don't need to confirm Dr. Rice at the National Security Council. Generally speaking, we don't have her name over on her budget. We talk about that on the Appropriations Committee level—if there is an Office of Homeland Security there. I go along with the Senator from Tennessee not to require that office be confirmed over here because, as President, I know good and well I would not depend on the legislative branch's intelligence. I can tell you that right now.

With any Department they would institute, I have a mammoth responsibility. The buck stops here, and I cannot explain another 9/11 by going along with this bill and saying the problem is solved. It is not solved at all. Don't delay me, Senator. You know and I know it will be taken out if the President opposes it.

Mr. WARNER. I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for the Senator of South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Virginia be yielded 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee. I wish to commend the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and our very dear, soon-departing friend from Tennessee for their very important work on this bill, homeland security.

AMENDMENT NO. 4513

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I will now turn, I say to the Senator from South Carolina, my remarks to the question of the pending amendment by the Senator from Tennessee, and I thank my good friend for his reply to my question.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, we were, as a body in recess—fortunately, the leadership decided this body should go into recess so we could watch the President of the United States deliver a speech which, in my judgment, is one of the most important speeches ever delivered before the United Nations.

He laid out with specific clarity the threats to the world posed by Saddam Hussein, the threats to the world of inaction at this time, and that those who say to him, there is concern this Nation is acting unilaterally—our President very clearly gave the United Nations a clear and respectful mandate to act now in the face of unrefuted facts that in 16 instances, Saddam Hussein has defied the United Nations and the Security Council. What better evidence?

He alluded to the fact that Saddam Hussein has provided evidence—clearly, it is there—of a highly increased tempo of activities toward the manufacture of weapons of mass destruction, weapons which in no way are needed for the rightful defense of the sovereign Nation of Iraq, weapons that could only be manufactured and devised for offensive actions against other nations.

This is not a war, which we are alluding to, between Iraq and the United States. This is a war of free nations—many free nations—free people, innocent people whose lives are at risk in the same way lives were risked on 9/11 a year ago in New York, in my State of Virginia, and in Pennsylvania. I commend the President.

It is interesting, against his speech is the background of another President, President Clinton, who on February 19, 1998, referring to his own perspective on terrorism, said, referring to the terrorists:

They actually take advantage of the freer movement of people, information and ideas, and they will be all the more lethal if we allow them to build arsenals of nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons and the missiles to deliver them. We simply cannot allow this to happen. There is no more clear example of this threat than Saddam Hussein's Iraq. His regime threatens the safety of his people, the stability of the region, and the security of all the rest of us.

Our President built on that foundation in this historic speech that was delivered today. It is my fervent hope that the Congress of the United States, hopefully led by the Senate, will accede to the President's request made to a group of us from the House and Senate who were in his office just weeks ago, when he called on the Congress, to act with respect to this situation such that the executive branch, led by President Bush, and the Congress are arm in arm as we carry forward our war against terrorism and, most specifically, the threats posed by Iraq.

We are here on the issue of homeland defense, the issue of a new Department. We have had a good debate. We have our differences of view but, nevertheless, I see the momentum, I hope, in this body to move forward with this legislation.

I support the overall intent of this legislation. I strongly agree with the need to better organize our Government to protect our homeland, but I do not support all the provisions of this bill.

Two such provisions are addressed by the pending Thompson amendment, which I strongly support, which would strike titles II and III of the underlying legislation. These titles have been of concern to me for some time, and in a letter dated July 17 of this year, which I ask now unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, I so expressed my concerns to the managers of this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, title II mandates the establishment of a National Office for Combating Terrorism, and title III mandates the development of a national strategy for combating terrorism and homeland security response. I note that the administration is strongly opposed to both of these titles.

The arguments against title II are not unlike the questions I posed to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina regarding his measure, which is also pending before the Senate. And that is, we should accord, as a legislative body, the Congress, the maximum flexibility to our President, be he Democrat or Republican, in establishing that structure he deems necessary in his Department to best serve his style of discharging the obligations of the Office of President.

Our President respectfully says to the Congress: I do not need what is proposed in title II.

Again, on October 8, 2001, following the tragic events of September 11,

President Bush formed the Office of Homeland Security in the Executive Office of the President to oversee immediate homeland security concerns and to propose long-term solutions.

Governor Ridge has discharged with great distinction the responsibilities of that office. They worked hard under the President's guidance to produce a comprehensive plan that now deserves our serious consideration and support.

Again, the mandate to establish an Office for Combating Terrorism within the Executive Office of the President of the United States, in my judgment, would be redundant to the structure currently in place, particularly since the President has already stated his intention to retain the position of Assistant to the President for Homeland Security. I urge the Senate to respect the right of the President under the Constitution to establish his office, his infrastructure, which best serves his style of management.

Turning to a second concern, and that is budget review and certification authority provided for in this legislation to the proposed Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism, in my view, such authority will undercut the ability of several Cabinet-level officials, most notably the Secretary of Defense, Secretary of State, Attorney General, and the Director of Central Intelligence, as well as the new Secretary of Homeland Security, assuming the Senate and the House act, to carry out their primary responsibilities.

In the case of the Department of Defense, the Secretary of Defense—and I have had the privilege in my 24 years in the Senate of working with a succession of those Secretaries—the Secretary of Defense has a wide-ranging responsibility to protect the vital U.S. interests and to protect against the threats that are ever mounting against our Nation.

The Department, under the leadership of Secretary Rumsfeld, is currently engaged in an all-out global war against terrorism designed to bring to justice those responsible for the September 11 attacks on our Nation and to deter would-be terrorists and those who harbor them from further attacks. The Secretary of Defense must ensure that the Department is adequately and properly funded to carry out its many missions.

Pending before the Congress is the largest increase in defense spending in many years, decades, but it is necessary. Our committee, the authorization committee, together with the Appropriations Committee, will soon bring their respective conference reports to this body for approval, and I anticipate rapid approval by both Houses of Congress.

It would be unwise to subject portions of the budget of these respective Cabinet officers to a veto in many respects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. Would the Senator like additional time?

Mr. WARNER. I ask for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield 2 additional minutes to the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. I turn now to title III. The pending legislation requires the development of a national strategy for combating terrorism and homeland security response. I have been the author, with colleagues on the other side of the aisle, Senator Nunn, who was chairman of our Committee on Armed Services, and Chairman LEVIN, the current chairman, and urged that these various reports concerning the security of our United States be brought by the administration to the Congress in a timely manner so we can make our appropriate decisions on the budget.

Time and again, our committees have done that. It has been, generally speaking, a good response by successive administrations on this subject.

When the President established the Office of Homeland Security, he directed Governor Ridge to develop a comprehensive strategy to protect the United States from attack, which is right here. Therefore, I think it is again redundant for this specific section in title III to be enacted which more or less formalizes, again, the necessity for producing this report which the President has voluntarily done.

I see the distinguished Senator from Connecticut in the Chamber. I commend him for the hard work he has done, and I strongly urge that this body be given the opportunity soon to make its final deliberations and that this important legislation be adopted in whatever form is the will of the Senate.

I congratulate the Senator from Connecticut, as well as the Senator from Tennessee.

I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
Washington, DC, July 17, 2002.

Hon. JOSEPH I. LIEBERMAN, Chairman,
Hon. FRED THOMPSON,
Ranking Member,
Committee on Governmental Affairs,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LIEBERMAN AND SENATOR THOMPSON: On July 15, I joined with Senator Levin in sending a letter to your Committee on the Bush Administration's proposal to create a Department of Homeland Security. That letter addressed issues in the Administration's proposal which fall under the jurisdiction of the Senate Armed Services Committee. Today, I am writing to express my concerns about certain aspects of S. 2452, the National Homeland Security and Combating Terrorism Act of 2002, which was reported out of the Government Affairs Committee on June 24, 2002. While I support the overall intent of the legislation and agree with the need to better organize our government to protect our homeland, much has changed since this bill was reported to the Senate.

In the intervening weeks, the President has proposed the establishment of a Department of Homeland Security and the most fundamental reorganization of the United States Government since the passage of the National Security Act of 1947. This proposal is the logical culmination of a very deliberate process that started when then-Governor George W. Bush established homeland security as his highest priority during a speech at the Citadel in September 1999, stating, "Once a strategic afterthought, homeland defense has become an urgent duty."

Following the tragic events of September 11, President Bush formed the Office of Homeland Security in the Executive Office of the White House to oversee immediate homeland security concerns and to propose long-term solutions. Governor Ridge and others have worked hard under the President's guidance to produce a comprehensive plan that now deserves our serious consideration and support.

While I support the establishment of a Department of Homeland Security, I do not support creating a National Office for Combating Terrorism as outlined in Title II of S. 2452. In my view, establishing this position within the Executive Office of the President would be redundant to the structure put in place by the President on October 8, 2001. The President has already stated his intention to retain the position of Assistant to the President for Homeland Security.

I have serious concerns about the budget review and certification authority provided to this proposed Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism by S. 2452. In my view, such authorities would undercut the ability of several Cabinet-level officials, including the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of State, the Attorney General and the Director of Central Intelligence, to carry out their primary responsibilities. In the case of the Department of Defense, the Secretary has wide-ranging responsibilities to protect vital U.S. interests and to prevent threats from reaching our shores. The Department, under the leadership of Secretary Rumsfeld, is currently engaged in an all-out global war against terrorism—designed to bring to justice those responsible for the September 11 attacks on our nation and to deter would-be terrorists and those who harbor them from further attacks. The Secretary of Defense must ensure that the Department is adequately and properly funded to carry out its many missions. It would be unwise to subject the budget carefully prepared by the Secretary of Defense to a "de-certification"—in essence, a veto—by an official who does not have to balance the many competing needs of the Department of Defense and the men and women of the Armed Forces.

I also note that Title III of S. 2452 requires the development of a National Strategy for Combating Terrorism and the Homeland Security Response. When the President established the Office of Homeland Security, he directed Governor Ridge to develop a comprehensive strategy to protect the United States from terrorist attacks. President Bush unveiled his Homeland Security Strategy earlier this week, precluding the need for the requirement in Title III, S. 2452. Legislating anything other than a periodic review and update of this strategy would be burdensome and would divert attention and resources away from the Administration's focus on homeland defense and the global war on terrorism. As the President stated in releasing the Homeland Security Strategy on July 16, "The U.S. Government has no more important mission than protecting the homeland from future terrorist attacks." We in the Congress should do all we can to help our President achieve this goal.

I hope my comments are useful as you continue your work on this important legislation.

With kind regards, I am
Sincerely,

JOHN WARNER,
Ranking Member.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I am proud of the work our Governmental Affairs Committee has done. It was a very open process. We included provisions recommended by members of both parties. I think it is a strong proposal. Obviously, there is some disagreement with the White House about parts of it, but I repeat what I have said before, that we are in agreement on: First, the basic necessity to better organize our homeland defenses, because this disorganization which exists now is dangerous. Second, there is broad bipartisan agreement on this bill we have reported out of our committee and the White House about what I have estimated to be 90 percent of the components of the bill. We are having a series of tussles about the remaining 10 percent. The sooner we resolve them, the better. The sooner we get this bill passed and on the way to a conference committee with the House and authorize the administration to set up this new Department, the safer the American people will be.

I appreciate the Senator's call for expedited action, and I hope and pray that others in the Senate heed that call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to speak in opposition to the idea for a National Office for Combating Terrorism, which would be a position confirmed by the Senate, because I believe the responsibilities which are enumerated in the bill can be handled by the Secretary for Homeland Security so that it is not necessary to have another position of Director for the National Office for Combating Terrorism.

As the responsibilities are set forth in section 201(c), first to develop national objectives and policies for combating terrorism, that is a core function for the Secretary of Homeland Security. Second, to directly review the development of a comprehensive national assessment of terrorist threats, again, I believe is something which can be handled by the Secretary of Homeland Security, which is a position to be confirmed.

Another responsibility enumerated in the statute is to coordinate the implementation of the strategy by agencies with responsibilities for combating terrorism, and there again it is my view that that can be handled by the Secretary of Homeland Security.

Another responsibility is to work with agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, to address vulnerabilities identified by the Director of Central Infrastructure Protection within the Department. Again, that is a matter which can be handled by the Secretary of Homeland Security.

Another responsibility is to coordinate, with the advice of the Secretary, the development of a comprehensive annual budget for the program and activities under the strategy, including the budgets of the military departments and agencies within the national foreign intelligence program related to international terrorism, but excluding military programs, projects, or activities relating to force protection.

I believe there is sound reason for having budget authority to coordinate overall the intelligence functions. However, again, I think to the extent we grant that overall budget authority, the logical place to put it is in the Secretary of Homeland Security.

As the other responsibilities are enumerated, to have the exercise, function, and authority for Federal terrorism prevention and response agencies, again, these are matters for the Secretary of Homeland Security.

The intent of the drafter of these provisions is correct in seeking to provide the coordination, but to have another officeholder confirmed by the Senate and in the West Wing is not advisable. The analogy to the National Security Council position now held by Dr. Condoleezza Rice, I think, is inapposite and does not apply to making the Director for the National Office of Combating Terrorism a confirmed position.

There is a real need on the overall coordination, to be sure we have all of the agencies responsible for intelligence and analysis under one umbrella, such as the CIA, the FBI, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the National Security Agency, and all of the intelligence agencies.

A point worth repeating is that had we put all of the dots together on matters known prior to September 11, 2001, there was a veritable blueprint and September 11 might well have been prevented. There was the Phoenix office of the FBI reporting on a man taking flight training, a big picture of Osama bin Laden on his wall, and other respective connections to al-Qaida. We had the two terrorists known by the CIA in Kuala Lumpur who turned out to be terrorist pilots of planes on 9/11. The information was not given to the FBI or the INS in a timely fashion. There was the threat given to the National Security Agency on September 10, 2001, which was not transcribed, that something was going to happen the next day. It was not interpreted until September 12, after the events of 9/11 had occurred.

Perhaps most importantly, there was the effort to obtain a warrant under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act as to Zacarias Moussaoui, and had that warrant been obtained, there was an actual treasure trove of information linking Moussaoui to al-Qaida.

The FBI used the wrong standard, as disclosed in the testimony of Special Agent Coleen Rowley, who appeared with FBI Director Mueller on June 6 at an oversight hearing by the Judiciary Committee. In Agent Rowley's letter, she talked about the U.S. attorney in Minnesota requiring 75 to 80 percent probabilities. Agent Rowley thought that was wrong. She thought the standard should be a preponderance of the evidence, more likely than not—51 percent, as she put it. However, she was wrong as well because the standard is articulated in the case captioned Gates v. Illinois, an opinion written by then-Justice Rehnquist, saying the standard was suspicion, and Justice Rehnquist went back to the Krantz case with Chief Justice Marshall talking about suspicion on the totality of the factors. However, there was ample evidence to obtain a Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act warrant for Zacarias Moussaoui.

It would have been thought that the FBI would have had its house in order after their experience on Wen Ho Lee, when at the highest levels of the Justice Department, the matter rightfully went to the Attorney General at that time and they declined to issue a vice warrant and later determined, even by the review of the Justice Department, there was probable cause. That matter was subjected to very intense oversight by the Judiciary Committee at that time.

We have pursued the oversight on Zacarias Moussaoui. We found in closed hearings—this much can be disclosed—the FBI agents are still not applying the correct standard. I wrote to FBI Director Mueller on July 10, 2002. We had the hearings on July 9. I asked when they would apply the right standard. Earlier this week on Tuesday there was another oversight hearing by the full Judiciary Committee, this time publicly, and the Department of Justice representative acknowledged the wrong standard had been applied, but says they have corrected it with examples. We are waiting to see the specifics.

The impact of this is that there ought to be one umbrella under which the analysis of all of the intelligence agencies occurs. The amendment which has been offered here, the provision of section 201, which the pending amendment seeks to strike, has a laudable purpose. It is seeking that kind of coordination, but it simply does not require a director for a national office of combating terrorism, which would be a confirmed position.

The language in the bill needs to be specified so the burden is on those who oppose the coordination to come forward. I wrote to Governor Ridge on August 1 referring to a meeting which had been held the previous day. I think it appropriate to quote briefly from this letter. I was very pleased to hear the President's affirmative response yesterday to the proposal to have analysis from every intelligence agency—CIA, FBI, DIA, et cetera—under the umbrella of the Department of Homeland Security with the Secretary having the authority to direct those intelligence agencies to supply his Department with the requisite intelligence data.

The key language of the responsibilities which I believe should be in the bill, and I intend to offer an amendment if we cannot get this worked out by agreement is that the Directorate of Intelligence within the Department of Homeland Security shall be responsible for the following:

(1) On behalf of the secretary, subject to disapproval by the President, directing the agencies described under subsection (a)(1)(B) to provide intelligence information, analyses of intelligence information and such other intelligence-related information as the Directorate of Intelligence deems necessary.

The thrust of this language would give the Secretary the authority to command all the analyses unless the President disapproves. However, the language to have the President direct the Secretary to have this oversight responsibility is unworkable because you cannot take it to the President to ask for his authority on each occasion. However, if there is strong reason to disallow the Secretary's authority in a specific case, then it is subject to disapproval of the President. I do not think that is necessary, but in order to avoid any controversy, the language ought to be included in the statute.

Although I have already put this letter in the RECORD before, I think it is worth including at this stage of the debate, so I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, August 1, 2002.

Hon. TOM RIDGE,
Director of Homeland Security,
Washington, DC.

DEAR TOM: I was very pleased to hear the President's affirmative response yesterday to the proposal to have analysts from every intelligence agency (CIA, FBI, DIA, etc.) under the umbrella of the Department of Homeland Security with the Secretary having the authority to direct those intelligence agencies to supply his Department with the requisite intelligence data.

As I said in the meeting in the Cabinet Room yesterday, I think that had all of the intelligence information known prior to September 11th been under one umbrella, the terrorist attacks of September 11th might have been prevented.

Senator Thompson, as I understand him, did not disagree with that ultimate approach except to express the view that he thought that changes in the structure of the intelligence community should await further studies. My own strongly held view is that we have a unique opportunity to make the changes in the intelligence community now because of the imminent terrorist threats; and, if we don't act now, we will be back to business as usual.

As you and I discussed in our meeting of July 29, 2002, there have been many proposals to place the intelligence agencies under one umbrella, including legislation which I introduced in 1996 when I chaired the Intelligence Committee, and the current proposals which have been made by General Scowcroft.

I suggest that Section 132(b) of the bill reported by the Governmental Affairs Committee be modified by adding at the beginning a new paragraph (1) to read as follows:

(b) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Directorate of Intelligence shall be responsible for the following:

(1) On behalf of the Secretary, subject to disapproval by the President, directing the agencies described under subsection (a)(1)(B) to provide intelligence information, analyses of intelligence information and such other intelligence-related information as the Directorate of Intelligence deems necessary.

I am sending copies of this letter to Senator Lieberman and Senator Thompson so that we may all discuss these issues further. My best.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

Mr. SPECTER. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER). The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania for his remarks and his support of the Thompson amendment. I thank the Senator from Virginia for the same. I think both of these Senators, without dispute, would be recognized as people who have been students and have been leaders in the areas we are dealing with today. I think their support on this important amendment is crucial.

I was particularly taken with the comments of Senator WARNER as he related his thoughts listening to the President a little while ago before the United Nations. I had the same thoughts. The President made a magnificent speech. In part, it was a legal brief, where he outlined ad seriatim the various instances where Saddam Hussein had rejected the sanctions that had been placed on him by the United Nations, rejected the resolutions that had been passed by the Security Council time and time and time again, rejected inspectors, rejected sanctions, basically rendering what the United Nations and the international community as a whole and specifically the Security Council, what they had done, rendering it a nullity.

I thought it was a very effective walk through history. There was no secret information disclosed. It was a rendition of what we all should have known. The people who were listening to him today were taken on that walk down memory lane of all the things that have happened since 1990 and the attempts that the United Nations have made, the attempts the Security Council have made, all thwarted by this one country, as he continued to oppress his own people, as he continued to either attack or plan attacks for others, as he continued to develop his weapons of mass destruction, as he finally acknowledged, yes, he did have chemical and biological weapons after lying about it for all those years and our inspectors telling us he had a virtual Manhattan nuclear project the last time we went in there. And now he has closed us out and we are wringing our hands over what we know and what we do not know.

That is our position. Internationally, the entire world is, because he has put us in that position, once again, and deprived us of any knowledge of exactly what he is doing, although we know he has the intelligence, he has the scientists, he has the infrastructure, the capability, the know-how, the desire, everything, except possibly enriched uranium with which to make a nuclear weapon. Unfortunately, there is a lot of that in the world. We do not know whether he has it.

Part of it was an effective legal brief. Part of it was inspirational. It was an appeal to the United Nations for it not to become irrelevant in terms of world peace. If the U.N. and the Security Council allow a country such as this, a regime such as this, to thwart the very purpose of the creation of the United Nations, then what authority, what standing, what moral suasion is it going to have in the future when the next tinhorn dictator comes along and hunkers down and takes a little bombing and goes on with his suppression of people and killing of innocents and using weapons of mass destruction on his own people as he prepares for the next attack. I thought it was very effective.

And what is the relationship between Saddam Hussein and terrorism? The President pointed out one of the most dangerous circumstances we can contemplate is having a regime such as his with the ability to transfer his capabilities over to terrorists.

We know he has a long history of relationships with various terrorist organizations, including some with al-Qaida. Are we to assume he would not ever use as a surrogate someone to do his dirty work? It is extremely relevant to the battle on terrorism. I think those who urge that we totally clean up the battle on terrorism over here, because it is a distinct problem, before we address the situation in Iraq are missing that point.

Which brings us to the bill we are considering today. It is very relevant.

It is a homeland security bill. This is where all the chickens come home to roost in regard to our Nation's security.

What concerns me about this bill is that in more than one instance there is an attempt to diminish the President's authority. This bill would not give the President authority that other Presidents have had. Most all of the Members serving here today served under President Clinton. It would take away authority President Clinton had with regard to national security. This bill would lessen—give less authority, in terms of the management of this monolithic new Department we are about to create, than the head of the FAA has to manage the FAA.

With regard to the subject matter that is addressed by the Thompson amendment, we would not give the President the right to have his own adviser inside the White House as he deals with all these issues. That concerns me. I do not think that is going in the right direction.

We are not going to do anything in this Congress to diminish Congress's traditional role. Senator BYRD and Senator STEVENS have made it clear that they are not going to stand back and let the traditional appropriations authority of the Congress be set aside. Senator LIEBERMAN has made that clear. The bill reflects that position. I am sure we will be able to work out something along those lines that does not diminish our authority in any way. We have the power of the purse. We have the power of the purse.

This bill creates many positions, including the new Secretary, that will be Senate confirmed. He will have to come before this body. So we are not diminishing the authority of the Congress. What we are doing is establishing a brandnew, important Department that we are going to have to approach in a bit of a different way than we have approached other Departments at other times because we have not been very successful with other Departments at other times. This Government is rife with Departments and governmental agencies that have waste and fraud and abuse, sending out checks for billions of dollars to people who are not even alive; losing large pieces of equipment, at least on the books, such as ships and things of that nature; having the GAO come before us year after year after year, saying these agencies are not doing any better. They cannot pass an audit. Government as a whole cannot pass an audit. We do not know what assets and liabilities we have. We cannot keep up with them. It is a mess.

We are pulling 22 of these agencies into a new Department. We cannot approach it the same old way. We have to have a 21st century paradigm in order to address a 21st century problem.

Most of the rules we are operating under now were created in the 1950s when we had a paperwork Government. People came into Government at this position, worked for 20 years, and were promoted in lockstep in these 15 steps, with 10 steps within each of the 15, totally unable to address modern-day problems.

As the GAO tells us we cannot handle the information technology challenge that faces our Government, private industry has been able to. We have been trying to incorporate information technology capability in the IRS for years. We have spent billions of dollars and still the computers will not talk to each other—and they are not the only ones. We have human capital problems. We have financial management problems—year after year.

So that is all the background for considering an amendment such as this, which addresses the bill where it creates a new Office of Combating Terrorism.

We are suggesting the President ought to have a little flexibility, a little traditional flexibility to have, in the White House—not over at the new Department but in the White House—a person he chooses to coordinate not only what is going on in the new Department but the important national security, or homeland security, entities that are not in the new Department. Coordination is needed.

We have that coordinated. The President established an Office of Homeland Security. The President established an Office of Combating Terrorism within the NSC. Those are already there. You say we need them Senate confirmed. NSC is not Senate confirmed. We have a Senate-confirmed position we are creating in the new Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

This bill, as it is drafted now, mandates the development of a national strategy. We have a national strategy. We have had it since July. I don't know whether the idea is to set the old one aside and come up with a new one or submit the one the President has already put out again. This was a good idea back several months ago. Time has passed it by.

The suggestion is made that this new person inside the White House, confirmed by the Senate over the President's objection, would have budgetary authority that would allow this new person to decertify the homeland security budget. The budget goes to him before it even goes to OMB. What kind of situation is that going to be? What if you were asked to take on the job of new Secretary of Homeland Security knowing that your budget was going to go to some guy over in the White House and he had to be satisfied before it even got to you? How would you like it over at the OMB, when we are going into a period of deficit, when people, apparently in this Congress, still think we can have guns and butter indefinitely, we don't have any problem spending helter-skelter, left and right?

He has to balance all that. And he has a guy over in the White House who has only one priority, homeland security. And as important as it is, it is not the only priority this Government has. But he has veto power over the Government.

There never has been a circumstance like this in the history of Government. There never has been a big Department, like the Department of Homeland Security, and what we are creating, with authority and responsibility and jurisdiction over the issue at hand, homeland security in this case, and a White House-confirmed position with decertification budget authority all at the same time.

I think it would absolutely be havoc for any administration, Democrat or Republican. I think it would lessen accountability, not increase accountability. Goodness knows, we need increased accountability.

The President has said he is going to keep Governor Ridge. I don't know whether the idea is we will give this new fellow an office down at the other end of the hall or that the President is not being square with us, that he will really get rid of Ridge or that he will give Ridge this job. I don't know what the idea is. The President said he is going to keep up the office. He is entitled to have his own counsel, as Presidents traditionally have.

So I urge we not do that. I urge we maintain the status quo there; that we not take another step to restrict the President, to restrict either his national security authority that Presidents traditionally have, restrict the new Secretary's authority to manage the Department, in the new age and time and challenge that we face, and we not restrict the President within his own office in terms of whom he wants to bring in and have confidential conversations with, who cannot be called up to the Hill at any time.

I said early on in this discussion before these bills were presented that ultimately it was clear Congress was going to have somebody's leg to chew on. Congress needed to have somebody who is accountable to come up here and testify. I didn't particularly welcome this back and forth as to who was going to talk and what office they would talk in and what other office they would not talk in. I don't think that would do any of us any good. I knew that ultimately somebody was going to have to come up here and be a spokesman and be accountable. We now have that. That is the new Secretary. That is the new Department of Homeland Security.

We don't need it with regard to the position in the White House. The President said he doesn't want it. I believe on these close questions, if indeed my colleagues believe it is a close question, that we ought to give the President the benefit of the doubt. He is now, without boast, the leader of the free world. As we are facing the challenge of terrorism and the challenge that is presented by Saddam Hussein, as evidenced by his speech today, the ears of the entire world were trained upon him. That is not anything to do with him personally. That is the position of the President of the United States.

In times such as these, if you can compare any other time with this—especially in times of war, especially in times of issues of war and peace—whoever is President of the United States is the leader of the free world and is the leader in espousing those values that we hold dear, knowing as the entire world does that we are going to be on the front lines of any enforcement action the world deems necessary for the cause of freedom and democracy.

That is not a hokie sentiment. That is not Democrat-Republican. That is just reality.

I hope as we consider these issues that my colleagues will give on balance the call for a bit of flexibility, at least as much as we have given prior Presidents, and at least as much as we have given heads of these other agencies when facing challenges that are much less than what we are facing today.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the Thompson amendment.

I yield the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I stand in strong support of the Craig-Domenici amendment to improve the tragic health of our Nation's forests. Years of complete fire suppression has resulted in unnaturally dense forests. In many places out West where nature would have 50 trees per acre, there are 500 trees per acre, this tremendous build-up in hazardous fuels significantly increases fire danger and makes trees more prone to insect infestations.

The facts are clear: Unnaturally dense forests result in unnaturally hot burning and fast moving fires. The Forest Service and other land management agencies have known the facts for years but have been hamstrung, in large part due to shifting political winds.

And here is the dilemma: interest groups and agencies argue about what needs to be done while forests go up in flames, endangered species are destroyed, and human life and property are jeopardized.

The amendment that we are proposing does not point the finger at any one group or agency. Rather, this amendment moves beyond the politics and focuses on results consistent with plans developed by the Western Governors' own "10-Year Comprehensive Strategy for a Collaborative Approach for Reducing Wildland Fire Risks to Communities and the Environment."

Where the agencies are unable to proceed with hazardous fuels reduction, this amendment directs the Secretaries of Agriculture and Interior to expedite responsible forest management projects in a balanced way and is very similar to language previously passed by this body to allow for fuel reduction in certain other western States.

This amendment looks at the facts. In this year alone, 62,924 fires have scorched more than 6.3 million acres of land across this Nation. But what about people, how has wildfire affected our communities?

Since April of this year in my State of Colorado, 12 communities, 141 subdivisions totaling 81,068 people have been evacuated because of wildfire. When those Coloradans returned after being evacuated, they found 384 homes burned to the ground and 624 other structures destroyed.

Although property damage and widespread dislocation are devastating on communities, the wildfire season of 2002 has proved even more tragic. Wildfires have claimed the lives of 10 firefighters in Colorado, and 21 in the nation. Returning to a pile of ash instead of your home is one thing, coming home without a father or sister is another altogether.

Without responsible hazardous fuel reduction, this year's fire situation is bound to repeat itself and I cannot allow this to happen. This year's fires came close enough to my own front porch at one point, that it was difficult for my wife and me to breathe. Given the drought conditions that the West is enduring, the situation on the 181 million acres that are currently classified as a Class 3 fire risk is not going to get any better.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to reduce the threat unhealthy forests pose nationwide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, yesterday, being obviously the first anniversary of the horrific attacks against us on September 11 of last year, we commemorated with very moving—and I thought unifying—purpose at events here in the Capitol in Washington, at the Pentagon, in New York, and Pennsylvania—and really throughout America and so many places. Our attention was riveted again on what happened to us and how urgent it is to act to prevent that horror from ever happening again.

I will state again what I have said on the floor before. I am not one who believes that another September 11 type of attack against America is inevitable. It is not inevitable if we are aggressive in searching out and destroying the remaining al-Qaida terrorists, if we are wise and strong in marshaling the unique capabilities we have in America to better organize our homeland defenses. Of course, that is what this bill is about.

I think the President's statement today at the United Nations is further testimony and further draws our attention to the urgency of the challenges we face.

I want to say parenthetically that I thought the speech the President gave at the United Nations today was a powerful and convincing indictment of Saddam Hussein and the grave threat he poses—not just to the United States and to his neighbors in a most critical region of the world, but to the legitimacy and the authority of the United Nations in the world community, a United Nations which Saddam has outrageously and consistently defied and deceived for more than a decade.

I fully support the President's call to action by the United Nations. I hope the nations of the world will take a look at the record. I think my friend from Tennessee said it was in some sense a lawyerly statement. It really was an indictment of the 16 resolutions of the United Nations that Saddam Hussein has ignored, and he has defied and thumbled his nose at every one of them. How can the United Nations be the institution we want it to be—bringing peace and resolving conflicts—if one rogue leader of one nation treats its orders and resolutions with such disrespect?

This is a moment of decision for the members of the United Nations. I hope they rise to the challenge that President Bush has quite correctly put before them today.

This does bring us back to where we are on this amendment and Senator THOMPSON's motion to strike titles 2 and 3 of this amendment which is before the Senate and which was reported out of the Governmental Affairs Committee. These were authored largely by Senator GRAHAM of Florida, who has spoken on them. They are part of an attempt in this bill to deal not just with homeland security, but to deal with the problem of terrorism that the President spoke about so eloquently and convincingly today at the United Nations.

Homeland security is just one part of the battle against terrorism. We obviously have other parts that are critically important as well—certainly the Defense Department, certainly our intelligence community, the State Department, the Treasury, and various foreign aid and public diplomacy programs, and law enforcement agencies, a lot of which will not in any sense come under the purview of this new Department of Homeland Security.

That is why it was the wisdom of the committee—I believe it was certainly the judgment of the committee—that in addition to creating the Department of Homeland Security, we would guarantee the kind of aggressive antiterrorism effort that the country needs now and in the years ahead by creating in the White House an office to combat terrorism, to coordinate not just the Homeland Security Department but the other agencies of our Government that are involved in the fight against terrorism.

It is my understanding that many have spoken in support of Senator THOMPSON's amendment to strike these sections. Perhaps some at the White House agree that there will be an office in the White House, but they object to the confirmation requirement in our proposal that the director of that office be confirmed by the Senate. And there was also objection to the budget certification authority that we give the director of the office.

Senator GRAHAM is a practical and realistic man on matters of this kind. We know there is concern in the Senate about the requirement of confirmation of the director of this office and the budget certification authority. We are consulting with our colleagues to see if they will support a proposal that would modify these titles by simply removing the Senate's authority to confirm and the budget authority given to the director and leave an office of counterterrorism. This office would be appointed by the President without confirmation by the Senate, but with a guarantee that the broader counterterrorism war that we will be fighting for years will have in the White House, close to the President, an adviser for whom that is his or her only responsibility.

We think this proposal is a way that Congress, respecting the President and his authority—this President and Presidents to follow—can guarantee as much as we can by the law that is in a quieter time further from the pain and shock of September 11, 2001; that America will not fall into a slumber and allow itself to be vulnerable once again as we were a year ago yesterday to terrorism's awful sword.

I report that to my colleagues. I hope members of both parties and our friends at the White House will consider that as a good-faith possibility and see whether we can build a consensus to go forward on it.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time consumed by the quorum calls be taken equally from both sides on the time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair and, again, suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I also yield myself 10 minutes on the side of Senator LIEBERMAN in opposition to the Thompson amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, President Bush could not have made a better choice for Director of the White House Office on Homeland Security than Gov. Tom Ridge. We served together in the House of Representatives. We are personal friends. And I hold him in the highest regard. He is clearly the right person for this extremely difficult task and assignment and has done a great job under trying circumstances and in a very brief period of time.

However, I believe we must keep title II in the bill, which establishes a National Office for Combating Terrorism in the White House, with a Presidentially appointed, Senate-confirmed Director, not as any rebuke to the President or Governor Ridge, but to give Governor Ridge the tools he needs to be even more effective.

I cosponsored Senator GRAHAM's bill, S. 1449, to establish this office and supported its inclusion in Senator LIEBERMAN's original bill to establish a Department of Homeland Security, which I also cosponsored.

I refer my colleagues to testimony given by Retired General Barry McCaffrey, before the Governmental Affairs Committee, on October 12 of last year. He spoke about organizing our Government to protect America. Here is what he said:

Our government does best when it establishes institutions for the long haul that are based on rationality, not personality. . . . The terms of this office—how its leadership is appointed, where its monies come from, what powers it wields, who it is accountable to—must have the permanence of law. . . . Any Cabinet member, current or former, will tell you how important it is to have the Commander-in-Chief in your corner. However, when push comes to shove, it is even more important to have the law on your side.

General McCaffrey's experience as our antidrug czar at the Office of National Drug Control Policy brought him to his strong conclusion that the White House Office on Homeland Security must have its own budget and the position must be confirmed by the Senate. Without those ingredients, the Director would have neither the clout to fight Washington's bureaucracy nor the accountability before Congress to do his job effectively.

General McCaffrey's testimony was borne out by our experience here in Congress when numerous committees asked Governor Ridge to testify about homeland security. He was unable to because he said: I am a staffer of the President. I am not appointed by the Senate.

Governor Ridge was finally allowed to testify by the White House but only after the President decided he wanted to create this new Department.

Title III, which the Thompson amendment would strike, gives the job of developing a national strategy to combat terrorism and a comprehensive antiterrorism budget to the National Office for Combating Terrorism.

Having clout in the budget process is essential. President Bush says Cabinet Secretaries know that Governor Ridge has his trust and must put aside turf wars. But what we are setting up here are institutional structures.

Government officials come and go. Not all will have the close personal relationship that Governor Ridge enjoys with President Bush. The President certainly has the right to structure his staff and his advisors as he pleases, but we have the responsibility in Congress to pass legislation to establish structures of Government which will endure.

Let me say this as a parenthetical observation: One of the things I added to this bill—and in which I have particular pride—is an effort to try to establish some sort of architecture for computers and information technology in this new Department. I could go on for some time about the dismal state of computers at the premier law enforcement agency of the United States, the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It is a fact, if you look at the various agencies we will count on to protect America, that in terms of computer capability, it is almost as if you were traveling across the world and you picked countries that were computer illiterate and asked them to communicate with those that were the most sophisticated. That is what we have in the Federal Government.

What I tried to do with this bill is to establish a standard for coordinating computer architecture, a Manhattan project. I put it in the Office of Management and Budget, frankly, because I couldn't assign it to a higher level and get it passed by committee. That is sad. But it is a fact. What I believe we are trying to establish in this bill is to make sure that within the White House there will be someone always close to the President who is willing to rip through the bureaucracy and to establish the standards and procedures to make sure that America is safe. Unless you have someone at that high level close enough to the President to get it done, someone who is going to deal with it, you will run into a problem. Saying in this situation that we are going to have in a Department of Homeland Security someone who is going to be subjected to Senate confirmation, separate budget authority, is to give them enhanced authority as well.

Departments and agencies with major responsibilities for homeland security, including the Department of Defense, State, and Treasury, the FBI, the entire intelligence community, among many others, are properly not included in the new Department. There will be a critical job to do to develop a national strategy for computers, for information technology and beyond, and coordinate this strategy so that the agencies of this new Department can effectively combat the threat of terrorism against the United States.

I hope my colleagues in the Senate will support the language put in this bill by Senator LIEBERMAN after deliberation in committee and oppose the Thompson amendment.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I speak in opposition to the amendment, which would strike titles II and III from this legislation.

These two titles together will provide, within the community concerned about securing the homeland, the direction and capacity to develop a comprehensive strategic plan of how to accomplish that very difficult objective, and then to place within the White House an officer who is responsible for the specific function of combating terrorism. The subfunctions of that office will be to coordinate the variety of agencies that will have some responsibility for implementing the strategic plan.

Some have thought that no office such as this is necessary because we are about to bring a whole Department of Homeland Security. We have a Department of Defense, but we also have within the White House a national security adviser whose job is to coordinate national security issues. The reason is because, as broad as the Defense Department is, it does not contain all of the activities of the Federal Government that relate to national security. It does not include the State Department, which has our diplomatic and foreign relations function. It does not include the Department of Treasury, which has some important national security responsibilities as it relates to economic issues. It does not include the Department of Energy, where most of our nuclear development responsibility is placed.

So we have an agency in the White House to bring all those Departments that have some national security function behind a common strategy. This is exactly the purpose of this office within the White House, and that would be deleted if this amendment were to be adopted. There will be no entity that has statutory status that will be responsible, or capable, of trying to bring all of these agencies together. That is the most fundamental reason.

But there is another reason why I think this office is very important. In my judgment, the threats the United States will be facing in our homeland and abroad are likely to escalate over the next period of time. No. 2, it is exactly during this period of time that this new Department of Homeland Security is going to be trying to integrate almost two dozen agencies that have had their homes elsewhere—in some cases, for a century or more.

It is at this very time that there is likely—I suggest not likely, but there almost certainly will be considerable resistance to achieving the cohesion that is going to be necessary to accomplish this objective. I suggest that it will not be long before we have a debate on the floor about why did a certain misstep occur or why was a gap allowed to go unfilled, as we try to put together a structure to protect our homeland.

I suggest that an answer to those questions is going to be that there was so much support for the status quo and resistance to the sort of change that could not be overcome sufficiently and in time to avoid an unnecessary vulnerability. That is my prediction. I don't believe there is any suggestion that will give absolute certainty that my prediction will prove to be false. But I believe that having this office within the White House, where there is somebody who wakes up every morning thinking about fighting terrorism, and who is in an office within walking distance of the President of the United States, will give us a greater opportunity to achieve the speedy, expeditious, and effective coordination activities that will be necessary to protect our homeland.

This office has some considerable powers. For instance, it has the power to certify budgets. Why does it have that power? Because I can tell you that there is going to be a tendency of an agency that has been doing a set of functions for a long time, and now they suddenly have a homeland security function, and when that new function is battling inside the agency with all of those that have had a long history and a constituency and a political support base, any new function is not likely to do very well. We learned that lesson in the war against drugs. The very fact that Congress made this a priority didn't result in it being a priority in the agencies that had their operational responsibility. I suggest the same thing is likely to occur here.

Unless you have somebody to tell that agency that unless you put an additional $15 million into carrying out your part of the strategic plan of homeland security, we are going to decertify that part of your budget—that is the kind of clout it is going to take—if we don't feel that this issue is worthy of giving this office that kind of responsibility, then I am afraid we are going to be coconspirators in a plot which is going to have a bad conclusion.

So I urge that if, as I anticipate, there will be a motion to table the Thompson amendment, that motion be supported so we can retain this important position within the White House, recognizing that its ultimate power is going to come from the President himself, but it will give the President, who wants to have the most effective homeland security, an agency that we in Congress have established and, therefore, have invested our confidence in, which he appoints, and which will have the capability to give us the best hope that we can accomplish our objective of defending the homeland against terrorism.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, very briefly, I thank the Senator from Florida, Mr. GRAHAM, for his hard work on this part of our bill. It is work that really goes back to last fall. I think he is absolutely right. I appreciate his accommodation to the fact that there may be Members of the Senate who support the basic idea of an office in the White House to coordinate our antiterrorism efforts in various agencies but are concerned about the power the current language gives the Senate to confirm the nominee to that position. Therefore, we will offer a motion to table at the time the vote on Senator THOMPSON's motion to strike comes up, with the intention of offering a second-degree amendment to give Members the opportunity to vote on the concept of an office of counterterrorism in the White House, to coordinate our antiterrorism efforts, without the necessity for Senate confirmation, which the President, we know, opposes.

I yield the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of our time. It is imperative that we have a vote in 2 minutes. The Senator from Utah wanted a moment. From looking at the clock, we have 2 minutes until 2 o'clock; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. THOMPSON. How much time does each side have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 12½ minutes. The Senator from Connecticut has 28 seconds.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Senator from Connecticut has how much?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has 28 seconds.

The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I strongly support Senator THOMPSON's amendment to strike the portions of Senator LIEBERMAN's substitute amendment that would create a National Office for Combating Terrorism in the White House. Senator LIEBERMAN's substitute would create this Office in the White House in addition to creating the Department of Homeland Security. I initially question the wisdom of creating two separate offices with identical goals and overlapping jurisdiction, when the entire point of creating a single Department of Homeland Security is to oversee and coordinate the efforts of many different agencies in this immensely important area. But I have another, more pressing concern: encouraging good decision-making.

Senator LIEBERMAN's bill would make the heads of both the National Office for Combating Terrorism and the Secretary of Homeland Security subject to confirmation by the Senate and congressional oversight hearings. So far as the office in the White House is concerned, I disagree with such an invasive approach. We need to be mindful of the important role that confidential communications play in the deliberative process for all important decisions—including the decisions that we as lawmakers make after careful and candid discussions with our staff. Just as we would be wary of those who would seek to intrude into these communications, so too should we be reluctant to interfere with the President's deliberative process and the frank communications he has with his advisors in the White House on critically sensitive issues such as our nation's security. Of course, I have no objection that the head of the new Department of Homeland Security be Senate-confirmed, but it simply does not follow that such an approach should be extended to the President's own advisor on these issues.

As responsible lawmakers, we must recognize that we simply do not have the same license to specify the duties of the President's senior advisors in the White House as we do to specify the duties of agency officers and staff members who exercise legislative duties. We should take our cue in this area from the National Security Act of 1947, which established the National Security Council. As we all know, the President may appoint very senior advisors to the NSC—like Dr. Condoleezza Rice—who are not subject to confirmation by the Senate. That fact certainly does not detract from Dr. Rice's stature, but in fact enhances it. Anyone who deals with Dr. Rice knows that she has the backing of the President—precisely because she has his confidence and is beholden to no one else.

There certainly must be an advisor within the White House who advises the President on matters that pertain directly to our homeland security, as the President has recognized. But there is absolutely no reason why that office should be made—and micro-managed—by Congress. Why does both the head of the Department of Homeland Security and the President's Homeland Security Advisor need to be confirmed by the Senate? There is no doubt that Homeland Security is of paramount importance, but so is national security in general. And does this mean we are going to require that Dr. Rice be Senate confirmed? How about Karl Rove and Andy Card? A step in this direction is simply misguided and unwise.

I yield the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back our time if the Senator is.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I am. I yield back our time as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I move to table the Thompson amendment before the Senate. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. TORRICELLI) are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SHELBY) and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. SMITH) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CLINTON). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 55, as follows:

The amendment (No. 4533) was rejected.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into morning business for up to 10 minutes, allocated to the Senator from Vermont for the purpose of introducing legislation, and that when the Senator is done, I be recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment to the pending matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Vermont.

(The remarks of Mr. JEFFORDS and Mrs. CLINTON pertaining to the introduction of S. 2928 are printed in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from North Carolina be recognized to speak for up to 10 minutes in morning business, and that immediately after his remarks, the Senator from Connecticut be recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON of Nebraska). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Carolina.

(The remarks of Mr. EDWARDS are printed in today's RECORD under "Morning Business.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Connecticut.

AMENDMENT NO. 4534 TO AMENDMENT NO. 4513

(Purpose: To provide for a National Office for Combating Terrorism, a national strategy, and for other purposes)

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LIEBERMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 4534 to amendment No. 4513.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I yield now to the Senator from Florida, my cosponsor on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, earlier today and, to a greater extent, at the end of last week, we had a debate on the issue of the establishment within the White House of an office to combat terrorism.

The rationale for that office is several-fold. One, not all of the agencies that will have responsibility for protecting the homeland against terrorism are in the Department of Homeland Security. There are a number of important functions—all of the intelligence agencies, the Department of Defense, the Department of Justice, to mention three, which clearly have a significant role in protecting the homeland—which are not within the Department of Homeland Security. So that creates the need for someone who is in a position of responsibility to coordinate their activities in order to achieve a cohesive, comprehensive plan to protect the people of the United States.

That also raises a second necessity, which is that there be a consistent strategic plan of action around which all of these agencies will organize their antiterrorism activities. That is title III of the legislation that has been introduced by our colleague from Connecticut—the requirement that there be such a comprehensive strategic vision of how we are going to protect this very open and free society of America against terrorist attacks.

A third reason why I think this office is important is because we know the resistance that is going to occur to the changes that we are now suggesting. We are asking agencies which, in some cases, are a hundred years or more old to change those old habits, to reprioritize, to put at the top of their list defending the homeland against terrorists. There will be, both within the agencies and among the agencies, some conflicts, inevitably. We need someone who has the voice, who has the ear, who has the appointment of the President of the United States to be able to moderate and resolve those conflicts, and to do so in a clear and expeditious manner so we do not exacerbate unnecessarily the vulnerability of the American people while agencies are engaged in bureaucratic catfights.

A final reason why I think this is important is that we need someone to perform a function that, frankly, has not been adequately performed in the last decade, vis-a-vis our intelligence agency. That function is to constantly challenge the agencies that have homeland security responsibility as to their relevance.

There is a tendency for an agency that has been doing its business in a particular manner for a long time to be resistant to taking on new habits—maybe it is the governmental equivalent that it is hard to teach old dogs new tricks, that it is hard to teach old bureaucracies new patterns of activity. I use the intelligence community as an example of that truth. They grew up, beginning with the establishment in 1947, as agencies which had as their role of being to develop and analyze information relative to the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies.

It has been largely since the end of the cold war that the intelligence community has broadened its focus on the rest of the world, where the United States has important interests that it wishes to know more about and to have a greater analytical capability to decide what we ought to do about it. The intelligence community, in my judgment, was slow to make that transition. Part of the reason is that they were not produced adequately. They were not asked with sufficient frequency and aggressiveness: Are you relevant to the kinds of challenges that you face today?

I believe that is part of the responsibility of Congress, part of our oversight. It also will be a responsibility of this new office within the office of the President to be asking these agencies that have homeland security responsibilities: Are you relevant to the kinds of challenges that we have facing our Nation today? So those are the essential rationales.

Now, the concern that was expressed last week was not that we were going to have such an office. In fact, at one point, the Senator from Tennessee and I, I thought, had a common agreement that there was the need for an entity in the White House that could perform those functions. The question, then, became calibrating just how much influence and power should that Department have.

I personally was, and continue to be, an advocate for a strong, very robust office of counterterrorism in the White House because I think the challenges of inertia and resistance to change are going to be significant, and there will have to be an effective, even more assertive force in the other direction to get the kinds of changes the American people expect our Federal Government to make in order to give the priority that we expect to protect the homeland against terrorists.

But it is clear from the vote that we have just taken that the majority of the Members of the Senate feel that goes a little too far. So what Senator LIEBERMAN and I have been doing over the past several days is trying to think through what could be essentially jettisoned from this legislation as it relates to the office within the White House that would still maintain the essential credibility of the office to perform its function but would make it acceptable to a majority of our colleagues.

The two issues that we have identified for such discharge are, first, the provision that the Presidential appointee to the office of antiterrorism be subject to Senate confirmation, and, second, the provision that gave this office the capacity to decertify budgets of the agencies which had some homeland security responsibility if it were determined that they were not allocating sufficient funds to that function within the agency, which was that agency's part of the comprehensive plan to fight terrorism in the homeland.

I offered this amendment with my colleague, Senator LIEBERMAN, with some anguish because I think those two levels of accountability and capability are important to assure us that we can achieve what we must achieve in defending the homeland. But in order to be able to save the larger concept of such an office in the White House, which now will be almost a parallel to the office that is held by Dr. Condoleezza Rice, as the National Security Adviser—that office is a statutory office, appointed by the President, created by Congress, but not subject to confirmation. That will be this office. It will be an office created by statute by the Congress, so it will have the legitimacy of law. The head of the office will be appointed by the President and not subject to Senate confirmation. That is the model we will have if this amendment is adopted.

What happens if we do not adopt this amendment and then proceed to adopt the Thompson amendment which will delete both title II and title III? There will be no congressional directive that it is important to have an agency to coordinate the multiple Departments of the Federal Government with homeland security responsibility. In fact, it could be interpreted as a congressional statement that we affirmatively do not want there to be a place in the Federal Government that can bring these Departments together; that, for some reason, the experience we learned since 1947 as to the importance of a National Security Adviser who can perform that function for national security is not relevant to the kind of challenges we are now going to face in terms of domestic security.

Second, with the elimination of title III, we will have no congressional directive to establish a strategic plan for homeland security and to have the strength of Congress in support of that plan. I think it is worth giving up the confirmation and the budget certification if we can retain the fundamental principles of the importance of an agency that can achieve collaboration, can organize behind a strategic plan, will have the strength that comes from congressional creation and Presidential appointment, and will be able to move us as rapidly as possible into the best posture to defend our homeland and be a constant product to see that these agencies are cognizant of the changes that will inevitably be occurring in the environmental threat in which they will be operating and that they are prepared to constantly be reinventing themselves, adapting themselves to effectively respond to the challenges that will be different 10 years from now than they are today, and much different 30 years from now than they are today.

I urge the adoption of this amendment which I consider a compromise offered in good faith that meets the primary concerns that were expressed in this Chamber last week and again today but allows us to move forward with a totality of national policies, including Department of Homeland Security, the responsibilities that will continue to be vested in other agencies outside of the Department of Homeland Security, and an entity within the White House with the ear and the confidence of the President capable of seeing that the whole of these work together in a cohesive team for the defense and protection of the people of America.

I urge the adoption of this amendment and then the defeat of the underlying amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. LEAHY pertaining to the introduction of S. 2928 are printed in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished leaders for allowing me this time. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague from Florida, Mr. GRAHAM, for not only his eloquent statement and his spirit of accommodation that leads him to offer this second-degree amendment, but also for the work he has put into this idea.

It is an excellent idea—I have said this before and I will say it again briefly—the pending amendment, which is to say the underlying amendment that came out of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, is our best effort to respond to the terrible events of September 11 and to protect the American people from anything like that ever happening again. That is done, first, with the creation of a Department of Homeland Security, and second, with, in the White House, this National Office for Combating Terrorism—one focused on homeland defenses and the other serving as an adviser to the President, coordinating all our antiterrorism activity which goes well beyond homeland security to defense, law enforcement, foreign policy, foreign aid, economic policy, et cetera.

Senator GRAHAM has worked hard on this issue, and I think presented a very good proposal. It was, as the last vote indicates, not the will of the Senate to accept it in its current form. Many of our colleagues indicated to Senator

GRAHAM and me that they might be able to support this office if there were no Senate confirmation. Senator GRAHAM has agreed by this amendment to remove that requirement.

What would be left then would be quite similar to what the National Security Adviser has been doing for some period of time since that statute was created, a statute which coordinates advice to the President in a particular subject area. In this case, that subject area is terrorism, which according to most experts outside and inside the Congress, will likely be the dominant threat to our security in the next period of our history.

So the best proposal, which we had hoped would be accepted, would be to provide for Senate confirmation. The Senate has expressed its will there, and I think Senator GRAHAM has now offered the next best idea. I am privileged to be a cosponsor of this amendment with him, and I do so with some sincerity, particularly because of the other section of this legislation which does create a Secretary of Homeland Security who, of course, is subject to Senate confirmation and is accountable to the Senate.

So the concerns I had, the Senator had, and so many others had about the previous Office of Homeland Security being occupied by an individual not subject to Senate confirmation, and therefore not accountable to the Congress, has now been overcome with the creation of the Department of Homeland Security; that no matter what its shape, which I think we all agree will be created by the end of this session, now allows us to take a step forward, not as large as the committee proposal would have taken but nonetheless a significant step forward in creating the office and thereby giving this President and future Presidents one individual within the White House whose direct function is to coordinate the entire antiterrorism effort of the United States of America.

I support the amendment before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am sorry I have not been in a position to be following the debate. Without losing my right to the floor, Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the Lieberman second-degree amendment to the Thompson first-degree amendment.

Mr. BYRD. When was this second-degree amendment introduced?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Within the last 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. I have not had an opportunity to study this amendment. I did hear, though, the distinguished manager of the bill say something to the effect that this amendment would eliminate the requirement for Senate confirmation of the—is it the Director of Homeland Security?

I ask that I retain the right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Responding to the Senator from West Virginia, this amendment, which is suggested by Senator GRAHAM, who was the originator and implementer of the idea of a separate White House office on antiterrorism, would leave the Secretary of Homeland Security unchanged.

The Secretary would be nominated by the President and confirmed by and accountable to the Senate, and the new office on antiterrorism that would be created in the White House in our original proposal was subject to Senate confirmation, as well. We heard from many colleagues, particularly on our side of the aisle, who thought that since we were creating a Department of Homeland Security with a confirmable Secretary, it was a mistake to require confirmation of an office in the White House. Senator GRAHAM has responded to that and, as a result, offered this second-degree amendment to create the Director, who would be appointed by the President, without confirmation by the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished manager of the bill. I strongly disagree with those who believe the Director within the White House need not be confirmed. I am very opposed to that idea. I am ready to speak at some length on this. Do I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. While I am speaking, I hope my staff will bring some of the materials I have prepared to use. I am not going to go along with an immediate vote on this, I can tell Senators that. I am sorry I had to get to the floor ahead of Mr. THOMPSON—I saw him standing—but I was concerned. I will yield to the Senator if he has an amendment to beat this amendment, but I am not yielding the floor now.

Mr. THOMPSON. And I would not try to take it, even if I thought I could.

I respond to my friend from West Virginia by saying, I was simply going to address the issue very briefly and ask for the yeas and nays, frankly, on the second-degree amendment.

I might add, I think the Senator is correct in the way he described it, but we had three basic concerns. One had to do with the Senate confirmation. The other one had to do with the fact that it put this person in a position of being a strategy maker, a statutory strategy maker, when we already have a national strategy.

I have no objection to reporting to Congress periodically, but being in on the front end of that, I think that horse has already left the barn.

Mr. BYRD. When?

Mr. THOMPSON. In July.

Mr. BYRD. How?

Mr. THOMPSON. When the President presented the national strategy.

Thirdly, the new Director is still a pretty big player as far as budget authority is concerned.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Those were three things we had concern about, and now it is down to two. I was going to make those points, move to table, and ask for the yeas and nays. That was my intention.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I have been saying to my Senate colleagues that we had better take some time and look at what we are doing. What was about to happen, in my judgment, would have borne out my concerns and my warnings. An amendment has been offered by the distinguished manager of the bill. He certainly has far more expertise with respect to this bill than I have. He has spent days, nights, and weeks, I would say, on it. So in taking the floor at this time, as far as I am concerned, it is a labor of love. I am not on the committee, but this is a good example. Senators—at least one Senator—did not know what we were doing. An amendment was called up, I understand, 15 minutes ago. I do not think I have inaccurately stated what Senator THOMPSON had indicated with reference to when this amendment was called up. We will say within the last half hour. I suppose that is accurate.

The amendment comes from my side of the aisle. Normally, I might not pay quite that much attention to it, but I have spent a lot of time on the House bill and on the Lieberman substitute, and I have been very concerned that Senators really are not paying attention. That is my observation. I may be very wrong in that. I am sure the Senators on both sides of the aisle who are members of the Lieberman committee know what is going on.

But I don't know about the rest of us.

Here we have an amendment before the Senate, as I understand it, that would eliminate the requisite confirmation by the Senate of the Homeland Security Director, the individual who is in the White House, occupying a place which is now occupied by Mr. Ridge. It would seem to me we ought to require confirmation of that person.

I heard Mr. LIEBERMAN say that it is somewhat similar to the National Security Director, Condoleezza Rice. She does not require confirmation. We have a State Department, Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense we can call up at any time and find out what we want to know with respect to defense and international security matters. I made that same argument with respect to Condoleezza Rice back in the days when Senator STEVENS and I were trying hard to get the President to send Mr. Ridge before the Senate Appropriations Committee to answer questions with respect to the appropriations budget. There were those who said Dr. Rice does not have to come before the Congress and answer questions, and I said we can get the Secretary of Defense or Secretary of State. That is quite true.

However, Mr. President, the Homeland Security Department is going to be in a far different position than Dr. Rice is in. The Director of Homeland Security will be the person who knows all the answers with respect to homeland security. That persons's powers will be far broader in many ways than Dr. Rice and her powers.

The first Secretary of State was appointed in the very early days of the Republic. The same was true with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury. We have something before the Senate that is new, a situation that has never prevailed in this country, where it is attacked from within by terrorists and where the President has used an Executive order to create a homeland security agency. I don't think much of this Executive order, as a matter of fact. I am afraid we are seeing too many of them, too often. The position that Governor Ridge has now held was created by an Executive order. This is not just a little clerk down there in the bowels of the White House working. This is not just an ordinary adviser. This is a new type of war. This is a new type of agency, a new kind of department.

Yes, we need it. I have been in favor of creating a Department of Homeland Security. But having read the administration's proposal with respect to the creation of the Department, and having read the House bill, H.R. 5005, in regard to the creation of the Department, I have been more and more constrained to believe that we have a new "animal" in this Department of Homeland Security. It is not like the Department of Energy. It is not like the Department of Interior or the Department of Transportation. It is not like most of the Departments that have been with this Government for a long time, several of which have been created while I have been a Member of Congress.

This is an entirely different breed of Department. This is a Department that is going to encompass many issues that are of interest to several of the Departments, the Secretaries of which were not even aware of when the President announced his intention to create a homeland security agency, and an agency answerable to him. Many of the Secretaries who are in the Departments that were to be ultimately involved were not aware of this until the day the President announced it, I am told, or at least I read that in the newspaper. So this is a new animal.

If all Senators would read the House bill, they would get a reflection of the administration's wishes with respect to the Department of Homeland Security—not entirely. I believe the House bill is in some respects better than the administration's proposal, but the bill by Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee, as reported out of his committee, is better than the House bill.

However, we have had too much of this lately: An administration that wants a program run out of the White House. And now the administration does not want this position confirmed. Let me restate that. The administration does not want the Director to be confirmable by the Senate. That alone makes me very suspicious. We have an administration that operates a great deal in secret, wants to operate even further in secret, wants to be more secretive.

It was very secretive about the so-called shadow government. I didn't know anything about shadow government until I read about it in the newspaper. The administration tried to claim that I had been told what that was. The administration was wrong 100 percent. I had never been told. Of course, after this appeared in the newspapers, the administration was willing to try to come up and explain what this is about. And we have seen this whole Executive order with respect to a Department of Homeland Security, the way in which that suddenly emerged from the dark mists of secrecy, we have seen the same path.

We have an administration that looks upon the Congress of the United States as a subordinate body. I am sure some of the administration officials look upon Congress with utter contempt. They don't want Congress in this position. The Senate, of course, is one-half of the Congress, being one of two branches. I don't want that. And I am not going to knuckle under to what they want. This Senator is not—now, tomorrow, or the day after tomorrow in this respect.

I may be overridden. The Senate, I said myself, is more than the 100 hearts, and the Senate will eventually work its will on this, I suppose. But it is not going to do so in the next 15 minutes. This is a position that ought to be confirmed. It doesn't make any difference what President Bush wants or what he doesn't want. The Congress is an equal branch.

This Congress is unlike, perhaps, the State Legislature of West Virginia. The State Legislature of West Virginia may feel it has to go along with its Governor. I have been in the State Legislature of West Virginia. I know a little about how legislatures work and how Governors operate at the State level. They generally are very concerned about the State constitution, what it allows with respect to the budgets and so on, the State budgets. I have seen some other Governors come to Washington as President and they think that, well, they did it this way in the government of Georgia or they did it this way in the State of California or they do it this way in the State of Texas. Well, things here are not done as they are done at the State level in West Virginia.

Why should we bend to the administration's opposition to this point? Why shouldn't this individual be confirmed? It is not enough to say: Well, the National Security Adviser doesn't require confirmation.

It is not enough to say that. That does not win the jury. I would hope, in regard to a Homeland Security Director. Just because Dr. Rice isn't required to be confirmed is no good reason why the Director of Homeland Security—be it Mr. Ridge, eventually, or John Doe—there is no good argument as to why that person should not be confirmed.

Are we going to sheath our sword and leave the field on that flimsy argument: Well, Dr. Rice is not confirmed so I see no harm in not having the Director of Homeland Security confirmed.

It is an entirely different argument. It is as different as day and night. That is no argument. Why should I say I take my seat now and let this vote occur in the next 15 minutes—or the next 30? That is no argument. Who is here to hear the argument? There may be a good many Senators in their offices listening to it. That is how I kind of caught on to it.

I am prepared to speak for several hours, if I can get the materials I want that I have gone over during the recess. I don't know how other Senators spent their time. I am sure they were very busy during the recess, but I spent most of the time during the recess studying the House bill and the Lieberman substitute. I had objected, as Senators will recall, to going to the bill before the recess. I had objected to taking up any substitute before the recess. I felt that it was a matter worthy of considerable time and debate.

I was here when we created the Department of Energy. I was here when we created the Department—today they call it Health and Welfare or something like that. Abe Ribicoff was the Secretary of that Department. He later came here as a U.S. Senator. I was here when the Department of Veterans Affairs was created. Thank God I am here now when we are discussing the creation of this Department. This is a far different kettle of fish.

Why should this Senate kowtow to any President, whether it be Democrat or Republican? If former President Clinton were in the White House today, I would take the very same position. It is not because we have a Republican in the White House. It is because we have an administration that is intent on being secretive, has only a sneer, as it were—at least some of the people down there—for the Congress of the United States. It looks upon the Congress with contempt.

Some of the people in the administration don't want to live by the "rules" that have governed for many years. I use the word "rules" because I am remembering, in one case, one of the Cabinet officers using that word. We are tied down by rules.

The administration people read "Gulliver's Travels." It must have been required reading because they continue to talk about the Lilliputians. That is the attitude toward the Congress of the United States.

I do not want to give any administration too much power. I want any President to have whatever power he needs to deal with the protection of this country, homeland security. But I do not want to give any President power that he does not need but wants, and so I am a little bit aghast at the willingness of some of our people on my own side to just bow down and scrape and say: Well, no, that's not too important. We don't confirm Dr. Rice. We didn't confirm her predecessor. We don't confirm the security advisers. Therefore I see no reason why we need to confirm the Director of Homeland Security.

I do. There is a great deal of difference. And, also, I haven't had an opportunity to read this amendment. I had an opportunity to talk with Senator LIEBERMAN, perhaps for 2 minutes here, and with Mr. THOMPSON for less than that. I haven't read this amendment, but I have heard enough about it to oppose it—to oppose Mr. LIEBERMAN's amendment.

Of course I will be against Mr. THOMPSON's amendment, also. I am against his amendment, too. But the first vote would come on or in relation to the Lieberman amendment—I believe that is right. The first vote would come on or in relation to the Lieberman amendment as against the Thompson amendment. I assume Mr. THOMPSON is going to move to table the Lieberman amendment.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. The Senator from West Virginia is correct. It is a Lieberman-Graham amendment, and I think it is Senator THOMPSON's intention to move to table it.

Mr. BYRD. And the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Mr. LIEBERMAN, for whom I have tons and tons and tons of respect, is opposed and he has offered an amendment now, as I understand it, that would run up the white flag. I will use my own words. I am sure the offeror of the amendment wouldn't use those terms, but in my words, would run up the white flag insofar as confirmation, required confirmation of the Homeland Security Director by the Senate is concerned.

I would like to have the Senator's response. He is entitled to respond. I ask unanimous consent that I may retain the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, responding to the Senator from West Virginia, I need to say that I wouldn't describe it as running up a white flag. Senator GRAHAM, who has constructed this section of the bill which I have supported, felt in the exercise of practicality but also because he feels so strongly about the importance of at least putting in law a requirement—again, exercising the power of Congress. There are some in the Chamber who believe Congress should never tell the President what to do about anything, and if the President wants to create an adviser on counterterrorism he should have the right to do that or not do that.

Mr. BYRD. Yes. There are monarchists—not anarchists—in the Congress, I will admit.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. That is a word I would embrace. That is quite right. Our Framers did not create a monarchy. They created a Republic with a President with substantial powers—accountable to the Congress with substantial powers—and to the people we are all ultimately accountable. The Senator from West Virginia is not just a Senator but "the Senator." He has had so much experience over some years here. He knows, as we have all experienced these days, that sometimes we come to a moment where we can't quite achieve—Senator GRAHAM is at an Intelligence Committee meeting, so I am taking the liberty of speaking for him—the ideal that we aspire to because the votes have been counted and we don't have the votes. That was the clear message from the vote.

It was important, nonetheless, to take a significant step forward and create the office, with a law to guarantee that there would be somebody in the White House whose sole responsibility is to coordinate our government-wide antiterrorism program. I must say that I am quite personal about this issue.

I said to the Senator from Florida when we talked about introducing the second-degree amendment that we may not have the votes for this, either. I understand the Senator from West Virginia has a different point of view on what has been done. But Senator GRAHAM feels so strongly about the importance of at least creating the office, even if we can't achieve the ideal of Senate confirmation, that he wanted to offer this amendment notwithstanding the possibility that the White House is not negotiating very much at this point. They are just wanting it their way or no way. But he wanted to give this option to the various Members of the Senate, particularly on this side of the aisle, who say, Senator GRAHAM, Senator LIEBERMAN, I like your idea but I don't like the idea of Senate confirmation.

That is the purpose of this amendment. I know how strongly the Senator from West Virginia feels about the prerogative of the Senate. I agree with him in this case. It is just that we haven't been able to achieve what we wanted here, although we hoped we might achieve a good part of it.

I thank the Senator for giving me the opportunity to respond. It is not my nature to settle for less than the ideal, but, as the Senator knows, sometimes in our democratic system we have to do it to achieve some progress.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank my dear friend, the distinguished junior Senator from Connecticut, and the standard bearer for the Democratic Party in the last election, and a man whom I greatly respect for other reasons. He and I have many kindred feelings when it comes to the discussion of religion. I admire him for many, many things in that regard. If we wanted to get into the discussion of the cosmological principles that guide the operation of this universe, and if we wanted to talk about Charles Darwin, that great English naturalist and his theory of survival of the fittest, the Senator and I have a lot of kindred thoughts.

I understand Senator GRAHAM. He is a former Governor. There is nothing wrong with being a former Governor. But Governors have a way of looking at things a little differently than those lowly peons like myself who served in the House of Delegates and the State Senate of West Virginia. I can understand how a Governor sees things—even at the Federal level—because sometimes they see things through the lens of their experiences as Governor dealing with State matters and State constitutions. I can understand that. I wish I had been a Governor of the State of West Virginia at some point. I would like to have that additional experience.

But I cannot yield without more than just a clash of sword against a shield, even to Senator GRAHAM. I have great respect for him, but he is wrong in this instance. When he gets to the floor, I will tell him I said that. I say that out of respect to him. We can all disagree. I sometimes try to remember that I can be wrong, and often am. But this is wrong.

I would be happy to debate this with Senator GRAHAM until the cows come home, if he wishes. He feels strongly, as Senator LIEBERMAN says. I take that exactly the way Senator LIEBERMAN says it. Senator GRAHAM feels strongly. Well, so do I.

I am going to see that there is some debate on this matter before we vote on it. I am not as young as I once was. I once spoke 14 hours—or something like 14 hours—on this floor. I once sat in that chair for 22 hours. I sat in the chair 22 hours, and I would still have been setting in it had Richard Nixon, the Vice President, not come to the Senate Chamber. He naturally had the right to the gavel. I had been a Senator a while, but I had not been a Senator a long time. But I knew who the President of the Senate was.

Incidentally, the President of the Senate can't address the Senate without unanimous consent of the Senate.

I noticed the Vice President the other day in New York. I saw what was going on on television. I saw that he spoke at that meeting in New York when the two Houses convened up there. Of course, when they first convened in New York, John Adams was Vice President, and he talked at length. He was quite a gregarious person in that respect, somewhat unlike the current Vice President. He is not gregarious, and neither am I, for that matter. But the Vice President doesn't speak these days—I have an audience of one here, but even one individual is of great importance. So I want my friend from Connecticut to hear what I had to say here, not that it will be read even as a footnote.

But at this time, the Vice President cannot address the Senate except by unanimous consent of the Senate. At the time of the beginning of the Republic, the Vice President was John Adams. And he was one who would speak at the drop of a hat. He spoke quite at length.

That is a little bit besides the point here, but I just have to say that I cannot—I suppose the Senator will win over my objection because not many people here seem to be paying much attention to what is being said at the moment. I think they take for granted it is a bill like other bills that come here that have come through the committee, and: "I am going to vote with my party," or "I am going to vote against the party," or whatever.

But I have been trying to get their attention. And if it had not been for my objections, this bill would have probably been passed already. But some attention, at least, is being paid to it now. And I hope that more attention will be paid to it.

On the business of having the Director of Homeland Security confirmed, Senator STEVENS and I had our experience—and it was not a very happy experience—with this administration when it came to the hearings that both Senator STEVENS and I thought we ought to have on appropriations. That was the supplemental appropriations bill, I believe. That was in the very early part of this year. And at that point the memories of September 11 of last year were almost as vivid—in January and February of this year—as they were the day after the event.

But Senator STEVENS and I joined in asking Governor Ridge to come up before our Appropriations Committee and testify on the budget for homeland security. Oh, he didn't want to come up. He was just a staff person at the White House. I believe I saw the President,

Mr. Bush, on television, on one occasion, saying: He doesn't have to go up there. He doesn't have to go. He's a staff person.

And so I said, at the time, probably in a low voice: Well, technically speaking, the President has a point. The person, Mr. Ridge, is on the President's staff.

So far so good. But Mr. Ridge is far different from the ordinary staff person. And he is far different from the ordinary adviser to the President. The President has lots of advisers. He has the Secretaries of all the Cabinets. They are his advisers. And a confirmed Director of the Office of Homeland Security can still be an adviser to the President. He still would be, and he certainly would carry more weight than he carries as an adviser incognito. Those are my words.

But keep in mind that this so-called staff person, this person on the President's staff, is running all over the country speaking to chambers of commerce, going down to Mexico and meeting with the authorities there, going up to Canada, meeting with the authorities there. Ordinary staff people do not do that. This is more than just an ordinary staff person. This is more than just an ordinary adviser to the President.

And he was quite willing to come up and "brief" Members of Congress. Well, that doesn't fill the bill as far as I am concerned. I am chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I don't know how long I will be chairman, but as long as I am chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that doesn't fill the bill.

We have briefings, if we want them. But when we want to spread the Record for the American people to see, and for the American people to hear what is said by witnesses and by Senators who are asking questions, it should be done in formal hearings—hearings, not briefings behind closed doors.

I think there was some offer, even, to have a briefing with the doors open, but that still does not—still does not—meet the bill. Here is a committee of the Congress, the Appropriations Committee, created in 1867, doing its work, doing its duty, as we have always done it. When we have had Republican chairmen of the committee and when we have had Democratic chairmen of the committee, the committee has always had hearings. And they have been public hearings.

If we want closed hearings, we can vote to have a closed hearing. And then we might vote to have the Record cleaned up a little bit and made public. But ordinarily when we are hearing testimony on the budget, the Federal budget—the people's money, and the way the taxpayers' money is to be spent—the taxpayers are entitled to hear that. They are entitled to hear what the administration person says.

What was it that had to be secret? There was nothing. There was nothing about the testimony that he would give on these budget matters, on the appropriations for the next year—nothing—that it needed to be secret.

If we had had briefings, they would not have been kept secret. Ten minutes later, those who would be in the briefings would go out and tell what was said because it was not classified. That was a sham. That was a charade on the part of the administration to try to make it appear that the administration was trying to be reasonable. Yes, they would let Mr. Ridge come up and brief Members. Why, my foot. Have him come up and brief Members of the Congress? Why, that is laughable.

When I first came to this Congress, John Taber of New York was chairman of the House Appropriations Committee. Would John Taber have agreed to have an administration person in the position that Tom Ridge is in—I am talking about John Taber, the Republican chairman of the House Appropriations Committee—would John Taber have agreed to have the administration witness come up and just give the Appropriations Committee a briefing? Heavens, no.

And so I feel the same way about it. Why should the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, after 135 years—after 135 years—through all administrations, Republican and Democrat—settle for having a briefing, letting the administration's point man on homeland security just come up and give a briefing? Why, the American people are entitled to more than that. The American people are entitled to more than that. That is trivializing the appropriations process. No, I would not agree to that.

That is what we are about to do here. We are about to say, yes, we will have a Secretary of the Department. I am for a Department of Homeland Security. And in my amendment, I certainly subscribe to Senator LIEBERMAN's committee proposal in having a Department, having a Secretary of the Department. I go along with that. Yes, let's have a Secretary. But in my amendment, I am still proceeding under the understanding that the Director of Homeland Security within the White House will also be confirmed.

In an appropriations bill which Senator STEVENS and I brought to the floor several months ago, we had language requiring the confirmation of the Director of Homeland Security. It was in the appropriations bill. We tried and we tried—Senator STEVENS and I tried more than once—to have the Director of Homeland Security come before the Appropriations Committee in the Senate and testify.

I assured those from the administration who talked with me about that, we were not interested in knowing anything about Mr. Ridge's secret conversations or private conversations with the President; we were not interested in any of that stuff. We are not interested in that Dick Tracy stuff. We only want to know the facts concerning the appropriations. We are not going to ask him questions like that. It is not going to be classified.

If Mr. Ridge wants the committee to hear him in secret, we will vote on that in the committee. And if the committee wants to close the door for an hour to hear what he has to say that is so secretive and so demands secrecy, we will vote on that. But we are not interested in embarrassing Mr. Ridge. We are not interested in embarrassing Mr. Bush. We only want the facts concerning the moneys that are going to be needed for homeland security.

No, they wouldn't let him come up. The administration had its feet in concrete and was determined not to let Mr. Ridge come up and testify before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The President said he was going to change the tone in Washington. Well, as far as I was concerned, that was not changing the tone in the right direction. That was a sour note, and I am sorry the administration ever took that position. But here we are today and the administration still doesn't want it. Why?

Why did they have their feet in concrete a few months ago with respect to Governor Ridge? We could have gotten off on a much better footing if Mr. Bush had said: Go on up there and answer their questions. If they are asking questions on dollars and cents, the taxpayers' money, the appropriations needs, go on up there and answer those questions.

It would have struck a much sweeter note. But it kind of, in a way, poisoned the well. So that wasn't changing the tone for the better. That made it worse. And to this day, the administration doesn't want that position to be one that requires confirmation by the Senate.

Here we are, the loyal opposition when it comes to this bill, I guess, saying: We think that position ought to be confirmed. If we are going to create it, it is going to be confirmed. That is the way the Senate ought to look at this.

If there were a Democrat in the White House, I would say the same thing. It should be the Senate's will.

Now, the President can veto the bill. He can do that if he wants. He can do that. I believe it is the seventh section of article I of the Constitution which lays out the veto power of the President—the seventh section, article I.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I am wondering if I could ask a question without the Senator losing his right to the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Absolutely.

Mr. REID. Would the Senator consent to my suggesting the absence of a quorum, with the order being that as soon as the quorum is called off, which would be very quickly—I want to visit with the Senator and the managers of the bill—the Senator from Virginia would retain the floor?

Mr. BYRD. I don't know about the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. REID. I am sorry, West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Yes, that is perfectly OK.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that when the quorum call I will shortly suggest is called off, the Senator from West Virginia have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, time being of the essence and realizing Senators want to get out of here and go home and how badly they want to get rid of the pending amendment, I will try to move on a little faster. My thanks to the pages for bringing me a lectern.

Mr. President, I have heard the concerns of some of my colleagues about establishing a statutory office within the Executive Office of the President with a Director confirmed by the Senate. I have heard the arguments that Congress would be intruding upon the President's right to receive confidential advice and it would tie his hands with regard to the internal management of the White House.

These arguments misrepresent the realities of coordinating the executive branch and the management challenges it will involve, even after this new Department is up and running.

The point has been made many times during the crafting of this legislation that the functions involved in homeland security are scattered throughout the Federal Government. That is an important point. Let me state it again: The point has been made many times during the crafting of this bill that the functions involved in homeland security are scattered throughout the Federal Government. That is not like the State Department. It is certainly not like the Defense Department.

We are talking about a Department with functions scattered throughout the Federal Government, the functions involved in homeland security. That does not stop just at the water's edge. It goes on to the other side of the river. Many of those functions will not be transferred into the Department by this legislation.

The legislation before the Senate today and which the Senate will vote on—I suppose, eventually, if this legislation is passed—creates a Department of Homeland Security. I am for creating a Department of Homeland Security, but the bill creating a Department of Homeland Security is not the end. That is not the alpha and the omega. That is not the end-all. We really will not have done our work. We will have only begun.

Many of those functions, I say again, will not be transferred into the Department by this legislation. That is why I say we ought to stop, look, and listen to what we are doing. The administration would like Congress to pass just a mere piece of paper, as it were, handing the Department of Homeland Security over to the administration, saying here, Mr. President, here it is. It is yours, lock, stock, and barrel. Take it. We are out of it. We will stand on the sidelines.

That is what we would do if we were to pass the legislation supported by the White House. If we were to pass the legislation that has been sent to us from the House, we would be doing just that. We would be passing a bill creating a Department of Homeland Security in the Lieberman bill, legislation that would say: A Department is created. Here it is, Mr. President. It is yours. Take it. Do what you want with it. You have the next 13 months in which to implement this legislation. It is yours.

I am not in favor of doing that. I am in favor of creating a Department of Homeland Security, but I am not in favor of Congress doing that and then walking away and saying: It is yours, Mr. President; for the next 13 months we will go to the sidelines. I am not in favor of that.

I don't know why some Senators seem not to be exercised about it, but my blood pressure has gone up a little bit about the very idea of handing this over to the President and to this administration and saying: Here it is. It is yours.

That legislation, when we send it to the President, will not be all; we will have created, under Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill, we will have created a Department, we will have created six directorates, we will have created the superstructure of a Deputy Secretary, six Under Secretaries, five Assistant Secretaries, and so on.

That is OK with me. Let's create that superstructure. That is fine. But when it comes to transferring the agencies into that Department, how many agencies are there? Some say 22. Some say 28. Some say 30. How many agencies are there? What agencies are they? By what criteria were those agencies selected? Who said that this agency ought to go in but not that one? And why should this agency go there and not that one? Why should that one go in? Why not this one?

So all that is going to be left up to the administration. We are going to leave it up to the administration as to the agencies that will go in, as to their functions, as to their objectives, as to their assignments. We are just going to turn it all over—lock, stock, and barrel—to the administration.

That is the way it would be under the administration plan. That is the way it would be under the House plan. That is the way it would be under the Lieberman plan. I am trying to improve the Lieberman bill. I am saying, OK, let's do the superstructure. Let's have a Secretary. Let's have a Department of Homeland Security. Let's have a Secretary. Let's have a Deputy Secretary. Let's have six directorates, as Mr. LIEBERMAN proposes. Let's have five Assistant Secretaries. I am in favor of that. That is all in title I.

But I am saying, whoa, whoa, whoa, whoa. Let's not go too fast now. Let's create this over a 13-month period. Let's have the work done under a 13-month period, as the Lieberman bill would do. Let's create all this. Let's create the superstructure. Let's have it completed in 13 months, as Mr. LIEBERMAN would do.

He would have the Department and the superstructure and the agencies, their functions, and everything within 13 months, beginning with 30 days after the bill is enacted into law. Then there would be 12 months in what is called a transition period. Mr. LIEBERMAN would have that. I would have that, too. But I would say, let's wait a little bit. Let's slow down a little bit. Let's not just turn this over to the administration and let them have it and we walk away.

When I say "we," I mean the Congress, the people's representatives. I am saying Congress should stay front and center in the mix. Let's have, say, one of the directorates go forward beginning on February 3. There are six directorates. One is in title XI. I don't touch title XI. That deals with immigration. I don't touch that, certainly not at this point.

But for the other directorates, I would say, OK, on February 3 we will create one directorate and, Mr. Secretary, you send up to the Congress your proposal as to how we flesh out that directorate, as to what agencies go into that directorate—what agencies. Of course, that directorate is going to deal with border and transportation security.

Mr. LIEBERMAN and his committee and Mr. THOMPSON have created six directorates. One of them is Border and Transportation Security. My amendment would say, OK, let's take border and transportation security in that first directorate, and, Mr. Secretary, you send up your proposals for transferring agencies into that directorate to make it work. You have 120 days to do that—that is 4 months. That is February 3 that we start, because that is the day the President sends up his budget.

Then we say, 120 days later—4 months later—Mr. Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, you send up your proposals for the next two directorates. The next two directorates are the Directorate of Intelligence and the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure—the Directorate of Intelligence and the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure, those two directorates that are created by Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill. See, I am with Mr. LIEBERMAN on that.

But I am saying: Wait just a little bit. Let's hold our hands on the bridle here. Let's not let this horse run away with this wagon. Let's hold up here. You send up your proposal, Mr. Secretary. I assume that might be Mr. Ridge or somebody else, I don't know who; it is the Secretary we are talking about. Yes, you send up your proposals 120 days after February 3 while the fleshing out of the Border and Transportation Directorate is going forward. Then, 120 days later, we say to the Secretary: Send up your proposals for these next two directorates, the Directorate of Intelligence and the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure.

All right. The Secretary, then, will send up his proposals for those two directorates. And as far as time is concerned, 120 day later, then—that would be June 3—120 days later would be something like October 1. All right. Let's have the Secretary send up his proposals for the fourth and fifth directorates.

Here they are, the Directorate of Emergency Preparedness and the Directorate of Science and Technology. I did not create these directorates; these directorates are to be created under Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill, under his substitute for the House bill. I am taking his words for gospel, and I am saying: OK, let's go along, let's have those directorates. But I am saying, February 3 we will have the proposal for the first directorate; June 3, let's have the proposals from the Secretary of Homeland Security for the next two directorates; then, on October 1, we say to the Secretary, now send up your recommendations to Congress concerning the last two directorates in title I: that is, the Directorate of Emergency Preparedness and the Directorate of Science and Technology.

So, there you are, we do it in a staged fashion. One directorate; 4 months later, two more directorates; 4 months later, two more directorates. By the end of that next 4 months, the 13 months would be up, so we will be within the same total timeframe as is envisioned by Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee. It envisions all this being done within 13 months—13 months following the passage of the Act.

We are saying the same thing, but we are saying don't do it all at once, and we are not going to give you authority, Mr. President, to do it all at once. We are saying do it, some here, some there, and some there, and let Congress be in on all this all the time—all the way.

How does that come about? All right, each set of proposals from the Secretary of Homeland Security will come to the Congress, and they will go to the committee, the Lieberman committee, and its counterpart in the other body. So both the House and Senate will be working on these sets of directorates in stages. Congress will be front and center. Congress isn't going to hand this thing over and then abdicate its responsibility and walk away and stand over here on the sidelines. Congress is going to stay involved. That is what my amendment is about. Let's keep Congress involved.

What happens then? All right, let's take the first directorate. That is Border Transportation. The Secretary sends up his proposals to Congress. The proposals, as far as the Senate is concerned, go right straight to the Lieberman committee. Mr. LIEBERMAN and Mr. THOMPSON stay right front and center. They take these proposals in their committee; they amend them, they adopt them, or whatever. Whatever that committee wishes to make of the proposals that are sent to it by the Homeland Security Director, that committee reports that out as a bill. It comes to the Senate.

Oh, that is going to delay. Oh, my goodness, you say, that committee is going to report out another bill and the Senate is going to have to work on it?

Yes, that is true. But we can prepare expedited procedures. So I say let's prepare expedited procedures. If we do it in that fashion, we can prepare expedited procedures where the bill is not delayed, where it is not filibustered—it can't be filibustered under expedited procedures—and the Senate will take that and, under expedited procedures, will consider it. It is not going to be a—what is that infernal thing called?—fast track. That is right, fast track. Under fast track, the Senate doesn't get a chance to amend, but under these expedited procedures I am thinking about, the Senate will be able to work its will and amend the bill that is reported out by Mr. LIEBERMAN and by his committee's counterpart on the other side, in the House of Representatives.

That committee would report the bill out to the Senate, the majority leader would call up the bill, and it would be acted upon under expedited procedures and disposed of.

Four months later, when the next item came up here, the Directorate of Intelligence and the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure, the same thing, same procedure would obtain. The Secretary of Homeland Security would send his proposals to the Congress.

The reason I don't say the President is that if I did, I would make my amendment fall, if cloture were to be invoked on my amendment. If cloture were to be invoked, it would fall because it would not be germane. I have tried to construct this amendment so it would stand the test of germaneness in the event cloture were invoked on this amendment.

So instead of the President sending it up, it would be his man—it has to be his man, the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security. The Secretary would send the proposals to the committee, to Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee. Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee, under expedited procedures, would go over the recommendations from the Secretary and send them, in amended form perhaps, to the Senate floor to be taken up here and passed.

So the same thing, the same procedure, would obtain in each instance where a directorate or directorates were being fleshed out by agencies.

Are we talking about 22 agencies here? No. Twenty-six agencies? No. Twenty-eight agencies? No. Are we talking about 30 agencies? Maybe no, maybe yes. Who knows?

In any event, the concept is this:

That we avoid the chaos of just passing this bill today—say this is the bill before the Senate today, and it is passed by the House and the Senate and sent to the President. We avoid the chaos that will prevail throughout the affected agencies of Government if this bill is passed and sent to the President because it is all done at once. We hand it over to the President lock, stock, and barrel. We walk away. And the President may take 6 months or he may take 8 months or he may take 13 months before he sends up all of the recommendations dealing with 6 directorates and 22 agencies—or 28. He may take all.

Under my amendment, we say no. Let us just take some at a time. Let us see how it works. Let us create that first directorate. Let us have the recommendation of the Secretary of the Department. Let us have his recommendations. Let the Senate, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and the committee look at it. His committee looks at it and reports the bill to the floor. Let us have the Senate look at it, and the same thing in the House but all under expedited procedures.

We do some here, do some there, and do some later on. We stage it. We phase it in. We don't just hand it over lock, stock, and barrel, and say: Here it is. It is yours.

We avoid the chaos of doing it that way. Let us do it in an orderly way. Let us have an orderly process so we really do not do damage to the proposal by Mr. LIEBERMAN. As a matter of fact, in my way of looking at it, we don't vote. My amendment will say we will create the Department just as Mr.

LIEBERMAN creates the Department. We will create six directorates just as Mr. LIEBERMAN creates six directorates. We will have a Secretary and a Deputy Secretary, and we will have seven other Secretaries, and five Assistant Secretaries just as Mr. LIEBERMAN has the same number.

We are with you, Committee, Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee. We are with you. But instead of just passing this bill and wiping our hands and walking away, saying, I shall have no more to do with this, it is all yours, Mr. President, we are going to say: Here is the concept. Your Secretary will send up recommendations in intervals. There will be some of it at a time. We will do the first directorate. While that is going through the mill and during the 4 months when those agencies are being moved in, we are going to be taking a look at the next two directorates. But we will have in mind the flaws and the warts that we found in the first transactions. We will have had an opportunity to try. Let us see how it works. If there are flaws, if there are mistakes, we can correct them as we go along, and the next two directorates will not make those same mistakes.

When we set up the next phase, the final two directorates we will have benefited by whatever mistakes or whatever shortcomings may have surfaced during the creation of the preceding directorates.

It seems to me this is much more logical. It is an orderly process. It keeps Congress—the elected representatives of the people—in the process. And it keeps Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee—which is the committee that has jurisdiction over the subject matter—front and center.

Why not do it that way? Why not do it in an orderly way rather than just turning the whole thing over all at once and just washing our hands of it, and saying, that is it, it is up to somebody else?

That is not the way to do it. I think the concept is one that is unassailable. That is the way it would work under my amendment.

We think we are all in agreement. We are talking about at least two dozen agencies and 170,000 Federal employees. That is a big shakeup in our Government. There is virtually little debate going on here. There was a big rush to get this through in a hurry, pass it by September 11, or pass it before we go out for the August recess.

Norman Ornstein wrote an article in the Washington Post some several Sundays ago in which he pointed out the chaos. He referred to the chaos that will occur in this Government of ours if we go down the road meekly like lambs to the slaughter and pass this as the administration conceived it in the darkness of midnight in the subterranean caves of the White House; just go along like that with all of these agencies in turmoil, and we transfer 170,000 Federal workers.

Here they are—all moving their desks up Pennsylvania Avenue, and they are having to move the telephones and get new telephone numbers. They are having to move their computers, and they are having to do all this. And the people who work in those agencies are going to be shifted to another building with a new mailing address. All of that is going on at the same time. All of these agencies with 170,000 Federal employees all at once—all is going on in the 13-month period. They are going to be working in a different culture, in a different kind of atmosphere with different associations with different assignments than what they have been accustomed to—all of this at once.

What pandemonium will have taken over Pennsylvania Avenue. In "Paradise Lost," Milton wrote about the fall of some of the angels from heaven. He wrote about the rebellion against the Creator by these angels and how they conspired to take over. And they fell. They were run out of heaven. Satan and his angels of like mind fell with them. They fell like Lucifer from heaven, and they fell upon the boiling lake. Lucifer sat and built himself a palace there. That palace was called Pandemonium.

Do you remember that—those of you who have read Milton's "Paradise Lost"? He created a palace called Pandemonium.

That is exactly what will happen—pandemonium.

Go back and read Norman Ornstein. By the way, go back and read Milton's "Paradise Lost." But also go back and read Norman Ornstein's article in the Washington Post of some several weeks go. I will get it. We are going to be debating this beyond today. We certainly won't pass this bill today. I think we are sure of that.

So you have an opportunity to go back and read Norman Ornstein's very thoughtful and thought-provoking article about the pandemonium that will reign on Pennsylvania Avenue. He didn't put it in those exact words, but that is what you will be reading about—the pandemonium that will reign and the chaos that will reign when all of these angels—22, 30 of them—so many that nobody knows exactly how many agencies—but 170,000 employees have to rip up their telephones and their computers and carry them off and up and down the avenue. What chaos that will be. Who is going to be minding the store when all of this chaotic exercise is being carried out?

Who is going to be minding the store? Who will be watching the terrorists? What will happen to those people right now who are in the agencies of this Government right today? At 5:30, I suppose most of them are not still around; but certainly a lot of them are around, and will be around until midnight and after midnight. They will be out on the borders, securing the borders. They will be out there at the airports. They will be at the ports of entry to this country. They will be all along the border between Canada and the United States and the southern border between Mexico and the United States. They will be out there every hour of the 24 hours. They are out there right now, and they will be there tonight when, Mr. President, you and I are sleeping. They are out there right now.

But will these people be at their posts of duty when all of this chaos reigns, when we are going through all this big uprooting of the Government here in Washington, the uprooting of men and women who are at their jobs, at their desks, at their telephones today and every day?

They are at their desks securing our country, protecting our country, protecting you and me, and my grandchildren and yours. What will happen when all of this chaos reigns? These people will not know—"Let's see, where am I supposed to go? What room am I in? What is the number and the place I am supposed to go in this new Government?"

They will be saying: "Where is my computer? Where is my laptop? Where is it? And what is my new telephone number? And, by the way, what is the name of my agency here? Who is in charge here?"

Imagine the chaos. But under my proposal, we will do this in an orderly fashion. We will do the same thing Mr. LIEBERMAN does. In the end, we come out with the same Department, come out with the same directorates, the same number of directorates, named exactly like his directorates. We come out with the same number of Under Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries, the same thing. And we will do all that up front, the superstructure.

But the rest of it, flushing out the directorates, determining what agencies go in—we want to know, Mr. Secretary, what are your recommendations with regard to the agencies that go in here.

We will be doing all that in an orderly way, 120 days at a time: February 3, the first directorate; June 3, the second and third directorates; October 1, the fourth and fifth directorates. We do not deal with the sixth one because that is in title II. My amendment only goes to title I because I did not want to go and get mixed up and have any problems with germaneness in the event that cloture is invoked on my amendment or on the bill. So that is it. Why the opposition to my amendment?

So with Congress dumping the job of dealing with over two dozen agencies and 170,000 employees into the lap of the Secretary, he will no doubt be too busy trying to get his own house in order to spend his time worrying about what the rest of the Federal Government is doing. The Secretary of Homeland Security will not be in a position to coordinate agencies outside of his Department, so who will do it? Who will be responsible for managing and overseeing homeland security functions and resources across the entire Federal Government?

That is not like Condoleezza Rice. That is not like the Secretary of State. That is not like the Department of State. Hear me now. That is not like the Secretary of State. They do not concern themselves with agencies all across the whole Federal Government. But this one will. This Homeland Security Department will be concerned with functions and resources that cut across the whole Federal Government.

Who will be able to dedicate the time necessary to follow up on the operations of so many agencies in so many different Departments?

This is a brandnew Department. Let me tell you, this is a brandnew, shiny toy, unlike the State Department, unlike Condoleezza Rice's Department. I say what I say with great respect to her. But you cannot equate Condoleezza Rice's position with the position of the Director of Homeland Security. Why, her Department was created more than 200 years ago. But not this Department.

This is a brandnew Department. It cuts across virtually all agencies of Government; something new. Then how could we equate the National Security Adviser and her position with this new Secretary, this new Director of Homeland Security, who will be in the White House, untouchable?

One of my favorite movies, in the old days, when we had black and white television—I can remember back in 1953, I believe it was, or 1954, when my wife and daughters went to one of the stores around here and bought a new television set. Yes, television had not been around long. It just came upon the scene in 1926. I did not have a television set in my house.

One evening, I went home from my daily work in the office of mine representing the old Sixth Congressional District in West Virginia, where the current Presiding Officer was born, the distinguished junior Senator from Delaware, who sits in the chair today and presides over this body with such dignity and poise. He was born in that old Sixth Congressional District. That was the district that I represented. Well, that was back in the years 1953, 1954, 1955, 1956, 1957, and 1958.

And one day, when I went home for supper—we called it supper over at our house. We are just country folks. I went home to supper. I had my supper. My wife and I and our two daughters walked into the living room and sat down. And she said: Do you see anything new? I looked around. She said: Do you see anything new in the living room today? I had not seen anything new, but as I looked around, there it was, a brand spanking new black and white television set—black and white.

Well, my favorite movies in those days were clean. And they were wholesome movies. There are a few of them left but not many in this day and age. We talk about other people being evil, about Saddam Hussein being evil; just take a look at the television programming in the evenings. I saw, on one of the evening shows—I turned the TV on the other night. I seldom turn it on, but you can't help but see some of them. And I saw some beautiful young women on there, and they were saying words that I wouldn't say, and I have said them all in my time. But I don't like that kind of language in the living rooms of the country.

How can we say somebody is evil? We need to take a look at our own self. I cannot look in the mirror and say I am not evil. Nor can any other man, truthfully. Because we have a little bit of Satan in us. We have a spark of the Divine in us. That is why there is an afterlife. And we will have to answer for what we have done in this life.

So there is that black and white television set over there. And I liked "Gunsmoke." I kind of liked old Matt Dillon in those days. And I liked "The Honeymooners," Jackie Gleason. And I liked the "Untouchables" in those days, Elliott Ness.

But here we have the untouchables at the White House. Don't touch them. Don't have them come up here. Don't have them come up. They are the untouchables. Don't have them come up before the committees.

This administration thinks we should not have someone of that stature, the stature of Tom Ridge, come up before a committee of the Senate. Who will be responsible for managing and overseeing homeland security functions and resources across the entire Federal Government? Who will be able to dedicate the time necessary to followup on the operations of so many agencies in so many different Departments?

Now, I don't want Senators to go home yet. I have been trying to tell Senators that this is a very important step we are being asked to take, and we ought to be paying attention to it. I have been saying that to the administration. Don't push it too fast.

Let's don't be stampeded by this administration. The President is out there with his backdrops saying: Contact Congress. Tell them to pass my bill, pass this bill on homeland security.

Well, let's just slow down a little bit. So I say, I wouldn't go home quite yet if I were Senators because there might be a vote here yet, or there may not.

Who will have enough authority to twist the arms of bureaucrats when implementing homeland security policies in the field proves harder than dreaming them up in the basement of the White House?

Who will do all this? Tom Ridge, will he do it, the man who refused to testify before Congress when the Nation most needed to hear from him? No. He had time enough to run around all over the country and speak to chambers of commerce and this organization and that organization about his Homeland Security Department and to say awful nice things about what he was going to do and all of that. He had time to go to Canada. He had time to go to Mexico and talk to the heads of state in some of those areas. He had time to do that, but he didn't have time to come up here and talk with these peons who are sent here by the people out there on the prairies and on the plains and on the mountains and in the valleys and in the fields and in the mines and on the stormy deep. He didn't have time to talk with us.

I think he would have come, but the President wouldn't let him because of this misguided perception that, well, because Tom Ridge was an "adviser" to the President, he didn't have to go up there; because he is on the President's "staff," he didn't have to go there.

This is a different kind of staff. This is a different kind of adviser. Here is a man who goes all over the country speaking about homeland security, about his plans, about what is going to be happening, what is going to be done, what are the concerns, what are the fears, what are the things we have to guard against. But don't go up there in that briar patch. Don't go up there to Congress. Don't go up there and talk to those people. They are the elected representatives of the people. Tom Ridge isn't elected by anybody.

But those people up there, those men and women up there in the Halls of Congress, they are elected, and they have to go back at times and answer to the electorate for what they have done or not done. They have to cast votes. They have to show down, and they have to go back home and explain the votes to the people. No, don't go up there to them.

And there is that fellow BYRD up there and that fellow STEVENS. One is a Democrat and the other one is a Republican. They want Tom Ridge to come up there. And those two guys—I will say "guys" because that is all right; that term is used a lot around here these days—those two Senators. The President could even say: I have a letter on my desk written to me by TED STEVENS and by Senator BYRD asking me for an appointment. They want to make their case about having Tom Ridge come up there.

But the President of the United States didn't show Senator STEVENS or me the courtesy of even writing a letter back to us or calling us on the telephone saying: I received your letter, Senators, but I am of a different opinion. This is why I don't want to send him up there.

No, the President didn't show us that courtesy. He had some underling—and I say that with great respect—a person who wrote the letter. I think there were one or two of them down there who wrote letters back to me and to Senator STEVENS saying: The President has received your letter and this is why it can't be done or won't be done.

Now, how do you like that? Here is the President pro tempore of the Senate, the senior Democrat in the Senate of the United States has written asking the President for an invitation, asking for an invitation to come to the White House to discuss having Mr. Ridge come up before the Senate Appropriations Committee when it holds important hearings. Is that changing the tone in Washington? Is that changing the tone in Washington?

Here is the ranking member on the Appropriations Committee, former chairman of the Appropriations Committee from the Republican side of the aisle, a man, who knows, who could be the next President pro tempore of the Senate, the man right here at this desk who sits in this chair on which I hold my hand at this moment. Here are two very senior Members. Not that all wisdom flows from the limbs and joints and brains of these two Senators, but they have been here a while. They are the chairman and ranking member of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

We wanted an opportunity. We had been turned down in our letters. We had been rejected. We asked for an invitation. We asked for the President to give us an appointment. Let us come down and explain our case for having Tom Ridge come down.

Did the President ever invite us down? No. No. Was that changing the tone in Washington? That didn't do any good. That didn't help at all.

Here we are with the same thing. Here we have this administration wanting to turn hands down on the idea of having the Homeland Security Director come up to the Hill and testify on his confirmation and have the Senate vote to confirm. Why not? Why not?

This Constitution that I hold in my hand tells me that the Senate may confirm or will confirm. Certain offices will be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. And up until this point, I don't remember Presidents dictating to the Senate as to what offices the Senate may create and which will be confirmed and which will not. I don't remember that happening. This is a new leaf in my book of 50 years here in Congress, the very idea.

And now we want to say, OK, Mr. President, we will do it your way. We will yield on this. You can appoint your man. We won't require him to be confirmed.

So are we going to hand over this responsibility to Tom Ridge, to entrust him with these important duties that extend far beyond the White House gates, after he has already clearly demonstrated an unwillingness to cooperate with Congress on a matter that directly affects the hearts and lives of every one of our constituents?

That is how important it is. This is a matter that affects the hearts and lives of every one of our constituents. Senator THOMPSON says we should. He trusts the President to command the secret war on terror without input from Congress. I guess Senator THOMPSON—and I have great respect for him—feels confident that Tom Ridge has enough clout to do the job. But I am not sure that one man's clout will be enough. On my side of the aisle there are Senators who are willing to say the same thing.

Well, they say that vote has been decided earlier today. I don't believe that has been decided earlier today. The question we voted on earlier today went beyond that. John Dean, the former counsel to President Nixon, knows something about putting Executive power in the hands of White House advisers and beyond the reach of congressional oversight. This past April, Mr. John Dean wrote a column in which he expressed concerns about entrusting such responsibilities of coordinating homeland security to a White House aide with no statutory authority.

Where is the statutory authority for this White House aide? Oh, I know the President issued an Executive order, but where is the statutory authority for it? Somebody has to ask for money once in a while. Money doesn't grow on trees. They have to come here at some point. This old Appropriations Committee is a waterhole. Out there in the great forest are a lot of animals. They roam around out there, and when the night comes and the shadows and the curtains of night come, you will hear something rustling in the leaves and you will hear a limb crack and a twig break. By golly, there are animals out in that forest. At some point, they all have to come to the waterholes, don't they? The birds, the bees, and the animals on four legs—don't they have to come to the waterhole at some point? Well, the Appropriations Committee is the waterhole. At some point, these people down at the other end of the avenue also have to come to the waterhole.

I know the President is Commander in Chief, whether he is a Democrat or a Republican. It is so stated by this Constitution, which I hold in my hand. But the Commander in Chief, the President, shall be the commander in chief of the Army and the Navy and the militia when called into service to the country. But suppose Congress doesn't provide an Army and Navy for the President to command? Yes, he is the Commander in Chief.

Charles I of England, in 1639, I believe, was the first to use that term, "commander in chief." That goes back a long ways, to 1639.

But in 1649, Charles I lost his head. His head was severed from his body. That was Charles I of England. Some Senators may have forgotten it, but the Parliament and the King of England had a war. There was a war between the King and Parliament. Can you imagine a war in this country between the President of the United States and Congress? That is the way it was in England.

You can change history all you want and you can talk about political correctness all you want, but the people who wrote this Constitution were British subjects. Some had been born overseas. Alexander Hamilton, James Wilson, and several of them were first immigrant descendants. There was Franklin and there were others, and I believe James Morris may have been born in England. In any event, these were British subjects. Some were Irishmen, some were Scots, but they were British. You can say all you want, and political correctness is not going to change that. This Constitution was written by men—not women. In that day they did not have women elected as delegates to the convention, but there were the men, British subjects. They knew about the history of Englishmen. They knew about the struggles of Englishmen. They knew about the Magna Carta, which was wrung from a despot in 1215, along the banks of the Thames River. On June 15, 1215, they knew about that. They knew that the barons stood there with their swords in their scabbards. They knew that Englishmen, going back for many years under the Anglo Saxons, after William of Normandy came to England in 1066 and brought feudalism to England, they knew the Englishmen had fought and shed their blood for the concept that the people should be represented by elected representatives in the Commons. They knew—those men who shed their blood—the power of the purse would be vested in the Commons, in Parliament.

Englishmen fought for centuries in order to win that battle over the power of the purse. They knew that in 1688—let me go back to 1649 for just a minute. I was earlier talking about the war between King Charles I, who believed in the divine right of Kings, and his father, James I of Scotland, was also a devotee of the idea that the King was God's immediate representative on Earth. So they believed in what is called "divine right of Kings." James I was a very strong devotee of that idea. His son, Charles I, was as much a devotee of that misguided idea—maybe more so—than James. But Charles I carried it a little bit too far. The High Court of Justice was created January 3, 1649; and on January 30—less than a month later—Charles I lost his head before perhaps 200,000 people.

What followed that, in quick measure, was the Commons outlawed the Lords. There would be no more King, no more House of Lords.

So our forefathers knew all about this. They knew how Englishmen had shed their blood to wrest from tyrannical monarchs the power of the purse because the power of the purse is the greatest raw power that there is in government.

Cicero, that great Roman orator said, "There is no fortress so strong that money cannot take it." So there you have it. The Englishmen knew that. Our forebears knew that. So the men who wrote the Constitution knew that. And they knew that this right that elected representatives of the people have control over the public purse had been set as an example back in the British Isles from which they—most of them or their forebears—had lately come.

So there you have it. That is history. There is more to it than that, but that is just a little of it.

(Mr. DAYTON assumed the Chair.)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, going back to Mr. Dean's column—as I say, he wrote it back in April of this year—he expressed concerns about entrusting responsibilities, such as coordinating homeland security, to a White House aide with no statutory authority.

John Dean raised a number of important questions which I will now ask the Senate. I quote John Dean:

Would the departments and agencies fall into line when a senior White House aide so directed them?

How about it? We are talking about just an aide. He has not been confirmed by the Senate. How about the Secretaries of the Departments who have been confirmed, who come before the Congress, who come before congressional committees and answer questions and give testimony and are witnesses? Would those senior White House aides fall into line when this upstart, who has not been confirmed by anybody, except the President appointed him to this position—he is a White House aide—are those Department heads going to stand and salute when Tom Ridge tells them to fall into line? How about that?

What authority does he have? Does he have authority over these people, these men and women who are in Cabinet positions, who have stood before the bar of the Senate and been confirmed to their positions?

Would the Cabinet officers follow orders from anyone other than the President himself? Could a senior White House aide resolve long-time department rivalries?

How about that? We know there have always been Department rivalries going back to the early days of this Republic. Would this senior White House aide, who does not have to come before Congress and answer questions about his own budget, would these Department heads, these Cabinet officers who do come before the Congress and they have been confirmed by Congress—they come here about their budgets—would they be brought into line by this upstart, this fellow who is here?

I know he is here by the grace of the President, but could a senior White House aide resolve long-time Department rivalries such as those between the CIA and the FBI? We have heard about that, haven't we?

Can this White House aide crack the whip, and these heads of agencies, such as the CIA and FBI, will they jump to attention, salute, and say, yes, sir; yes, sir; no, sir; yes, sir? Could the senior White House aide resolve long-time Department rivalries like those between the CIA and the FBI, or Treasury and Justice, law enforcement responsibilities?

Could this White House aide get the Border Patrol, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and Customs operating like they all belong in the same Government?

What authority does he have? He is just the President's man; that is it. He does not have any statutory authority. He is not confirmed by the Senate. How would you feel, Mr. President, if you were a Cabinet officer in this administration, and you had someone who was not a Cabinet officer, who had not been confirmed by the Senate, a new man on the job, a new office on the street; it is a brandnew office. It is a new office, what will be a new Department. But this fellow down here who really runs things does not have to go up before Congress. Here I am, a poor old Cabinet officer, and I lie awake at night worrying about how I will answer these questions when I am called up before that committee tomorrow and all those klieg lights will be on me, and they will ask me questions about money, how I have been spending it all. Here I have to go up there tomorrow. This man does not have to go up. All he has to do is go up to the "Commander in Chief."

By the way, the Commander in Chief—let me read from this book so people will know this is bona fide. If I had to, I could say it from memory. Here is the Commander in Chief. He is not the Commander in Chief of industry.

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States. . . .

But he is not the Commander in Chief of industry. He is not the Commander in Chief of the Congress. But here I am, a Cabinet officer, and I have to go up there and listen to those people up there. I have to go up there and sit at a table, way past the lunch hour, and listen to those Senators, be criticized by them. And here is this man. He is not confirmed by anybody. He just stands at the Commander in Chief's desk and salutes and says: Yes, sir; no, sir; not my will but thine be done.

I do not believe a man or a woman who is thrust into that kind of a position is going to relish being in that position because he does not have any statutory authority behind him. It would seem to me a person in that position would want statutory authority behind him; get the statute behind him. He would want to be confirmed. Yes, he then has the authority, the authority of the legislative branch, as well as his own appointment by the Chief Executive, behind him.

The next question:

Could an aide, such as the homeland security director, get the Border Patrol, Immigration and Naturalization Service, and Customs operating like they all belong in the same Government?

I have been quoting Mr. John Dean.

Mr. President, Mr. Dean concluded that homeland security is too important an issue for a Nixon-style executive leadership.

Here is a man who was in the Nixon administration, the counsel to President Nixon, John Dean. Mr. Dean concluded that homeland security was too important an issue for a Nixon-style executive leadership and that congressional oversight and the collective wisdom of Congress are essential in dealing with a threat of such magnitude.

I agree. Why do we have to fuss and fume and fight over whether or not this person should be confirmed? The President ought to say: Okay, let's get on with it; let's confirm him. I will name the person, and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, he will serve.

What is wrong with that? That has been the case for over 200 years. Some Presidents have suffered defeat when it came to their nominees. I can think of John Tyler, especially when he was fuming and fussing around with the Whig leaders in the Congress. What is so bad about that? After all, I would welcome that. Let him be confirmed by the Senators. That will give him more authority. It makes him more bona fide in the eyes of the people. He would stand before the American people with more authority. What is so bad about that? That is not anything damaging to the President. Requiring a person to be confirmed is not demeaning to the President. So why should we Democrats be willing to roll over and play dead on it?

They say: Oh, they have the votes on the other side.

Well, that is all right. Let's have a vote at some point; let's not just say roll over and play dead. It is far more important for us to stand for what we can look back on 10 years from now and say we did the right thing, we were right, than just for a day to say, well, we will avoid this fight, they have the votes, and let's go on.

That is not enough. Let us make the case for confirmation, and if we go down to defeat, the record will be there. And later, when the pages of history are turned one by one and we can then look back on the mistakes that may have flowed from that very act of having an individual in that position, not confirmed by the Senate of the United States, we will know that we stood for the right; we stood for what was best for our children and grandchildren.

This job is too important to be left to Tom Ridge alone. I do not say that with any disrespect to Tom Ridge. I could not speak of him with disrespect if I wanted to. The man was a Governor; he was a Member of the House of Representatives in earlier days. He is a respectable man. So I do not speak of him as a person; I speak of him as an officer who will be in a key position for the first time in over 200 years, an untried position, an untried office, in times that are trying but not yet tried really. This job is too important.

So if you want to beat me, beat me. Go ahead. Roll over me. I will not get on your wagon. This is a principle, and I think a lot of people, if they listen to me and hear what is being said and if they will study this bill, sooner or later they are going to come around to my viewpoint. I think the American people, if they heard it, would say: Senator, you are right; this position is too important to be left to Tom Ridge alone, too important to be left to a President to appoint, and that ends it.

I know the President is elected, but an electoral college sends him here, an electoral college sends Vice President CHENEY here, but no electoral college sends me here. The Senator from the great State of Minnesota, who is now presiding—by the way, one of his ancestors was a signer of the Declaration of Independence. He signed from the State of New Jersey. His name was Jonathan Dayton, and Senator DAYTON of Minnesota today sits in the chair. So we were sent here by the people.

We cannot rely on a confidential adviser to the President to orchestrate Federal homeland security policy unilaterally and in secret. What is going on here? What is this all about? Why the stiff jaws down at the other end of the avenue against having this man come up and testify? He knows the answers. That is why Senator TED STEVENS and I wanted him up before the Appropriations Committee—because he knows the answers. He is the President's point man on homeland security. That is the way it will be.

I do not mean to drag over the old ashes all the time, but that is the same way it will be if the Congress puts its rubber stamp on this legislation and goes forward with the administration's desire of being able to appoint this adviser to the President in this very untried, really untested up until the last 8 or 10 or 12 months, position. That man has not been confirmed by the Senate. He has not answered questions for his confirmation, does not have to go up to the Senate and the House and answer questions before the Appropriations Committees. He does not have to answer questions from any other committees. He is the President's man.

Have you read about all the King's men? Well, this is not quite a monarchy yet, although I am afraid there are some Members of both Houses, I am sorry to say, who, by my perceptions at least, would be monarchists. They will do anything the President says should be done, and they will do it in the name of his being the Commander in Chief.

Well, the Commander in Chief of what? The Army and the Navy and the militia when it is called into service. But suppose Congress does not call the militia into service? That is done by statute. It has been on the statute books a long time. The Congress calls the Guard into service. It passes the laws. Who creates the Navy and the Army? Look in article I, section 8, and you will find out who. Congress shall have power. Who provides the money to keep these agencies running? Our English forbears said: We will appropriate money for an army, but just for a year at a time. In our Constitution, we took a leaflet out of our English forbears at the time and said 2 years at a time, not more than 2 years. This Constitution still governs. I have not heard much about it in recent days.

I listened last Sunday to all the talking heads and everybody on certain programs because I saw in the newspaper that some pretty important people were going to be on television. I saw that the Vice President was going to be on, Secretary of State Powell was going to be on, Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld was going to be on, and National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice was going to be on. I thought I had better listen to all of these people. So I did. I listened to them. I listened to every one of them. Not once, and not once in all of the debate I have been hearing around here and downtown and at the U.N. and everywhere else, not once have I ever heard the Constitution of the United States mentioned. Now, it may have been on one of those Sunday programs. I may have missed it somehow, but not once did I hear the word "Constitution" mentioned.

These smart lawyers down at the White House—and they are smart; I studied law, never with any intention of being a lawyer. I probably wouldn't have been a good one anyhow. But in any event, these smart lawyers down at the White House say the President has legal authority to unilaterally deliver an unprovoked attack against Iraq as a sovereign State. I have as much fear and as much concern and as much contempt for Saddam Hussein as does any other man or woman. But it takes more than just legal authority.

These smart lawyers can line up on either side. You can hire a good lawyer on either side. You can hire a good lawyer to take this side of the case over here or you can hire that same good lawyer for this side of the case. A smart lawyer can come in with an almost impenetrable case.

But that is not the point. The Constitution is there. The Constitution is there. I hold a copy of that Constitution in my hand. It is, other than the Bible, my guiding light, this Constitution. Constitutional scholars in this land agree with me. Just legal authority is not enough. It is the Constitution. It is there. It is always there morning, noon, afternoon, night. The Constitution is always there. But not once, not once was this Constitution mentioned on any of the networks that I listened to last Sunday in the discussions about a possible war into which this country was being—at least in some quarters—stampeded into. We were going to war. We were going to be in a war. Our collective minds at the head of Mount Olympus had been made up already. The President had the legal authority.

Legal authority, my foot. It is the Constitution we are talking about. The Constitution says the Congress shall have power to declare war. I know that only five wars have been declared, but that Constitution is still there. And there are at least six other wars to which statutes have been passed by Congress, dependent upon as authority. What has happened to us all when we just go forward blindly without looking to the left or the right, saying we will go to war. We will change this regime. We will do it, I will do it, or it will be done.

How about those 535 Members who sit up there on Jenkins Hill? How about them? They have certificates showing that they were duly elected by the people—not by an electoral college but they were sent here by the people. Are we going to disregard them? And these people who sit up here on Jenkins Hill ought to read this Constitution again. Many of them have, I am sure. But let us not disregard this Constitution.

The President has legal authority to do this and do that. When it comes to war, this Constitution says the Congress shall declare war. We can talk a long time about this subject, too, and probably will. As far as I am concerned, we will, if the Lord lets me live.

Legal authority: We have an organic law that says Congress shall declare war. I know the President has inherent authority and that it comes from this Constitution, too—inherent authority to act to repel a sudden attack upon this country or upon its military forces. He may not have time to talk with Congress. He may not have time to get a declaration of war from Congress. He may not have time to get an authorizing measure from Congress. He may have to act. In that case, this Constitution gives him that inherent authority.

We are talking about an unprovoked attack by this country, an unprovoked attack upon a sovereign state. It does not make any difference if we do not like the person who is the head of that State or who is running it or who is a dictator, of course. The fact we do not like him is not enough. Congress shall have the power to declare war. We are going to talk about that a while.

I noticed a column in one of the great newspapers this morning which virtually had our minds made up for us. We are just going to go. We are going to do this.

Incidentally, I will have more to say on that subject at another time.

This job we are talking about is too important to be left to Tom Ridge alone. It is too important to be left to Tom or Dick or Harry alone. We cannot rely on a confidential adviser to the President to orchestrate Federal homeland security policy unilaterally and in secret—in secret. This administration wants to act in secret too much. The Government's fight against terrorism is bigger than a Department of Homeland Security. Isn't it? They want to fight over this little fellow—he is not just a little fellow once he is down there behind that desk—but they want to wage a big fight against terrorism, and it is a fight that is bigger than the Department of Homeland Security and it is too big for Tom Ridge or any other Tom, Dick, or Harry.

He needs the authority of the legislative branch behind him. In accordance with the Constitution, the President shall appoint thus and so by and with the consent of the President.

His position ought to be made subject to the confirmation of the Senate.

My Appropriations Committee brought an appropriations bill to the floor. This bill was the fiscal year 2002 supplemental that was brought before the Senate in the early part of the year, sometime around June or July. In that bill, as reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee, made up of 29 Senators, 15 Democrats and 14 Republicans, that bill had a provision that provided that the Director of Homeland Security must be someone confirmed by the Senate of the United States. That was in the bill.

It was brought here before this body, and it passed the Senate by a huge margin. I think there were more than 70 votes cast for that appropriations bill. That provision was in it. Senators knew it was in it because we brought it up in the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. It was there. There was never any attempt to strike it. There was no attempt to amend it. In that provision all Senators knew, they had their eyes open, they didn't have blinders on, and it wasn't something done in secret. It was right there in the bill, and we had it in the Senate here, everybody knew about it, and not one, not a peep did we hear against that provision here in the Senate. It passed the Senate and went to conference.

Then the administration saw the handwriting on the wall. They must have been reading about Belshazzar in the Book of Daniel.

Belshazzar had a great party, a great dinner thrown. And he had his soothsayers and his lords and his highfalutin officers and all. Belshazzar, King. He was having all this mirth. He invited a thousand of his lords. This was a great function there on the banks of the Euphrates River.

All the mirth was going on. Everybody was laughing, drinking, toasting, feasting. And all at once, there, over near the candlestick, appeared a man's hand, and that man's hand wrote something on the wall near the candlestick. And Belshazzar, the great King, wondered what it was, and he became obsessed with fear, and his knees buckled, and his hand trembled, and he brought forth his magicians, his medicine men, and his soothsayers, and he asked them: What is that saying? What are those words over there?

And somebody said: Well, we can't answer this. We don't know what those words are. But there is a man, a young man, who can interpret these words for you, O King, and his name is Daniel. He is in prison. I believe he was still in prison. They said: This young man can interpret these words.

The King said: Bring him to me. And the King said to Daniel—I hope I am not getting two of my Biblical stories crossed up. It is late in the day. I hadn't counted on saying this. But I believe the King promised Daniel that he would have half the kingdom if he could interpret this dream. He would be clothed in the richest of garb and be made ruler of half the kingdom.

Anyhow, Daniel said: These are the words, O King:

MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.

Meaning this:

Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting.

Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians.

That is not the entire interpretation, but that is most of it.

MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN. Thou art weighed in the balances and are found wanting. Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians.

And that night, Belshazzar was slain and his kingdom was divided.

Why have I told this story? I told the story about Belshazzar, the handwriting on the wall. This administration saw the handwriting on the wall. Here was this appropriations bill coming right down the road like a Mack truck, and it had in it the language to the effect that the Director of Homeland Security would be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The administration saw that coming, and it was coming like a Mack truck. So the administration, as it sometimes does—and I don't blame it for doing it—decided it would try to get ahead of this wave that was coming. The administration, lo and behold, came up with this grand idea of having this homeland security agency, and this was all cooked up and hatched down at the White House, down there in the subterranean caverns.

I don't think it would matter if electricity were cut off. If there had been a big storm and all the electricity cut off, it wouldn't have mattered because they probably had lanterns, candles, down in those subterranean, dark caverns where shadows can be seen flitting around—shadows in the cave. That brings up another story, but I won't tell it right now.

In any event, here these people were, and they saw this Mack truck coming down the road, this bill that had been passed by the Senate, an appropriations bill saying that we are going to have the homeland security man answer to those Senators up there.

You see, we had invited him, TED STEVENS and I invited him time and time again. He wouldn't come. We had written to the President of the United States, thinking: Well, he will hear us, he will listen to us. He is a man who said he wanted to change the tone in Washington. He will hear us: Mr. President, please let us come down and visit with you, and let us make our case for the Director of Homeland Security coming before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Not a word did the President say, by telephone or by pen—not one. No. The President was going to change the tone. But here he wouldn't let this man come up. Why not?

So here is this bill coming down here saying: Yes, he will come. He will have to be confirmed by the Senate or he won't be the man in that position.

So the administration got busy and said: OK, we will get ahead of that wave. And here came the President, come out with this and he unveiled this beautiful new toy. And, by the way, it just swept over the country, the media grabbed onto it, and here we are now. We have this bill up before the Senate.

So the administration saw the handwriting on the wall and got ahead of the truck.

But it is still the same question before the Senate. Are we going to have this important position be filled by someone who will come up before the Senate, the committees in the Senate and the committees of the House and answer questions about the budget? So let us see that he does that, and we will make sure of that by making him confirmable by the Senate.

Oh, no. Now, that is going too far, says the administration and some of my friends on this side of the aisle and on that side of the aisle. They are perfectly willing out here today to accede to that and not contest that any longer. After all, Condoleezza Rice doesn't come up there. She is the National Security Adviser. The Congress doesn't require her to come up. Why should they require Tom Ridge to come up?

What kind of an argument is that? Where would that get you in law school? Where would that get you in moot court? What kind of a lawyer is that? I would hate to have been that kind of a student down at American University and gone up before Dean Myers in moot court and said: Well, I will tell you now, Dean. Condoleezza Rice, the National Security Adviser, doesn't have to. Congress doesn't require her to come up there before them and be confirmed. So why would we say that the head of the Homeland Security Department has to come up there?

What an argument. What kind of lawyer would make that argument? Yet Senators are willing to roll over and play dead with that argument. They don't require Condoleezza Rice to come up?

Is that a case winner? My word, what kind of high-priced lawyer is that? Would that have won the case for William Jennings Bryan in Tennessee? That great lawyer, that great orator, is the man who argued the case in the John T. Scopes trial, and his opponent. That was a real case. I don't think they would have won the case just to say: Well, this fellow over here, say what you want to him about him. But over here, we don't require this person to go up there and be confirmed. So, let's get home early for supper. We don't want to argue about that. They have the votes. Let us just give it to them. They have the votes. Why not give it to them?

I am talking about William Jennings Bryan in the John T. Scopes trial. That is not quite enough of a case, I don't believe, to be persuasive. It might be persuasive among good lawyers, but it is not quite persuasive among Senators.

The Government's fight against terrorism is bigger than a Department of Homeland Security, and it is too big, I say to Tom Ridge, or Tom, Dick, and Harry—nothing derogatory about the person. Oh, no, you are not going to hang me with that. I don't mean that. But it is too important to the American people to have just an aide to the President doing it.

Only an office that can act with the authority of both the White House and the Congress can realistically guarantee that homeland security policy will be fully implemented in the farthest corners of the Federal Government.

That is a sound statement. It is based on specifics, and it is based on logic. It is based on common sense. I don't have much of it anymore. I get tired early. I am quite tired now. My voice is getting faint, and my hands tremble and my hair is white. But I still believe the people back in West Virginia sent me here to represent them to my best ability. I swore when I came here, before God and man, standing up before that desk there, that I would support and defend the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic. I am not saying there are enemies in this body or in this country. No. I am not saying that at all. But there are some people who are willing to go the easy way and take the line of least resistance on that Constitution. Oh, that Constitution is an old piece of paper. Those men back there in 1787 didn't have any telephones. The telephone didn't come along until 1875. No. Those people back there at the time the Constitution was written didn't have the incandescent light. No. That just came along in 1878. No. Back in those days, they didn't have automobiles. They had horses and buggies. They pulled the shades and drew the blinds so they couldn't hear the wagons out there on the streets. The automobile didn't come along until 1887 or 1888. They couldn't tell what was going on outside the place. They did not have the cell phones. They didn't have radios. They didn't have television sets, and radios didn't come along until the turn of the century.

There was Marconi, and wireless telegraph didn't come along until 1848. The steam engine was invented back in 1869. That was just a few years before the convention met. You couldn't expect those people back then to write a constitution that would endure for the ages. You can't expect that.

The Constitution? What do you mean, Senator BYRD? The Constitution?

Well, the Constitution was written in 1787. There were not any women there. The youngest person there, I believe, was Johnathan Dayton. He may have been the youngest person there. Benjamin Franklin was 81.

They did not have television. Television didn't come along until 1926. We are the bright ones. We are the people who should have written the Constitution in our age. We have the radio, and all of these things.

I know that Isaiah, of course, prophesied that certain things would happen. Isaiah said: Make straight the desert highway for our God. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be laid low. The crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places low. The glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together.

But Isaiah? That was a long time ago. Back in those days, how could he have foreseen? But he did.

Take these marvelous inventions I have been talking about—the telephone, the radio, television, the cable under the oceans, the jet-propelled plane, the automobile—they have exalted the valleys, have laid low the mountains and the hills, have made the rough places plain, have made a straight line in the desert.

Isaiah's predictions have come true. And the glory of the Lord has been preached in all corners of the Earth, on every continent and every corner of the globe. The glory of the Lord has been revealed.

Those people weren't old fogies. Isaiah knew what he was talking about. Here were the Kings with all of these marvelous inventions.

When Nathaniel Gorham and Rufus King and John Langdon and Roger Sherman and George Read and Benjamin Franklin and Robert Morris and Gouverneur Morris and Elbridge Gerry were up there working, they did not have all these wonderful inventions; and they met behind closed doors. They didn't let anybody know what was going on. And they wrote that little old book they called the Constitution of the United States.

By the way, this book contains both the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence. It certainly isn't very much, is it? These smart lawyers say that the President has legal authority. And these smart lawyers had to go through—what?—was it 4 years or 3 years or 2 years, or whatever, to get that law degree? I had to go 10 years to get mine. And I read far more books than this little book. It took a long time. I had to burn a lot of midnight oil to get my law degree.

Yes, these smart lawyers can say: Oh, the President has legal authority. But this is what counts in the final analysis, the Constitution.

Yes, I listened to all those programs last Sunday. There was the Vice President of the United States. There was Condoleezza Rice. There was the Secretary of Defense. There was the Secretary of State. And there were others there. And not one time did any one of them ever mention the Constitution of the United States.

They are all saying: The President has authority. Congress has already authorized them. It authorized them in the 1991 resolution. It authorized them in the resolution last year. And he also has the robes of Commander in Chief wrapped around him. Oh, he has all the authority he needs.

No, he doesn't. This says: Congress shall have the power to declare war. Now, you may argue all you want, but I took an oath. And I have taken it many times. I have stood at the desk up there, and I put my hand on the Holy Bible, the King James version, which was published in 1611. And I have sworn before God and man to support and defend this, the Constitution of the United States, against all enemies, foreign and domestic. Here it is in my hand.

Have we grown so far, have we grown so big, have we come so far, have we gained so much power, so much wisdom, so much judgment, so much authority, that we can just nonchalantly push aside this dear old book that holds the Constitution of the United States? No. I took that oath. It was a serious oath. Every Senator in this body has taken that oath. Every Senator in this body has taken that oath. It is not to be taken lightly.

Someday we will talk about the oath and how the ancient Romans revered their oath, the oath they took, the oaths. But we just lightly cast this Constitution aside: This is an old piece of paper. Ha, that thing was written in 1787, and it was ratified by the few States that made up this people, as we have it. It only needed to be ratified by nine States. That was long before our time. We are much smarter than they were then. We know more now than they knew then. We are experienced. We are living in the real world. The Constitution was for yesterday. The Constitution was for yesteryear. The Constitution was for the 18th century. It was all right, still, in the 19th century. And for the first half of the 20th century it was probably all right. But these are different times.

Is that what John Marshall said? Tell that to John Marshall. I will tell you, folks, the thing is much deeper than this. Senators have not seen, really, what events will flow—and I have not, either—from our creation of this Department. And I want to create a Department. But from an unconfirmed Director, a Director that is unconfirmed by the Senate, they will look back and say: ROBERT BYRD, for once, was right. And maybe just for once. Or some may be a little more lenient and liberal than that and say: Well, I have known a couple times he was right; but he was right. And those men who wrote the Constitution were right. They were writing a constitution that would protect the common people, the people of this country, against tyranny, against unlimited power. They were protecting the liberties of the people.

There was no Democratic Party, there was no Republican Party when those men, those 39 signers of the Constitution of the United States, sat down on September 17, 1787, and wrote their names on the dotted line.

Old Benjamin Franklin said: "We shall all hang separately or we shall hang together." They pledged their fortunes, their lives—think of that—their sacred honor.

The men who signed this Declaration of Independence were committing treason—treason—when they signed that Declaration of Independence. They could have been taken to England, tried, and hanged, or gone to the guillotine, like Charles I. It may not have been a guillotine, but it was certainly an accurate axman.

But they wrote this Constitution to create limited government, divided government, with tensions separating the various Departments. Yes, they were written on parchment, these barriers to tyranny, to power. And there had to be jealousy among those three Departments. It was thought they would defend the prerogatives of that Department against the encroachments of another Department. That was the way it was meant to be.

And when I came here to this Senate, there were men and one woman, Margaret Chase Smith, who sat right over there, where my hand is pointing to that desk over there in the front row on the Republican side. Those men and one woman, what would they have said? Would they have said: "Let's go home to supper early. Let's just give it to them. They have the votes"? No, not those Senators; not Styles Bridges; not Senator Hickenlooper; not Senator BENNETT of Utah; not Senator Javits of New York; not George Aiken of Vermont; not Mike Mansfield of Montana; not Richard B. Russell of Georgia who sat at this desk; not Willis Robertson of Virginia; not Harry Byrd, Sr., of Virginia; not Senator O'Mahoney of Wyoming; not Stuart Symington of Missouri; not John McClellan of Arkansas; not William Fulbright of Arkansas; not Everett Dirksen of Illinois, who wanted the marigold the national flower; not STROM THURMOND of South Carolina, who sat on this side of the aisle, my side; not Olin D. Johnston of South Carolina; not Samuel Ervin of North Carolina; not Norris Cotton of New Hampshire; no, not those men and that lady who wrote her declaration of conscience as she sat at that desk, Margaret Chase Smith.

Those Senators on both sides of the aisle would have had none of this. They wouldn't have stood still for that kind of halter to be placed over their heads, for that kind of noose to be placed around their necks. They would not have stood for that.

We have great Senators today. I have always thought, as I have looked back and I have thought about the Senators we have today, how intellectually advanced they are. They are really smart. And a lot of their hearts are in the right place. But something happened to the Senate. It is too partisan anymore. It is guided too much by partisan politics.

But back to the question at hand. There have been a lot of changes in the White House, too. I don't believe that Dwight D. Eisenhower would have wanted to see this. Dwight D. Eisenhower was a President who prayed himself. He prayed in his first inaugural address. The President of the United States, Dwight Eisenhower, spoke the prayer and asked for divine guidance.

George Washington, the greatest of all, he said, no, I can't do this. This is something that Congress will have to decide, when it came to using the military.

Well, those days are gone. I say again that only an office that has the authority of both the White House and the Congress can act in a way that will realistically guarantee that homeland security policy will be fully implemented in the farthest corners of the Federal Government. That man who sits down there in the White House, who will be the new Homeland Security Director, needs the authority of the Senate behind him. He needs the constitutional authority of the confirmation by the Senate behind him.

Then he can go out and speak to the American people with the knowledge that he has the authority—not just the authority of someone who has been created by an Executive order but someone whose position has been created by the Congress of the United States, and he himself, as the person, has been confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

I should think that he would be viewed by the American people, if they stop and think, as having more real authority if he is confirmed by the Senate of the United States. I have a feeling that his colleagues would look upon him as somebody who is an equal over them. He had to go before the Senate and answer the questions of Senators and committees, and he had to be confirmed. He had to be reported favorably by the committee in the Senate, and he had to stand before the bar of judgment, as it were, and be confirmed by the votes of the Senators. Not only was he appointed by the top Executive order of the land, but he was confirmed by the top legislative authority in the land, the legislative branch, meaning the Senate in this instance, according to the Constitution.

By giving the new Director statutory authorities, statutory responsibilities, we will ensure that he will have independent authority to act from within the White House, without having to compete with other advisers to secure the President's support for his coordination efforts. If he is not required to be confirmed by the Senate, he will have to compete with other advisers who don't have to be confirmed by the Senate, other staff people who don't have to be confirmed by the Senate.

He will have to compete with many others who require confirmation. He will have to compete with them to secure the President's support for his coordination efforts because his coordination efforts, as they are carried out, are going to cut across a lot of lines of authority. They are going to cut across lines of authority that run between and among two or more agencies, many agencies of the Government.

He is going to have to cut through that redtape. He is going to have to cut through it. What authority does he have? He is the President's staff man. He is the President's adviser. Who is the President's adviser? Did he ever go before the people's elected representatives in the Senate and get their confirmation? No.

Well, some of his competition does have to go before those Senators, his competitors.

Its competitors will be other Department heads—men and women who have had to come before the Senate Committee to be confirmed by the whole Senate. He has to compete with them. But his confirmation would ensure that he would have independent authority to act from within the White House. He has the authority, the stamp of approval not just of the President but, more importantly, the stamp of approval of the people of the United States through their elected Representatives. In fact, we will not only allow the Director to act independently, we will require him to do so. How about that?

The Director will have to follow up on the implementation of homeland security strategy, because he will have to answer to Congress if he doesn't. Also, by requiring Senate confirmation of this new Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism, Congress will ensure that its concerns over the implementation of homeland security strategy will not be subordinated to the political agenda of the White House. Even when the President's advisers want to conceal agency mismanagement or shift public focus toward a war with Iraq, Congress can make sure that the Director's job is getting done because Congress can ask him directly and say: All right, Mr. Director, we want to know about your stewardship.

We are all going to have to answer for our stewardship—we Senators, who are viewed with contempt by many of the people in the administration, who have to be confirmed by Senators. We Senators have to answer for our stewardship. I have answered for my stewardship many times over a political career of 56 years now, in all legislative branches of government, both at the State level in both houses, and in both Houses at the Federal level. I have had to answer for my stewardship. I have to go back every now and then and say: Here is my name. I want to put it up again. Here is my filing fee. I want to stand for office again. I have to answer for my stewardship, and so would the Director of Homeland Security have to answer to the people's Representatives for his stewardship in that office.

Oh, no, no, he is the President's staff man. He is the President's adviser. Well, he is an important adviser, and he certainly is an important staff man. He is above the grade level of ordinary staff people, ordinary advisers. He should be confirmed.

So we will not only allow the Director to act independently, we will require him to do so. The Director will have to follow up on the implementation of homeland security strategy because he will have to answer to Congress if he doesn't.

I have only read three and a half pages thus far. I am a slow reader. How did I ever get through that? Talk about poor readers, my goodness. I have only read three and a half pages, and I have been talking—how long have I been talking, may I ask the clerk through the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLSTONE). The Senator has been speaking for 2 hours 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. My lands, that is a lot of time. Was it 2 hours and a half?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has been speaking for 2 hours 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. And I have just read three and a half pages. I am a slow reader. I had a feeling that Senators just wanted me to keep on. They don't want to come over and hear this. I am trying to get their attention. Three and a half pages in 2 hours 15 minutes.

Mr. President, while I am speaking, it reminds me of Cicero, who was asked the question: "Which of Demosthenes' speeches do you like best?" Cicero answered: "The longest." That is how good Demosthenes was.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Is it a question the Senator thinks I might be able to answer?

Mr. REID. Easy.

Mr. BYRD. Then, yes, always.

Mr. REID. Is the Senator aware he has spoken 2 hours 15 minutes just this last round? Prior to that, he spoke for an hour. So this is actually 3 hours 15 minutes, other than the short quorum call after which I requested that the Senator have the floor. So, actually, it has been closer to 3 hours 15 minutes. Is the Senator aware of that?

Mr. BYRD. I wasn't really aware of the passage of time. Along that line, may I say, let me see if I can quote a little verse by someone else:

The clock of life is wound but once,
And no man has the power to know just when the hand will strike, at late or early hour.
Now is all the time we have, so live, love, and work with a will.
Take no thought of tomorrow, for the clock may then be still.

Mr. REID. May the Senator ask another question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. REID. Is the Senator aware that the majority leader has authorized me to announce that there will be no more rollcall votes today?

Mr. BYRD. I am not aware of that. That might change my outlook.

Mr. REID. That is what I was thinking might be the case.

Mr. BYRD. That might send me home to my dear wife of 65 years and 3 months and 14 days.

Mr. REID. May I ask one other question. It would also send me home to my wife. We were married 43 years ago today, September 12. So it is my anniversary today. But I don't want the Senator to feel any compulsion that I should get home early.

Mr. BYRD. I really feel guilty in detaining the distinguished Senator, the very able Senator, my friend. He is one I have admired all the time I have known him. I am sorry I have detained him on his wedding anniversary. I wish the Senator would have let me know that a little earlier.

Mr. REID. If I may say one more thing. I was looking for an opportunity. In fact, I suggested it, but they said it would be very unsenatorial. I was considering waving a white flag because they surrendered some time ago and indicated that they had left. There was going to be a motion to table made when the Senator decided to sit down, but there was a decision made that maybe that might take a long time. So they decided to go home some time ago. I indicated it would be very unsenatorial to wave a white flag in the Senate, so I thought this would be a better way of telling you there is going to be no motion to table made tonight.

Mr. BYRD. I see a more colorful hue as I look for it out here. My little dog's name is Trouble. My wife named the dog. Obviously, she was looking at me when she named the little dog Trouble. That little dog Trouble loves me, but he loves my wife more.

My wife is in the hospital right now. I should go over to visit her. I am a little too late already.

I am trying to remember what the great Englishman, Edmund Burke, said about the origin of the term "whip." The "whipper-in" was the person who kept the hound from running away from the field in the fox chase.

The English had the whip in the 14th century, certainly in the 17th century, the 1600s. The whip at that time would send what they called a "circular letter" to the King's supporters, or if there was a whip in the opposition, he would send a circular letter to the opponents of the King and tell them to come in and meet in Parliament at a certain day and a certain time about a certain piece of business. That was the whip. That was the English whip. That is where the whip system started.

The House has a whip. The Senate has not had a whip as long as the other body has had a whip. The Senate has a great whip in the distinguished senior Senator from Nevada. I have been a whip, and before that I served under whips. I was a whip for 6 years, and I was a good whip. I stayed on the Senate floor all the time.

But I say right here and now, as far as I am concerned, Senator REID of Nevada is the best whip the Senate has ever had, notwithstanding even that I was a Senate whip. I served as whip when Mr. Mansfield was majority leader. I put everything I had into being a whip. I stood by the gate. If I had been told to guard that gate, I would have been at that gate alive or dead when Mr. Mansfield came back.

This Senator from Nevada, as far as I am concerned, is the best whip we have ever had. He is right here on this floor all the time, or within a voice from this floor. He works here on this floor. He is very loyal to his majority leader, and he is loyal to his duties, to his people back home. He tells me every now and then he has a delegation from Nevada that he has to go and see. But this whip is here at all times, and he is here to protect me. If I to leave the floor, he will protect me. I know he will. He is a good whip. He is a great whip.

I will take my hat off any day and say: Gunga Din, you are a better whip than I am. That is saying a lot. I don't say that often. I was a good whip, but the Senator is a better whip than I was because he probably is more loyal to his party than I was and more loyal to his majority leader than I was.

I stood on this floor offering an amendment during the Vietnam war to say the President of the United States—who happened to be Richard Nixon at the time—had a duty to do whatever it took. If it meant bombing the Vietcong across the lines in Cambodia, the President had a duty to do that to protect our American servicemen.

I offered that amendment, and my majority leader was opposed to it. I stood by it; I fought the fight and lost. Mr. Nixon called me on the telephone that same afternoon from Camp David. He said: You did a great thing down there. He called me Bob. My wife does not call me Bob. She is kind enough to call me Robert. He said: Bob, that's a great thing you did. In his words, he said: You did a statesmanlike job. You stood for what you believed in, and you offered an amendment on behalf of the servicemen, the men in the field. You stood by what you thought, and you even stood against your own party, the leadership.

That was all right, and that was well and good for me because I have my own views of what is required of me. But the distinguished Senator from Nevada, he is not disloyal to his leader, not to the people over here who elected him to his position in the Senate, nor to the people back in Nevada who sent him here. I salute him.

I will quietly fold my tent and fade away from the Chamber if he is about to tell me that there will not be any more votes and that tomorrow, when we come back, I may have the floor again.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a brief comment in response to the Senator?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. REID. The plan tomorrow is to come in and we will be on the Interior appropriations bill until noon. Senator DASCHLE is planning on having a vote on a judge around 10 o'clock, and that will be by voice. Senator DODD, and whoever is opposing his legislation, will debate for a half hour, and that vote will occur at 10:15 tomorrow morning. Tomorrow morning, we will be on the Interior appropriations bill.

I, frankly, do not think we can work anything out on forest fire suppression. I will try, but I do not think it can be done. So the leader has to make a decision as to whether he is going to file cloture on the Craig amendment. We may have to do that tomorrow.

At noon, we will go back to this bill. I have been told that the Senators who offered this amendment, Senators GRAHAM and LIEBERMAN, are considering withdrawing the amendment, which would leave the amendment pending being the Thompson amendment which, of course, will be subject to another amendment.

That will be the status at noon tomorrow, if the leader decided to work on this bill Friday afternoon. As the distinguished Senator from West Virginia knows, Friday afternoons are really tough to get things done around here. We are going to have votes tomorrow, one on the judge and one on the Dodd amendment.

Before signing off, I say to my friend, the Senator's comments did not go unnoticed. I am flattered and a little embarrassed, but I do appreciate very much what the Senator said. As I have said publicly and privately, every day that I have been able to serve in the Congress and the Senate with the distinguished Senator from West Virginia is a day I consider to be very lucky. To think someone from where I came could be on the same floor as a Senator speaking with the great ROBERT BYRD is difficult for me to imagine.

I understand the importance of the job I have. I appreciate very much the statements of the Senator. But that is our plan for tomorrow.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Democratic whip. I am very willing to take my tent and fold it silently and slip away.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate next takes up homeland security—

Mr. REID. Which will be tomorrow at noon or thereabouts.

Mr. BYRD. —I be recognized at that time.

Mr. REID. I am the only one in the Chamber and I certainly would not object to that. I do not think anyone from the minority is present, and they do not have any basis for objecting anyway. The Senator has the floor now.

We would attempt tomorrow morning—of course, the Senator is the manager of the other bill. We would attempt during that period of time to see what we can work out on this homeland security bill so we can attempt to move forward in some way, because certainly what we do not want, at least tomorrow, is to be in a position where we have to file cloture. I do not think that is necessary.

We will be happy to meet with the Senator tomorrow.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate next goes to H.R. 5005, the first recognition be given to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the speech I have made not be counted as a speech under the two-speech rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. May I say to the distinguished Senator, I am quite happy to go home. These old legs of mine have been carrying me around now for a long time. I always had heard that when one gets to be up in years a little bit, the feet and the legs first start to trouble one. So I can bear witness to that.

In case there are any Senators who think the distinguished majority whip did wrongly in saying we could go home if the Senator would take a seat, let me say I have only spoken 2 hours and 15 minutes—is that accurate?

Mr. REID. Three hours and 15 minutes. Now it is about 3½ hours.

Mr. BYRD. And I am only on page 3 of page 4. Well, that is just a start. As John Paul Jones said, "We have just begun to fight."

I have in my pocket the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence. Once I finished page 4 tonight, I intended to start reading the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States to follow.

Mr. REID. I say to my friend, I do not think he would have to read it, would he?

Mr. BYRD. I think reading it makes it better.

Mr. REID. Does not the Senator have that memorized anyway?

Mr. BYRD. I know something about the Constitution, but I will save that for another day. I have a number of poems which I would be glad to quote even though these old legs are getting tired. Shall I quote one?

Mr. REID. I personally would like to hear a poem.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I never was a show-off so I am not going to quote any poetry tonight. That would be showing off. I just wanted the Senator to know I could quote some poems. I can read the Constitution and comment on it as I go along. I can read the Declaration of Independence. I can read the Bible. I can read Milton's "Paradise Lost." I could read Carlyle's "History of the French Revolution." I could even read Daniel Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe." Just because my legs are hurting and I am growing quite frail and my voice is a little weak, I am not quite ready to say, well, they have the votes and let us quit.

I thank the distinguished Democratic whip. The Senator knows I am getting tired, which is the reason I am not saying things just right.

Let me see if there is anything else for which I need consent. I believe not, but it is my understanding that I will be recognized when the Senate next returns to the homeland security legislation. I thank the Chair and I thank the whip.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not think a good steward would want to leave his job unfinished quite so abruptly. I do have a half page of my prepared remarks to read. I do not like to put items in the RECORD, so, if I may, I ask unanimous consent that again this not be counted as a second speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. By requiring Senate confirmation of this new Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism, Congress will ensure that its concerns over the implementation of homeland security strategy will not be subordinated to the political agenda of the White House.

Remember, we are not just talking about a Director of Homeland Security under the Bush administration. We are not just talking about a Director of Homeland Security under a Republican administration. There can very well come a time there will be a Director of Homeland Security under a Democratic administration, and I hope the Senators will see the wisdom in looking forward to a time when the worm will turn, the wheel will turn, and there will be a Democrat in the White House.

I am thinking of Senate confirmation as something that will be important under a Democratic administration as well as under a Republican administration, as important to the people of this country under a Democratic President as under a Republican President, under Mr. Bush. For the moment, it is a Republican President. A thousand years is but a day in God's reach. And there will probably be a Department of Homeland Security after my life on this globe has run its span.

The war against terrorism may not end soon. It may go on and on. Who knows? The President himself has said it will not be quick, it will not be easy, and it will not be short. Therefore, it is not difficult to imagine that there will come a day when there will be a Democratic President in the White House, and I say that my Republican friends, when that time comes, will be glad if we in our day have required the Director of Homeland Security to be confirmed by the Senate.

So we are not legislating for a day, a week, or the remaining 2 years of this Republican administration. We are debating and acting for a long time.

Once this is on the statute books, it is not easy to change it because a President can veto a change. If Congress sees the un wisdom of its ways today and seeks to change the statute books, maybe a President in the White House would veto that bill if it came to his desk. So it's easier, in a way, to make a law than it is to change a law, in some instances. We had better do it right the first time, rather than just do it fast. Do it right. That is what I am seeking to do.

Even when the President's advisers want to conceal the agency mismanagement or shift public focus toward a war with Iraq, Congress can make sure that the Director's job is getting done because Congress can ask him directly. So I tell my colleagues that I understand their desire to style the statutory office by yielding to the urge that I know some Members do.

Let's do it right. There may be a different administration, maybe a different party at the White House, Mr. Bush may not be at the White House at that time, I may not be at my desk. Let's do it right. Let's do it the way we ought to do it. If the war on terror is to be with us a long time, a Director of Homeland Security will be with us a long time, and Tom Ridge, if he is to be the Director in the future, even he may be gone and another Director may stand in his stead. Think about that. It is more than just a thought in passing.

I thank my friend from Nevada. I thank all Senators. I thank the wonderful people who have to man the desks up there. I thank the Presiding Officer, I thank the pages, the security personnel, the Doorkeepers and all. They have had to wait and listen. They are doing their job. I thank them and I apologize to them, in a way. I apologize for having delayed them to their places of abode.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, my statement has to undergo some interruption because of the colloquy between Mr. REID and myself. But the little remainder that I just read just now, I hope it will be understood from those who read the RECORD, that was the closing part of a previously prepared speech, and I hope they will keep that in mind when they read all parts of it in the RECORD. I would not ask it be joined directly with the first part, because of that colloquy.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators allow to speak for a period not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IRAQ

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, as a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, I firmly believe that the issue of Iraq is not about politics. It's about national security. We know that for at least 20 years, Saddam Hussein has aggressively and obsessively sought weapons of mass destruction through every means available. We know that he has chemical and biological weapons today. He has used them in the past, and he is doing everything he can to build more. Each day he inches closer to his longtime goal of nuclear capability—a capability that could be less than a year away.

I believe that Saddam Hussein's Iraqi regime represents a clear threat to the United States, to our allies, to our interests around the world, and to the values of freedom and democracy we hold dear.

Saddam has proven his willingness to act irrationally and brutally against his neighbors and against his own people. Iraqi's destructive capacity has the potential to throw the entire Middle East into chaos, and poses a mortal threat to our vital ally, Israel.

What's more, the terrorist threat against America is all too clear. Thousands of terrorist operatives around the world would pay anything to get their hands on Saddam's arsenal, and there is every possibility that he could turn his weapons over to these terrorists. No one can doubt that if the terrorists of September 11 had had weapons of mass destruction, they would have used them. On September 12, 2002, we can hardly ignore the terrorist threat, and the serious danger that Saddam would allow his arsenal to be used in aid of terror.

Iraq has continued to develop its arsenal in defiance of the collective will of the international community, as expressed through the United Nations Security Council. It is violating the terms of the cease-fire that ended the Gulf War and ignoring as many as 16 U.N. Security Council resolutions—including 11 resolutions concerning Iraq's efforts to develop weapons of mass destruction.

These U.N. resolutions are not unilateral American demands. They involve obligations Iraq has undertaken to the international community. By ignoring them, Saddam Hussein is undermining the credibility of the United Nations, openly violating international law, and making a mockery of the very idea of international collective action which is so important to the United States and our allies.

The time has come for decisive action. With our allies, we must do whatever is necessary to guard against the threat posed by an Iraq armed with weapons of mass destruction, and under the thumb of Saddam Hussein. The United States must lead an international effort to remove the regime of Saddam Hussein and to assure that Iraq fulfills its obligations to the international community.

This is not an easy decision, and it carries many risks. It will also carry costs, certainly in resources, and possibly in lives. After careful consideration, I believe that the risk of inaction is far greater than the risk of action.

As we set out on this course, we must be as conscious of our special responsibility as we are confident in the rightness of our cause.

The United States has a special role of leadership in the international community. As America and its allies move down this path, we must do so in a way that preserves the legitimacy of our actions, enhances international consensus, and strengthens our global leadership.

First, this means making the strongest possible case to the American people about the danger Saddam poses. Months of mixed messages, high-level speculation and news-leaks about possible military plans have caused widespread concern among many Americans and around the world.

I am encouraged that the President has overruled some of his advisors and decided to ask for the support of Congress. From the support of Congress, this effort will derive even greater and more enduring strength.

Second, the Administration must do as much as possible to rally the support of the international community under the mandate of the United Nations Security Council. We should tap into the strengths of existing alliances like NATO to enforce such a mandate. And let me be clear: America's allies deserve more than just token consultation. The Bush administration must make a full-court press to rally global support, much like the impressive effort President Bush's father made to rally the first international coalition against Saddam in the fall of 1990. If they do, I believe they will succeed.

If, however, the United Nations Security Council is prevented from supporting this effort, then we must act with as many allies as possible to ensure that Iraq meets its obligations to existing Security Council resolutions. After all, that's what the U.S. and its NATO allies did during the 1999 war in Kosovo, when a U.N. Security Council resolution was impossible.

Third, we must be honest with the American people about the extraordinary commitment this task entails. It is likely to cost us much in the short-term, and it is certain to demand our attention and commitment for the long-haul. We have to show the world that we are prepared to do what it takes to help rebuild a post-Saddam Iraq and give the long-suffering Iraqi people the chance to live under freedom.

Working with our allies, we have to be prepared to deal with the consequences of success—helping to provide security inside Iraq after Saddam is gone, working with the various Iraqi opposition groups in shaping a new government, reassuring Iraq's neighbors about its future stability, and supporting the Iraqi people as they rebuild their lives. This is a massive undertaking, and we must pursue it with no illusions.

Ensuring that Iraq complies with its commitments to the international community is the mission of the moment. Rebuilding Iraq and helping it evolve into a democracy at peace with itself and its neighbors will be the mission of many years.

Unfortunately, the administration's record to date gives me cause for concern. They must not make the same mistakes in post-Saddam Iraq that they are making in post-Taliban Afghanistan, where they have been dangerously slow in making the real commitment necessary to help democracy take root and flourish.

Finally, the administration must show that its actions against Iraq are part of a broader strategy to strengthen American security around the world.

We must address the most insidious threat posed by weapons of mass destruction—the threat that comes from the ability of terrorists to obtain them.

We must do much more to support the many disarmament programs already in place to dismantle weapons and prevent access to weapons-grade materials in Russia and the former Soviet states; we must fully fund Nunn-Lugar; and we should work hard to forge international coalition to prevent proliferation.

We must be fully and continuously engaged to help resolve the crisis between Israel and the Palestinians. Disengagement was a mistake. The United States cannot deliver peace to the parties, but no agreement is possible without our active involvement.

We also must have a national strategy for energy security, working to strengthen relationships with new suppliers and doing more to develop alternative sources of power.

And we must do far more to promote democracy throughout the Arab world. We should examine our overall engagement in the entire region, and employ the same kinds of tools that we used to win the battle of ideas fought during the Cold War, from vigorous public diplomacy to assistance for democratic reform at the grassroots.

The path of confronting Saddam is full of hazards. But the path of inaction is far more dangerous. This week, a week where we remember the sacrifice of thousands of innocent Americans made on 9/11, the choice could not be starker. Had we known that such attacks were imminent, we surely would have used every means at our disposal to prevent them and take out the plotters. We cannot wait for such a terrible event—or, if weapons of mass destruction are used, one far worse—to address the clear and present danger posed by Saddam Hussein's Iraq.

SEPTEMBER 11 REMEMBRANCE

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, yesterday we marked the anniversary of one of the most horrific events in our Nation's history. On September 11 of last year, without provocation or warning, extremists took control of four of our planes and used them as weapons of destruction against us to cowardly take from our lives our friends and neighbors, our mothers and fathers, and our sons and daughters.

As we watched those events unfold, during the subsequent rescue attempts, we saw more of our Nation's brave men and women lose their lives in the support and defense of others. It was not only a terrible loss of life. It was a loss of our most vital and valuable resource, our Nation's people and the potential they carried within them for greatness in so many different fields and endeavors of importance to them and to us.

As we watched the images broadcast around the world, we all made a decision in our hearts to do everything we could to respond to the attack on our nation, our freedom, our liberty and our way of life. For each of us it meant something different, but for all of us, it helped to know there was something we could all do to help.

For Congress, that meant expressing our strongest support for the President and his ambitious and necessary plan to end the global network of terror that has sown the seeds of despair and hatred wherever it has found fertile ground. The President's plan is to do more than defeat the forces of terror. It is to replace those seeds of anger and hatred with seeds of hope and peace.

For our Nation's Armed Forces, it meant answering the call to duty and taking arms against an enemy who placed no value on human life.

The rules of war are not many, but one unavoidable one is that it takes the lives of our young men and women. One of those we lost in the early stages of the war was one of Wyoming's own, Jonn Edmunds, an Army Ranger from Cheyenne, who gave his life in Afghanistan as he fought and died for a cause that he believed in.

For all Americans, it meant an awakening of our sense of patriotism and our love of country, as we put aside our differences and unfurled our flags and proudly displayed them on our porches and windows. We came together as one, united, in support of our leaders and our President.

We know from past experience that the effort to respond to challenges like this is not a quick or easy one. It takes a lengthy and determined commitment to principle if we are to succeed.

I have no doubt our resolve will remain strong and we will be united in purpose, as we have done before when called to respond to a threat to our way of life.

A little over fifty years ago, on a day that has been compared to this one, those who opposed us were heard to say after their attack that they may have done nothing more than awaken a sleeping giant. On that day in December and this one in September, we may have been a sleeping giant, but when the time came to respond, we did, and by so doing, we changed the world.

We have to respond with strength and determination because those who attacked us chose their targets with such clear and evil intent. They attacked the World Trade Center, because of its symbolic representation of our economic power. They attacked the Pentagon because of its symbolic representation of the power of our military. And they sought to attack our Nation's capital because it is the heart of our government and it represents our democracy and our way of life.

No one will ever forget where they were or what they were doing as they first heard the news of the terrorist attack on our Nation. We all sat and watched in stunned silence as events unfolded that are now forever etched in our mind.

In the days that have passed since then, we have kept alive the memory of those we lost, repaired and restored what we could, and made plans to recreate what could not be saved. It has been a difficult and daunting task.

Through it all the President has led a united Nation, committed to ending the threat of terrorism, not just for us, but for our children, and for all the children of the world who deserve to grow up and pursue a dream of peace, hope and opportunity.

When the terrorists struck at the heart of our Nation that day they took something more precious than our buildings, and the symbols of American pride and ingenuity we all hold dear. When they took our loved ones from us, they also took the innocence of our children who had to learn quickly, and at a young and tender age, that there are bad people in the world who do bad things. And that all too often, bad things happen to good people.

But, when they looked at us with questioning eyes, did any of us have a good answer to the question they wanted answered the most, "Why?"

Fortunately, the President's leadership has enabled him to put together an international coalition dedicated to dismantling the network of terror and to bringing those responsible to justice, wherever they may try to hide.

The conspiracy of terrorism can only survive in the darkness of hatred. It can not long survive when we bring the light of peace to bear on all the Nations of the world. That light is the symbol of freedom that our Statue of Liberty holds proudly and with purpose in the harbor of New York, not far from where the Twin Towers once stood. It is a light that will someday shine for everyone in every country in the world, and we will all live in peace and freedom.

We are, and always will be, a Nation of individuals. We all have our own stories, our own goals and ambitions, and our own plans for our lives. But, when faced with a crisis, as we were last year, we come together as one united in our commitment that no one will ever have to endure a tragedy as terrible as the events that unfolded last year.

Yesterday was a day of remembrance. It will always be so. May it serve as a constant reminder that we are one Nation, under God, with liberty and justice for all.

The lives of all those who were lost are like an unfinished symphony that has been left to us to continue and complete. We carry their dreams, their hopes, their ambitions, their challenges and their plans for the future with us. With God's strength and the support of each of us we will complete the work they started and ensure the safety and security of all people, of all countries, and of all regions of the world for generations to come.

CBO ESTIMATES ON REPORTED BILLS

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, prior to the August recess, the Committee on Foreign Relations reported several bills without written report. At the time, the Congressional Budget Office, CBO, estimates on the bills were not available. I ask unanimous consent that the CBO estimates on these bills, S. 1777, H.R. 4558, and H.R. 2121, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, August 1, 2002.

Hon. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for S. 1777, the International Disability and Victims of Landmines, Civil Strife, and Warfare Assistance Act of 2002.

The CBO staff contacts for this estimate are Joseph C. Whitehill, who can be reached at 226-2840, and Jeanne M. De Sa, who can be reached at 226-9010.

Sincerely,

BARRY B. ANDERSON

S. 1777—International Disability and Victims of Landmines, Civil Strife, and Warfare Assistance Act of 2002

Summary: S. 1777 would authorize the President to furnish assistance to individuals with disabilities in foreign countries, including victims of landmines and other war injuries. The bill also would authorize the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) to provide such assistance, and would authorize the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to provide advice and expertise to U.S. agencies and private voluntary agencies undertaking such programs. Currently, the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID), the CDC, and VA provide some assistance in this area under more general authority. CBO estimates that implementing S. 1777 would cost about $4 million over the 2003-2005 period, assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts. Because S. 1777 would not affect direct spending or receipts, pay-as-you-go procedures would not apply.

S. 1777 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: For this estimate, CBO assumes that the legislation will be enacted near the beginning of fiscal year 2003, that the estimated amounts will be appropriated each year, and that outlays will follow historical spending patterns. The budgetary impact of S. 1777 is shown in the following table. The costs of this legislation fall within budget functions 550 (Health) and 700 (veterans benefits and services).

	By fiscal year, in millions of dollars—
	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
CHANGES IN SPENDING SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION

Basis of estimate: S. 1777 would authorize the President to furnish assistance to individuals with disabilities in foreign countries, including victims of landmines and other war injuries. Under more general authorities in current law, USAID, the CDC, and VA provide roughly $15 million a year in assistance in this area. The bill would expand current programs.

U.S. Agency for International Development.—Section 3 would authorize assistance to individuals with disabilities, including victims of landmines and other victims of warfare and civil strife. USAID currently provides such assistance, primarily through the Patrick Leahy War Victims Fund, with a funding level of $10 million each year. CBO estimates that under S. 1777, funding for individuals with disabilities would continue at that rate.

Centers for Disease Control.—Section 4 would authorize the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years 2003 and 2004 for the CDC to conduct programs in foreign countries for individuals with disabilities, including persons injured by landmines and civil strife. Those programs could include research on trauma and rehabilitation, evaluating treatment interventions, developing medical instruction tools for responding to traumatic injuries, and facilitating and training peer-support networks. The bill would authorize the CDC to provide grants to nongovernmental organizations to carry out research, prevention activities, and public awareness campaigns, as well as other activities to share information about research on limb loss and best practices in treatment programs.

Under current law, the CDC provides $5 million a year for some of the activities authorized by the bill, most of which are directed toward a network for victims of landmines. S. 1777 would authorize the CDC to carry out additional activities such as trauma research and evaluation of medical treatments. According to the CDC, those additional activities would require $2 million a year in additional funding. Thus, CBO estimates that the bill would increase agency spending by $4 million over the 2003-2005 period, subject to appropriation of the necessary amounts.

Department of Veterans Affairs.—Section 5 would authorize VA to provide advice and expertise to federal agencies and technical assistance to private voluntary organizations (PVOs) with respect to planning, development, operation, and evaluation of landmine assistance, research, and prevention programs. The VA currently provides advice to other federal agencies on a nonreimbursable basis. The bill would authorize VA to provide technical assistance to PVOs on a reimbursable basis. Based on information from VA, CBO estimates the cost and collections from providing this technical assistance would be less than $500,000 a year.

Pay-as-you-go considerations: None.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact: S. 1777 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

Previous CBO estimate: On November 8, 2001, CBO prepared an estimate for H.R. 3169, the International Disability and Victims of Landmines, Civil Strife, and Warfare Assistance Act of 2001, as ordered reported by the House Committee on International Relations on November 1, 2001. That bill would authorize the appropriation of $15 million in 2002 and 2003 for programs to assist individuals with disabilities, including victims of landmines and other victims of warfare and civil strife administered by USAID and such sums as may be necessary in 2002–2004 for the CDC. H.R. 3169 also would authorize VA to provide advice and expertise to federal agencies and technical assistance to PVOs with respect to planning, development, operation, and evaluation of landmine programs. CBO's estimate of the costs associated with the CDC and VA programs are the same in both bills.

Estimate prepared by: Federal spending: USAID—Joseph C. Whitehill (226–2840), CDC—Jeanne M. De Sa (226–9010), VA—Sam Papenfuss (226–2840); impact on state, local, and tribal governments: Greg Waring (226–3220); impact on the private sector: Paige Piper/Bach (226–2940).

Estimate approved by: Peter H. Fontaine, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, August 14, 2002.

Hon. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for H.R. 2121, the Russia Democracy Act of 2002.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Joseph C. Whitehall, who can be reached at 226–2840.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. SUNSHINE

Enclosure.

H.R. 2121—Russia Democracy Act of 2002

Summary: H.R. 2121 would expand the U.S. government's authority to provide assistance to democratic institutions and media in Russia and would authorize the appropriation of $50 million in 2003 for programs to strengthen the rule of law and an independent media in that country. (In 2002, appropriations for various types of assistance to the independent states of the former Soviet Union totaled $784 million.) Assuming the appropriation of the authorized amount, CBO estimates that implementing the act would cost about $50 million over the 2003–2007 period. Enacting H.R. 2121 would not affect direct spending or receipts; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures would not apply.

H.R. 2121 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The estimated budgetary impact of H.R. 2121 is shown in the following table. The estimate assumes that the authorized amount would be appropriated and that outlays would follow historical spending patterns for similar activities. The costs of this legislation fall within budget function 150 (international affairs).

By fiscal year, in millions of dollars—
	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
Authorization level .....	0	50	0	0	0	0
Estimated outlays .....	0	9	21	11	5	2

Pay-as-you-go considerations: None.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact: H.R. 2121 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

Previous CBO estimate: On November 6, 2001, CBO prepared an estimate for H.R. 2121 as ordered reported by the House Committee on International Relations on November 1, 2001. That earlier version of the legislation would have authorized the appropriation of $50 million in 2002.

Estimate prepared by: Federal costs: Joseph C. Whitehill (226–2840); impact on state, local, and tribal governments: Greg Waring (226–3220); impact on the private sector: Paige Piper/Bach (226–2940).

Hon. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, Jr.,

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for H.R. 4558, an act to extend the Irish Peace Process Cultural and Training Program.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Mark Grabowicz, who can be reached at 226–2860.

Sincerely,

BARRY B. ANDERSON

H.R. 4558—An act to extend the Irish Peace Process Cultural and Training Program

Summary: The Irish Peace Process Cultural and Training Program Act of 1998 (Public Law 105–319) provides nonimmigrant visas for young adults from certain areas of Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. Those individuals work or study in the United States for up to three years. This program is currently scheduled to terminate on October 1, 2005. H.R. 4558 would extend it until October 1, 2006.

CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 4558 would cost about $4 million in fiscal year 2006 for the Department of State to administer this program, subject to the availability of appropriations. Enacting the legislation also would affect direct spending and receipts, but CBO estimates that any such effects would not be significant. Because the act would effect direct spending and receipts, pay-as-you-go procedures would apply.

H.R. 4558 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The estimated budgetary impact of H.R. 4558 is shown in the following table. The costs of this legislation fall within budget functions 150 (international affairs) and 750 (administration of justice).

By fiscal year, in millions of dollars—
	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007
Spending under current law:
Estimated authorization level <sup>1</sup> .....	4	4	4	4	0	0
Estimated outlays .....	4	4	4	4	0	0
Proposed changes:
Spending under H.R. 4558:
Estimated authorization level .....	4	4	4	4	4	0
Estimated outlays .....	4	4	4	4	4	0

<sup>1</sup>The 2002 level is the amount appropriated for that year for the Irish Peace Process Cultural and Training Program. The estimated authorization levels for 2003 through 2005 are CBO baseline estimates.

Since the program's inception, there have been about 250 participants each year. Thus,

CBO estimates that any effects on fees collected by the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) or the State Department as a result of extending the program would be insignificant. INS fees are classified as offsetting receipts (a credit against direct spending), and the State Department fees are classified as governmental receipts (i.e., revenues).

Pay-as-you-go considerations: The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act specifies pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending and receipts. Those procedures would apply to H.R. 4558 because it would affect both direct spending and receipts, but CBO estimates that the annual amount of such changes would not be significant.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact: H.R. 4558 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

Previous CBO estimate: On July 22, 2002, CBO transmitted a cost estimate for H.R. 4558 as ordered reported by the House Committee on the Judiciary on July 17, 2002. The two versions of the legislation are identical, as are our cost estimates.

Estimate prepared by: Federal costs: Mark Grabowicz (226–2860); impact on state, local, and tribal governments: Angela Seitz (225–3220); impact on the private sector: Paige Piper/Bach (226–2960).

Estimate approved by: Peter H. Fontaine, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

VOTE EXPLANATION

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I regret that I was necessarily absent for the vote on the confirmation of Timothy Corrigan to the United States District Court in Florida due to my attending events in Minnesota commemorating the anniversary of the terrorist attacks of September 11. I would ask that the RECORD reflect that I would have voted yes on this nomination.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred in July 2000 in San Diego, CA. Four Mexican migrants were attacked and shot with pellet guns. The assailants, several neo-Nazi skinheads, chased the victims, beat them, and shot them with high-powered pellet guns. Two of the victims had to have the pellets surgically removed. Police investigated the incident as a hate crime.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

SPEECH OF YASSER ARAFAT

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, this week, Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat delivered a speech to the Palestinian Legislative Council that I found extremely disappointing.

The speech, which was given Monday, did not outline specific steps to end terrorism against the Israeli people and did not offer any new ideas on how to achieve peace in the Middle East. As one senior European diplomat said, "It was a very shallow speech, repeating the standard phrases he's used for years now."

Perhaps most disturbing of all was Yasser Arafat's outright refusal to call for an end to the practice of suicide bombings, even after his own interior minister, Abdel Razak Yehiyeh, said that all Palestinians should abandon suicide attacks. The omission is especially glaring given that drafts of the speech made available to the media beforehand explicitly called for the parliament to outlaw suicide bombings against civilians. As someone who has continually worked to rally international support against this disgraceful practice, I am greatly saddened that Yasser Arafat did not have the courage to call for a complete ban on suicide bombings.

Given this most recent failure of Yasser Arafat, I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues a report issued by Amnesty International titled "Without Distinction—Attacks on Civilians by Palestinian Armed Groups." This report, which was released just weeks before the August recess, documents 128 attacks between September 29, 2000 and May 31, 2002 in which 338 civilians were killed. In the press release issued with the report, William Schultz, Executive Director of Amnesty International USA, says, "there is no justification for attacking civilians, and Palestinian leaders must clearly state that all such attacks must cease, whether they take place in Israel, the West Bank or Gaza." I ask unanimous consent that the entire press release be printed in the RECORD. The full report can be found on the Internet at http://www.amnestyusa.org/countries/israel\_and\_occupied\_territories/index.html.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Amnesty International, July 11, 2002]
ISRAEL/OCCUPIED TERRITORIES/PALESTINIAN AUTHORITY

WASHINGTON, DC.—In a report released today, Amnesty International condemned attacks by Palestinian armed groups against civilians as crimes against humanity and possible war crimes, and called for the perpetrators to be arrested and prosecuted.

"There is no justification for attacking civilians, and Palestinian leaders must clearly state that all such attacks must cease, whether they take place in Israel, the West Bank or Gaza," said William F. Schulz, Executive Director of Amnesty International USA (AIUSA). "Action must then follow words, with those responsible for these attacks arrested and brought to justice in line with international human rights standards."

Amnesty International examined 128 attacks between September 29, 2000 and May 31, 2002 in which 338 civilians were killed. Based on analysis of the attacks and the armed groups claiming responsibility, Amnesty International concludes that the attacks are widespread, systemic, and part of an explicit policy of attacking civilians. Those individuals who order, plan, or carry out such attacks are therefore guilty of crimes against humanity, and the attacks may constitute war crimes. Attacks on civilians are expressly prohibited by the Geneva Conventions and the principles of international humanitarian law.

The report profiles the groups claiming responsibility for these attacks and reviews the statements of their leaders and officials. For example, the Al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigade, formed by Fatah members in 2000, has claimed responsibility for 23 attacks. Marwan Barghouti, Secretary General of Fatah, stated to Amnesty International that Fatah considers that Israelis in the West Bank and Gaza are not civilians because "it is all in occupied country." Amnesty International asserts that international law prohibits attacks on civilians wherever they are.

Despite an obligation to investigate and prosecute the perpetrators of attacks on civilians, many of the detentions of alleged members of armed groups by the Palestinian Authority appear to be motivated by considerations other than a genuine concern to bring the perpetrators to justice.

"The Palestinian Authority has the responsibility to stop attacks by Palestinian armed groups and claims that the Palestinian Authority has acted with due diligence to stop these attacks lack credibility," said Marty Rosenbluth, AIUSA's Country Specialist for Israel, the Occupied Territories and the Palestinian Authority. "However, the investigation and prosecution of those responsible must not result in further violations. To date, the measures taken by both Israel and the Palestinian Authority have included torture and violations of the right to a fair trial."

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, this week, Yasser Arafat had the opportunity to follow the advice of Dr. Schultz and strongly state that terrorist attacks, including suicide bombings, must end. Unfortunately, Yasser Arafat has again fallen short of what he must do so that peace can be achieved in the Middle East.

HISPANIC HERITAGE MONTH

• Mrs. CARNAHAN. Mr. President, I am proud to take this opportunity to recognize the period beginning on September 15 and ending on October 15 as Hispanic Heritage Month. This month celebrates the rich and varied heritage of Hispanics in the United States, who come from as far away as South America and the islands of the Caribbean, and as nearby as our neighbor to the south, Mexico. I urge all Americans to take this opportunity to learn more about the culture and important contributions Hispanics have made and continue to make to the United States.

It is fitting that what originally started out as Hispanic Heritage Week in September of 1968 has been lengthened to a month-long celebration of the culture and contributions of Hispanics to the American experience. This is in large part a reflection of the growing prominence of Hispanics in all sectors of American society. As a U.S. Senator, though, I am especially interested and encouraged by the growing role Hispanics are playing in our Nation's government.

Hispanics have a long history of service to the United States as elected officials. The first Hispanic to serve in the Congress was Delegate Joseph Marion Hernandez of the Territory of Florida in 1822. The first Hispanic elected from a State was Romualdo Pacheco of California, who won his race by one vote in 1876. Dennis Chavez of New Mexico became the first Hispanic Senator after being elected in 1936.

In recent years, Hispanic women have also successfully been elected to the Congress. In 1988, LEANA ROS-LEHTINEN became both the first Cuban-American and first Hispanic woman elected to serve in the House of Representatives. Four years later, she was joined in the House by LYDIA VELÁSQUEZ, the first Puerto Rican woman, and LUCILLE ROYBAL-ALLARD, the first Mexican-American woman. I am pleased that the number of Hispanics now serving in the House of Representatives has more than doubled in the years from 1984 to 2000, from 9 to 21, and I look forward to working with Hispanic colleagues in the Senate as well.

Government is not the only area where Hispanics are breaking new ground. Hispanics are enriching all aspects of our Nation's cultural and economic life. Hispanic entrepreneurs, who open up small businesses at a higher rate than that of the general population, fuel our economy and create jobs. Hispanic writers, such as Isabel Allende, are not only enriching our literature, but are also redefining the American experience through their novels, such as Portrait of Sepia and Daughter of Fortune. Hispanic labor leaders, following in the footsteps of Cesar Chavez, continue to fight for livable wages and safe working conditions. Roberto Clemente, an athlete and humanitarian, who died while delivering much-needed relief supplies to Central America, was the first Hispanic elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame following a stellar career with the Pittsburgh Pirates. Hispanics have also served honorably in every military engagement since the Revolutionary War—38 have earned the military's highest decoration for their bravery, the Medal of Honor. Louis Caldera, the eldest son of Mexican immigrants, followed in this tradition of military service and became the first Hispanic Secretary of the Army from 1998–2001.

As we celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month, let us take the time to learn more about these and other Hispanic leaders. But let us also take a moment to recognize the many hardworking Hispanic members of our own communities as well. Let us welcome them when they are new arrivals and ensure that our diversity remains one of our greatest strengths. Their contributions serve to enrich our common culture and we are all the better for it. The truest testimony of our greatness as a nation is the enduring power of the American Dream and the sacrifices people everywhere are willing to make to attain it.●

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION FOR INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS LOCAL 309

● Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today to celebrate the centennial of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 309 in Collinsville, IL. On September 11, 1902, eleven electrical workers from my hometown of East St. Louis, IL committed to support a united labor effort by forming their own local chapter. Despite the dangers in developing the electrical industry, the group continued its work and advanced to become highly trained and skilled journeymen.

The group has grown from its eleven original members to 1,100 and has helped shape the Metro-east and surrounding areas of southern Illinois. Local 309 has been a leader in the electrical industry, with advancements in training, organizing, market recovery, and member services. Its apprentice program has been registered in the United States Department of Labor Bureau of Apprenticeship and has been producing skilled and experienced workers for the past 100 years. It continues to show its commitment to the education of its members in this, its centennial year.

Through their expertise and solidarity, today's members of Local 309 continue the legacy of their founders by uniting the electrical workers of southern Illinois under the common goals of fairness, justice, and leadership in their field.

Congratulations to the members of Local 309 on their centennial celebration. Best wishes for the next 100 years.●

NATIONAL KIDS VOTING WEEK

● Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I wish to take this opportunity to recognize Kids Voting USA and its efforts to educate our children about civic participation, democracy, and the electoral process. Kids Voting USA is an organization that began in my State, but now reaches nearly five million students nationwide.

What began as a fishing trip to Costa Rica by three Arizona businessmen has blossomed into an organization that involves 9,000 schools, 200,000 teachers, 80,000 volunteers, and countless sponsors and donors. With 38 States and more than 140 communities across the Nation participating, Kids Voting USA teaches students from kindergarten through high school about the importance of civic participation and their rights and responsibilities as citizens. Through an acclaimed, interactive core of service-based curricula, young people gain the knowledge, skills, and motivation for democratic living.

Combined with a civics education, students participate in local and national elections in communities across the country. Kids Voting USA enables students to visit official polls on election day, accompanied by a parent or guardian, to cast a ballot that replicates the official ballot. During the last national election, more than 1.5 million students voted as part of the Kids Voting USA program. In last year's local elections students actively participated in over 114 cities, counties, and school districts.

This year, National Kids Voting Week is September 11–17, and will coincide with the inauguration of National Civic Participation Week. It will be a week that highlights programs and activities that lead to greater participation in elections and the political process. As we reflect on the events of the last year, National Kids Voting Week will celebrate the vibrant and important Kids Voting program by focusing on the hopes and dreams of young citizens. I would like to recognize Kids Voting USA and all it has done to promote the future of democracy by engaging families, schools, and communities in the election process.●

MERCK MECTIZAN DONATION PROGRAM

● Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the 15th anniversary of one of the largest and most successful public/private partnerships in health care in the developing world, the Merck MECTIZAN Donation Program. Today, this program provides hope to millions, and I am proud to pay tribute to Merck & Co., a leading New Jersey corporation, for its work on this critical issue.

On October 21, 1987, Merck & Co., Inc. announced plans to donate MECTIZAN, ivermectin, a medicine Merck discovered to combat river blindness, for as long as it might be needed, wherever needed. Onchocerciasis, "river blindness", is a leading cause of blindness in the developing world. It is a debilitating and disfiguring disease, affecting millions in sub-Saharan Africa, parts of Central and South America and Yemen in the Middle East. The disease, which has infected 18 million people and has left an estimated one million people visually impaired or blind, is caused by parasitic worms that infiltrate, multiply, and spread throughout the human body.

In the global fight against infectious diseases, the lack of public health infrastructure contributes to widespread and needless suffering even when valuable drug treatments are available for use. When Merck made the decision to donate MECTIZAN to treat river blindness, the company understood that while providing the drug for free was necessary, it was not sufficient. They also understood that it was critical to create a reliable, effective distribution system that would ensure MECTIZAN reached the affected millions for as long as necessary.

The lack of public health care infrastructure was a tremendous challenge even though MECTIZAN is an easy to administer oral medication that requires only a single annual dose. To that end, a multisector coalition involving Merck, the World Health Organization; the World Bank; UNICEF; the Carter Center; Ministries of Health of endemic countries; more than thirty non-governmental development organizations, and local community health workers was created. The Merck MECTIZAN Donation Program is now considered by many to be the most important model for public/private partnerships for addressing health care issues in the developing world.

The success and sustainability of the Merck MECTIZAN Donation Program over the past 15 years demonstrates the power and possibilities in strong and creative public/private partnerships to help address the enormous public health challenges facing developing countries today. As a result of the MECTIZAN Donation Program, more than 30 million people are now receiving treatment for river blindness annually. Since the program's inception, Merck has donated more than 700 million MECTIZAN tablets. Access to MECTIZAN has spared millions of children and their families from the risk of infection and the fear of going blind due to river blindness.

Building on the success of the program's fight against river blindness, Merck expanded the program in 1998 to include the donations of MECTIZAN for the prevention of lymphatic filariasis, more commonly known as elephantiasis, in African countries where river blindness and lymphatic filariasis co-exist. It is estimated that 300 million people in Africa are at risk of this disease.

On this, the 15th anniversary of the Merck MECTIZAN Donation Program, I offer praise and gratitude to the many partners who have made life better for millions of people in the developing world.●

TRIBUTE TO ALAN KRANOWITZ

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to a great friend and outstanding public servant, Alan Kranowitz, who passed away on June 3, 2002, following a long battle with cancer. Alan's loss continues to reverberate throughout the Washington D.C. area, a testament to the enormous impact he had and the plethora of lasting friendships he made during his 25 years of service as a top advisor to Congressmen and Presidents.

Alan was born and raised in New Britain, CT, and educated at Yale. He first came to Washington in 1965 to serve as executive assistant, and later as chief of staff to my father, Senator THOMAS DODD. By the time Alan left my father's office in 1971, he was one of my father's most valued and trusted aides.

But Alan did not only add knowledge and outstanding political instincts to my father's office. Alan's wit, good nature, and personal appeal made him beloved beyond measure by everyone who was fortunate enough to have known him, or to have worked with him, in my father's Senate office, and beyond.

After 1971, Alan moved easily between top congressional staff positions and key policy positions in the Nixon, Ford, and Reagan administrations. Starting off as Senate liaison for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development under President Nixon, Alan soon became the chief lobbyist for the Office of Management and Budget in the Nixon and Ford Administrations.

In the mid-1980s, Alan joined the Reagan White House as a chief legislative advisor and liaison, where his encyclopedic knowledge of policy and his personal ability to bridge differences between Democrats and Republicans made him a key player in shaping the legislative agenda of President Reagan's second term.

Ken Duberstein, President Reagan's Chief of Staff, told The Washington Post and The New York Times that Alan was an invaluable part of Reagan's legislative team; that the White House "relied heavily on [Alan] in determining what was possible and doable" because Alan always offered "absolutely unbiased, straightforward advice."

Aside from working in the White House, in the 1980s, Alan also served as chief of staff to former Representative Tom Loeffler of Texas, and as a senior advisor to House Republican leader Bob Michel.

In 1989, Ronald Reagan appointed Alan as an original council member of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington.

For the past 12 years, Alan served as a senior vice president of the National Association of Wholesalers-Distributors.

I believe that Alan is best remembered in Washington as someone who brought integrity wherever he went, and excelled at whatever he did. In a town where one's political and institutional affiliations often define their career options, Alan moved easily from the Senate to the House, from Congress to the White House, and from Democratic to Republican positions.

That's because it was Alan the man, not Alan the Democrat, or Alan the Republican, who lit up a room, who brought charm and grace along with him wherever he went, and who touched the hearts of everyone with whom he came in contact.

Alan's was a life cut short, and he will be sorely missed. To Carol, his wife of 35 years, and to his sons, Jeremy and David, and everyone else in Alan's family, I offer my most heartfelt condolences for your loss.

But I came to the floor of the Senate today not simply to mourn a loss, I came to the floor to celebrate a life. The life of Alan Kranowitz was truly a life well-lived. He touched so many and every one of us he touched is a better person because of it.●

VANESSA SHORT BULL IS MISS SOUTH DAKOTA

● Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, today I publicly commend Vanessa Short Bull, a resident of Rapid City, South Dakota, on her selection to represent South Dakota in the Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City, NJ.

Vanessa Short Bull's extraordinary dedication to educational excellence, efforts to increase political awareness, prodigious ballet talent, and years of dedicated practice helped her win the title of Miss South Dakota. Vanessa will now be traveling to Atlantic City to compete against other highly talented women from across our nation for the title of Miss America 2002.

Vanessa obtains the honor of being the first American Indian to be crowned Miss South Dakota. She was born on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, and currently resides in Rapid City. She is an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, and a direct descendant of several great Lakota leaders. Thomas and Darlene Short Bull are Vanessa's proud parents, and they deserve special recognition for their roles in helping Vanessa obtain this prestigious honor.

"Political Awareness and Participation" is the center of Vanessa's platform. She believes it is important for Americans, especially young people and minorities, to become more involved in the democratic process. She has been actively helping her cause by registering voters and encouraging them to get out and vote. Vanessa will perform the classical ballet piece "The Dying Swan" for the talent portion of the competition. She has danced for more than 15 years and has studied at the School of Cleveland Ballet, Ballet West Conservatory, and the University of Utah.

The Miss America Organization has maintained a tradition of empowering American women to achieve their personal and professional goals, while providing a forum for them to express their opinions, talents, and intelligence. Vanessa exemplifies this tradition, and provides an excellent example for other gifted young women to emulate. All of South Dakota is proud to have her represent our great state.

Vanessa Short Bull is an extraordinary woman who richly deserves this distinguished recognition. I strongly commend her years of hard work and dedication, and I am very pleased that her substantial efforts are being publicly honored and celebrated. I wish her the best at the Miss America competition, and it is with great honor that I share her impressive accomplishments with my colleagues.●

CHARACTER COUNTS AND ALBUQUERQUE'S SEPTEMBER 11 COMMEMORATION

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to highlight the contributions of a community, dedicated to the spirit of the Character Counts education movement, in its commemoration of the first anniversary of the September 11 terrorist attacks on our Nation.

The Nation as a whole this week took time to honor the victims, salute our military men and women fighting the war on terrorism, and reaffirm our faith and belief in our great Nation. New Mexico communities joined in this effort, not least among them our largest city, Albuquerque.

I rise today to highlight Albuquerque's tribute because it fused the nearly decade-long effort to build character education into the day-to-day life of the city with the community's desire to commemorate September 11.

This week, some 4,200 Albuquerque school children simultaneously released helium-filled balloons as part of a "Character Counts Soaring Spirits Salute" to commemorate September 11. This balloon launch gave the students a chance to honor the people who lost their lives in last year's terrorist attacks.

But the Character Counts rally had a second purpose. We designed this balloon launch to lead into the celebration of National Character Week. Supporters of the Character Counts initiative hope this will become a yearly observance built around September 11, and the purpose of the week is to celebrate the acts of kindness and courage we see in our communities every single day.

The Character Counts Soaring Spirits Salute involved some outstanding New Mexico community leaders and business owners who worked together to make this event happen, and serve as evidence of a community working together to improve itself by promoting the tenets of good character. I am proud to say these are people who routinely rally behind our youth.

I believe some deserve to be singled out, including: the New Mexico State Fair; Excel Staffing Companies; MCI; Albuquerque Public Schools, (APS); KISS-FM; Public Service Company of New Mexico; Valley Distributing; Greg Cook Productions; Dave Garduño of Garduño's Restaurants; as well as the men and women of the 58th Special Operations Wing and the New Mexico National Guard of Kirtland Air Force Base in Albuquerque.

A measure of gratitude is also owed to a number of individuals, including: Gabe Garcia and Chris Montaña of Duranes Elementary School; Judi Preston of Video Wizard; Eric Hampleman of Simmons Media; Steve Stucker of KOB-TV; Bill Wood of KRQE-TV; Bruce Bortner and Ed O'Leary of the Albuquerque Character Counts Leadership Council; Carole Smith of APS; Terry Eisenbart of Southwest Airlines, who sponsored State Fair festivities for the day.

I am very fortunate to represent a community like Albuquerque where I know we can always count on daily acts of Respect, Responsibility, Trustworthiness, Citizenship, Fairness and Caring. Those are the pillars of Character Counts, and it's why today I congratulate and I deeply thank my neighbors in New Mexico for their daily acts of kindness, courage, and character as we mark our progress as a nation and a united community a year after the terrible attacks on our Nation.●

TRIBUTE TO JOHNNY UNITAS

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, it is with sadness that I rise today to pay tribute to a man who passed away too soon, the Man with the Golden Arm, the great Baltimore Colt, Hall of Famer Johnny Unitas. He was known to many as the greatest quarterback to ever play in the National Football League. Yet to those of us in Baltimore and Maryland, he was our own Johnny U. He was the man who put professional football on the national map, who embodied the strong spirit of our city and State.

Johnny Unitas was born in Pittsburgh, but he spent most of his life in Baltimore. He was as much a part of the fabric of the city as crab cakes and Cal Ripken.

After high school, he wanted to play football in college at the University of Notre Dame. Yet the coaches there told him he was too small to play football. Johnny wound up playing at the University of Louisville, and was drafted in 1955 by his hometown Pittsburgh Steelers. The Steelers promptly cut him from the team before the 1955 season started, telling him that he wasn't smart enough to be a quarterback.

Pittsburgh's loss was Baltimore's gain. The Baltimore Colts signed him in 1956, and the rest is history. In 1958, he led the Colts to an improbable victory in the NFL Championship Game against the New York Giants, a game that is now referred to as "The Greatest Ever Played." Unitas engineered the famous 80-yard game-tying drive with less than 2 minutes to play in regulation, then led the Colts to victory in overtime. This was the first overtime game ever played in the NFL. The legend of Johnny Unitas was soon born.

His trademark crew-cut and black high-top cleats were copied by boys all over Baltimore, Maryland, and the entire country. Every kid wanted to be number 19.

His toughness was legendary. Many times he played with broken bones, through unbearable pain. The words he said to his teammates before every game embodied his spirit: "Talk is cheap, let's go play."

His accomplishments are too numerous to mention, but among them are these: 3-time Player of the Year; 3-time NFL Champion; first quarterback to pass for over 40,000 yards; a touchdown pass in 47 consecutive games, a feat which is compared to Joe DiMaggio's 56-game hitting streak; 10 Pro Bowl selections; Player of the Decade for the 1960's; Greatest Player in the First 50 Years of the NFL; NFL 75th Anniversary Team; and Hall of Fame Inductee, 1979. When he retired in 1973, Johnny Unitas held 22 NFL records.

It is not just his accomplishments on the field that endeared him to the fans in Baltimore. He was an unassuming superstar, a reluctant hero, a regular guy who happened to be a tremendous athlete. He understood that a smile or a handshake or an autograph could make a fan's day.

He was generous with charities, too, even as he fell upon difficult financial times. He established the Johnny Unitas Golden Arm Educational Foundation, and supported various organizations dedicated to children's causes, cancer research, and victims of sexual assault and domestic violence.

Johnny Unitas was the underdog who became the greatest quarterback in the history of the National Football League. Yet beyond that, he was a fine person who will be sorely missed, not only in Baltimore and Maryland, but across the country. My thoughts and prayers are with his family, his friends, and his many, many fans.●

EXPULSION OF THE ACADIANS

● Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I rise today to address the injustices the British Crown inflicted upon the Acadian people over 200 years ago. Due to their refusal to take an oath of loyalty to the King of Great Britain that would require them to bear arms against their French ancestors, the British governor exiled them from their homes and confiscated their property in Eastern Canada beginning in 1755.

This action caused great suffering among the Acadian people as they struggled to find a new home. Forced from their homes, many left for the American colonies. Ultimately, a small group of Acadians found their way to the Spanish colony of Louisiana in 1764. In the next twenty-five years, over 2,600 made the journey to Louisiana.

These refugees ultimately settled in Louisiana and created the Cajun culture which has so richly influenced Louisiana since that time. While Louisiana culture benefited greatly from the Acadian expulsion, the suffering of the Acadian people must never be forgotten.

Great Britain is one of our closest allies. We have a long history of cooperation and friendship. It is for this very reason I believe and hope the British government would acknowledge this tragic incident and the difficulties it caused for thousands of my Cajun ancestors.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Evans, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

NOTICE STATING THAT THE CONTINUATION OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO THE TERRORIST ATTACKS ON THE UNITED STATES OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001 IS TO CONTINUE IN EFFECT BEYOND SEPTEMBER 14, 2002—PM 107

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1622(d), provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent to the Federal Register the enclosed notice, stating that the emergency declared with respect to the terrorist attacks on the United States of September 11, 2001, is to continue in effect for 1 year. Proclamation 7463, Declaration of National Emergency by Reason of Certain Terrorist Attacks, was published in the Federal Register on September 18, 2001 (66 Fed. Reg. 48199).

The terrorist threat that led to the declaration on September 4, 2001, of a national emergency continues. For this reason, I have determined that it is necessary to continue in effect after September 14, 2002, the national emergency with respect to the terrorist threat.

GEORGE W. BUSH.
THE WHITE HOUSE, September 12, 2002.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Under the authority of the Senate of January 3, 2001, the Secretary of the Senate, on September 11, 2002, during the recess of the Senate, received a message from the House of Representatives announcing that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills:

H.R. 3287. An act to redesignate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 900 Brentwood Road, NE, in Washington, D.C., as the "Joseph Curseen, Jr. and Thomas Morris, Jr. Processing and Distribution Center".

H.R. 3917. An act to authorize a national memorial to commemorate the passengers and crew of Flight 93 who, on September 11, 2001, courageously gave their lives thereby thwarting a planned attack on our Nation's Capital, and for other purposes.

H.R. 5207. An act to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 6101 West Old Shakopee Road in Bloomington, Minnesota, as the "Thomas E. Burnett, Jr. Post Office Building".

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read the second time, and placed on the calendar:

S. 2924. A bill to authorize the President to award posthumously the Congressional Gold Medal to the passengers and crew of United Airlines Flight 93 in the aftermath of the terrorist attack on the United States on September 11, 2001.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself,
Mr. LEAHY, Mrs. CLINTON, and Mr. SCHUMER):

S. 2928. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act and the Water Resources Development Act of 2000 to modify provisions relating to the Lake Champlain basin; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, Members of the Senate, I rise on behalf of myself and Senators LEAHY, CLINTON, and SCHUMER to introduce the Daniel Patrick Moynihan Lake Champlain Basin Program Act of 2002.

This legislation will bring the Lake Champlain Basin Program into the 21st century.

In 1990, along with Senators LEAHY, MOYNIHAN, and D'AMATO, I introduced the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act which designated Lake Champlain as a resource of national significance.

The program began as a management conference with a charter of developing a comprehensive pollution prevention, control, and restoration plan for Lake Champlain.

The management conference began work immediately after passage of the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act of 1990 and developed the Plan entitled, "Opportunities for Action."

The conference evolved into today's Lake Champlain Basin Program which works cooperatively with partners throughout the region to protect and enhance the environmental integrity and the social and economic benefits of the Lake Champlain Basin.

A key element of the success of this program is the active participation of the local partners.

State and local governments, non-profit entities, and the regional representatives of the Federal agencies involved in the Basin Program are the best fuel behind this program's success.

It is their efforts that have made this program an international model for lake restoration programs.

The program completed its first 5-year update of "Opportunities for Action" in January 2002.

Our legislation authorizes the implementation of this plan through a partnership between the Basin Program and the Federal Government.

Before I get into the specifics of the legislation, let me take a minute to describe the Lake Champlain Basin to you.

For those of you who have not visited either the Vermont or the New York side, I recommend that you take the time to see this magnificent spot which is the sixth largest freshwater lake in the world, after only the Great Lakes.

Lake Champlain flows north along the borders of Vermont, New York, and Canada.

It is 120 miles long and just 12 miles wide at its widest point.

Lake Champlain is home to a diverse array of 81 species of fish, 318 species of birds, 56 species of mammals, 21 species of amphibians and 20 reptile species.

The floor of Lake Champlain boasts some of the best-preserved submerged cultural heritage resources in North America.

Shipwrecks in the lake reflect virtually every era of human activity in the Basin.

The Lake Champlain Basin stretches from the Adirondacks to the Green Mountains and north into Quebec.

It is an area about the size of Massachusetts with 56 percent of the Basin in Vermont, 37 percent in New York, and 7 percent in Canada.

The Basin not only offers natural beauty, but also plays a key role in the life of Vermonters, New Yorkers, and Canadians.

It is a recreation mecca in the region with over 7,500 motorboats, more than 3,000 sailboats, and thousands of swimmers, windsurfers, kayakers, canoers, and scuba divers visiting Lake Champlain on a typical summer day.

Recreation generated $3.8 billion in the Basin in 2000. The population in the Basin has been steadily growing over the last 40 years.

Today, approximately one-third of the Basin's over 600,000 residents use the lake as a source of drinking water. It is also a key source of water for agriculture and industry. All of this human activity has taken a toll on Lake Champlain.

Although it remains a generally healthy lake today, it is plagued by excess phosphorous loadings, toxics such as mercury, and invasions of nonnative species such as the zebra mussel and sea lamprey.

We must take action to prevent future degradation.

The Lake Champlain Basin Program issued a revised Plan in January 2002, also entitled "Opportunities for Action," that provides a path to protect the health of the lake well into the future.

The bill we introduce today, the Daniel Patrick Moynihan Lake Champlain Basin Program Act of 2002, authorizes the Federal side of the partnerships required to implement Opportunities for Action.

This legislation authorizes $5 million per year for 5 years for the Environmental Protection Agency to make grants to implement Opportunities for Action.

These funds will be coupled with a 25-percent local match as well as with $6 million per year for 5 years from the Department of the Interior, the Department of Commerce, and the Department of Agriculture.

This bill also revises an authorization that Congress passed in the Water Resources Development Act of 2000 for the Army Corps of Engineers to provide design and construction assistance of up to $20 million for implementation of Opportunities for Action to make it more usable for "Vermont-style" projects.

These funds will be used to protect and enhance the environmental integrity and social and economic benefits of the Lake Champlain basin and to achieve the environmental goals described in the plan, including: the reduction of phosphorous inputs; the reduction of toxic contamination; the control of the introduction, spread, and impacts of nonnative nuisance substances and species; the minimization of risks to humans from water-related health hazards, and the protection of natural, recreation, and cultural heritage resources.

I look forward to working with my colleagues in Washington, in New York, and, most of all, in Vermont to pass this legislation and to implement this program that is so critical to the long-term health of Lake Champlain.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I join my colleague from Vermont in supporting this bill that he is introducing today, the Daniel Patrick Moynihan Lake Champlain Basin Program Act of 2002.

I thank Chairman JEFFORDS, with whom I have the honor and pleasure of serving on the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, for working on this legislation, for being devoted to Lake Champlain, and for giving my distinguished predecessor, Senator Moynihan, the honor of naming it after him.

Senator Moynihan was in my office on Tuesday. I told him of Senator JEFFORDS's plans, and he was surprised and delighted. But he certainly deserves this great honor because, along with Senator JEFFORDS, he has been a champion of this natural and cultural resource that our States share: the Lake Champlain Basin and Champlain Valley.

We are joining with our colleagues—Senator LEAHY and Senator SCHUMER—in introducing this legislation because we know how significant this lake is. It is the sixth largest natural freshwater lake in the United States. Some of us consider it a "Great Lake." It is home to an array of fish, birds, and other wildlife.

It also has significant historic, social, and economic consequences for our entire country. What we aim to do with this legislation is to give the Champlain Valley Basin the kind of support it needs to continue its recovery.

This is an area that Senator JEFFORDS and Senator Moynihan paid particular attention to. They have worked very closely together over the last many years. And it builds on legislation that Senator Moynihan played a key role in during the 101st Congress, as well as a plan that came out of the 1990 legislation entitled "Opportunities for Action" that enabled the Lake Champlain Steering Committee to create the new guiding document on which our legislation, in great measure, draws.

This will provide new and important resources for counties in Vermont and also counties in New York, including Clinton, Essex, Franklin, Hamilton, Warren, and Washington Counties.

This is very important environmental legislation, but it is equally important economic, social, and historic legislation. That is why I am very proud to sponsor this legislation with my chairman, Senator JEFFORDS, and to join him in naming this legislation after our illustrious and esteemed colleague, Senator Patrick Moynihan.

There is no more fitting tribute to Senator Moynihan than to give him the recognition that he is due for the leadership role he played in bringing to national attention places of great national importance, such as Lake Champlain.

I thank Senator JEFFORDS.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, my colleague, Senator JEFFORDS, introduced legislation, the Lake Champlain Basin Program Act of 2002, in honor of former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan. With the forbearance of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut and the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, I will only speak for a couple minutes.

I, obviously, strongly support what Senator JEFFORDS has done and appreciate his work and the work of the members of his staff.

In Vermont, we are extremely pleased with the success of the Lake Champlain program to date. With the additional resources in this bill, we are confident that the problems that Lake Champlain encounters—the problems of pollution and of other matters—can be addressed.

Lake Champlain is a magnificent lake standing between Vermont and New York. It is a lake that is enjoyed by people who fish, sail, who are involved in economic activities, and, of course, it has tremendous economic and historical value to this Nation, from the time of the Revolutionary War on.

The basin program shows what happens when two States, Vermont and New York, and one province, the Province of Quebec, get together and work on a common watershed and link their people, their governments—local, State, and Federal—together in almost unprecedented cooperation to save this great big beautiful lake. It has been a model for watersheds throughout the Nation.

I am pleased to join in introducing this legislation. I believe it will ensure that our children and our grandchildren will enjoy this lake in the same way Senator JEFFORDS and I did when we were children.

I am very pleased to join with my colleagues from Vermont and New York as we introduce the Lake Champlain Basin Program Act of 2002 in honor of former Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

I was with Senator MOYNIHAN in 1990 that we were able to enact the first comprehensive piece of legislation to make Federal resources available to help our states address the challenges facing Lake Champlain.

I want to thank Senator JEFFORDS and his staff for all the work they have put into this effort. I know that many hours have gone into the research, discussion and editing to get where we are today.

I also want to thank Senators CLINTON and SCHUMER who are our valuable New York partners in all things related to Lake Champlain.

Our initial 1990 Lake Champlain legislation was very successful. It brought together various agencies, interest groups and government entities to develop a comprehensive pollution prevention and restoration management plan for the Lake.

Through long hours and a cooperative effort, the Vermonters and New Yorkers involved came up with a good plan which was signed by Governors Dean and Pataki in 1996.

While we have several priority action items ranging across a wide spectrum of Lake related issues, the Big three remain phosphorus reduction, toxic contaminant prevention and clean-up and management of aquatic nuisance species.

Our legislative proposal today rightfully moves from an emphasis on research and planning to one of clean-up implementation and, quite importantly, monitoring the progress of that clean-up.

We are very pleased with the success of the Lake Champlain Basin Program to date, and with the additional resources envisioned in this bill, we are confident that the problems Lake Champlain is encountering can be addressed successfully.

The Basin Program stands as a fine example of how two States and one province can work together as a common watershed linking its citizens and their governments at all levels—local, State and Federal.

Indeed, the Lake Champlain model has been held up many times in recent years as an example for other watersheds around the world.

We are happy to share our successes, and even our failures, with conservation initiatives internationally.

I am excited about the prospects of this legislation and I hope the full Senate will give Vermont and New York its ringing endorsement once it has received committee review.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Daniel Patrick Moynihan Lake Champlain Basin Program Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. LAKE CHAMPLAIN BASIN PROGRAM.

Title I of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended by striking section 120 (33 U.S.C. 1270) and inserting the following:

"SEC. 120. LAKE CHAMPLAIN BASIN PROGRAM.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) COMMITTEE.—The term 'Committee' means the steering committee of the program comprised of representatives of Federal, State, and local governments and other persons, as specified in the Plan.

"(2) LAKE CHAMPLAIN BASIN.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'Lake Champlain basin' means all water and land resources in the United States in the drainage basin of Lake Champlain.

"(B) INCLUSIONS.—The term 'Lake Champlain basin' includes—

"(i) Clinton, Essex, Franklin, Hamilton, Warren, and Washington counties in the State of New York; and

"(ii) Addison, Bennington, Caledonia, Chittenden, Franklin, Grand Isle, Lamoille, Orange, Orleans, Rutland, and Washington counties in the State of Vermont.

"(3) PLAN.—The term 'Plan' means the plan entitled 'Opportunities for Action: An Evolving Plan for the Future of the Lake Champlain Basin', approved by Lake Champlain Steering Committee on January 30, 2002, that describes the actions necessary to protect and enhance the environmental integrity and the social and economic benefits of the Lake Champlain basin.

"(4) PROGRAM.—The term 'program' means the Lake Champlain Basin Program established by subsection (b)(1).

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established a program to be known as the 'Lake Champlain Basin Program'.

"(2) PURPOSES.—The purposes of the program are—

"(A) to protect and enhance the environmental integrity and social and economic benefits of the Lake Champlain basin; and

"(B) to achieve the environmental goals described in the Plan, including—

"(i) the reduction of phosphorous inputs to Lake Champlain from point sources and nonpoint sources so as to—

"(I) promote a healthy and diverse ecosystem; and

"(II) provide for sustainable human use and enjoyment of Lake Champlain;

"(ii) the reduction of toxic contamination, such as contamination by mercury and polychlorinated biphenyls, to protect public health and the ecosystem of the Lake Champlain basin;

“(iii) the control of the introduction, spread, and impacts of nonnative nuisance species to preserve the integrity of the ecosystem of the Lake Champlain basin;

“(iv) the minimization of risks to humans from water-related health hazards in the Lake Champlain basin, including through the protection of sources of drinking water in the Lake Champlain basin;

“(v) the restoration and maintenance of a healthy and diverse community of fish and wildlife in the Lake Champlain basin;

“(vi) the protection and restoration of wetland, streams, and riparian habitat in the Lake Champlain basin, including functions and values provided by those areas;

“(vii) the management of Lake Champlain, including shorelines and tributaries of Lake Champlain, to achieve—

“(I) the protection of natural and cultural resources of Lake Champlain; and “(II) the maintenance of recreational uses of Lake Champlain;

“(viii) the protection of recreation and cultural heritage resources of the Lake Champlain basin;

“(ix) the continuance of the Lake Champlain long-term water quality and biological monitoring program; and “(x) the promotion of healthy and diverse economic activity and sustainable development principles in the Lake Champlain basin.

“(c) IMPLEMENTATION.—The Committee, in consultation with appropriate heads of Federal agencies, shall implement the program.

“(d) REVISION OF PLAN.—At least once every 5 years, the Committee shall review and, as necessary, revise the Plan.

“(e) GRANTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the Administrator may, in consultation with the Committee, make grants, for the purpose of implementing the management strategies contained in the Plan, to—

“(A) State, interstate, and regional water pollution control agencies; and “(B) public or nonprofit agencies, institutions, and organizations.

“(2) COST SHARING.—The Federal share of the cost of any activity carried out using funds from a grant provided under this subsection shall not exceed 75 percent.

“(3) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS.—The Administrator may establish such additional requirements for the administration of grants provided under this subsection as the Administrator determines to be appropriate.

“(f) COORDINATION OF FEDERAL PROGRAMS.—

“(1) AGRICULTURE.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall support the implementation of the program by providing financial and technical assistance relating to best management practices for controlling nonpoint source pollution, particularly with respect to preventing pollution from agricultural activities.

“(2) INTERIOR.—

“(A) GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.—The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the United States Geological Survey, shall support the implementation of the program by providing financial, scientific, and technical assistance and applicable watershed research, such as—

“(i) stream flow monitoring;

“(ii) water quality monitoring;

“(iii) evaluation of effectiveness of best management practices;

“(iv) research on the transport and final destination of toxic chemicals in the environment; and

“(v) development of an integrated geographic information system of the Lake Champlain basin.

“(B) FISH AND WILDLIFE.—The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service and in cooperation with the Committee, shall support the implementation of the program by—

“(i) supporting the protection and restoration of wetland, streams, aquatic, and riparian habitat;

“(ii) supporting restoration of interjurisdictional fisheries and declining aquatic species in the Lake Champlain watershed through—

“(I) propagation of fish in hatcheries; and “(II) continued advancement in fish culture and aquatic species management technology;

“(iii) supporting the control and management of aquatic nuisance species that have adverse effects on—

“(I) fisheries; or

“(II) the form, function, or structure of the ecosystem of the Lake Champlain basin;

“(iv) providing financial and technical assistance in accordance with the Fish and Wildlife Coordination Act (16 U.S.C. 661 et seq.) to private landowners seeking to improve fish and wildlife habitat, a goal of which is—

“(I) restoration of full function to degraded habitat;

“(II) enhancement of specific habitat functions; or

“(III) establishment of valuable fish and wildlife habitat that did not previously exist on a particular parcel of real property; and “(v) taking other appropriate action to assist in implementation of the Plan.

“(C) NATIONAL PARKS.—The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the National Park Service, shall support the implementation of the program by providing, through the use of funds in the National Recreation and Preservation Appropriation account of the National Park Service, financial and technical assistance for programs concerning cultural heritage, natural resources, recreational resources, or other programs consistent with the mission of the National Park Service that are associated with the Lake Champlain basin, as identified in the Plan.

“(3) COMMERCE.—The Secretary of Commerce, acting through the Under Secretary for Oceans and Atmosphere, shall support the implementation of the program by providing financial and technical assistance, through the national sea grant program of the Department of Commerce, for—

“(A) research;

“(B) management of fisheries and other aquatic resources;

“(C) related watershed programs; and “(D) other appropriate action to assist in implementation of the Plan.

“(g) NO EFFECT ON OTHER AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section affects the authority of—

“(1) any Federal or State agency; or

“(2) any international entity relating to Lake Champlain established by an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

“(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $11,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2007, of which—

“(1) $5,000,000 shall be made available to the Administrator;

“(2) $3,000,000 shall be made available to the Secretary of the Interior;

“(3) $1,000,000 shall be made available to the Secretary of Commerce; and

“(4) $2,000,000 shall be made available to the Secretary of Agriculture.”.

SEC. 3. LAKE CHAMPLAIN WATERSHED, VERMONT AND NEW YORK.

Section 542 of the Water Resources Development Act of 2000 (114 Stat. 2671) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking “(a)” and all that follows through “(A) the land areas” and inserting the following:

“(1) the land areas”;

(B) by striking “(B)(i) the” and inserting the following:

“(2)(A) the”;

(C) by striking “(ii) the” and inserting the following:

(6) in subsection (e)(1)—

(A) by striking “to a” and inserting “to an”;

(B) by striking “agreement that shall require the non-Federal interest” and inserting the following: “agreement that is in accordance with section 221 of the Flood Control Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 1962d-5b) and under which the non-Federal interest agrees”.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself and Mrs. BOXER):

S. 2929. A bill to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 265 South Western Avenue, Los Angeles, California, as the “Nat King Cole Post Office”; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today, along with Senator BOXER to introduce legislation that would name a post office in Los Angeles, CA after Nathaniel Adams Coles, whom we all know as Nat “King” Cole.

Nat "King" Cole was a great American vocalist and entertainer, and the best selling African-American recording artist of his generation.

Born in 1919 in Montgomery, AL, Mr. Cole proved, at an early age, to be quite musically adept. At the age of four, he gave his first public performance playing the piano and singing at Chicago's Regal Theater.

In 1937, as a struggling young musician, he moved to Southern California.

While in Los Angeles, Mr. Cole was asked to put together a small musical group which was to play at the Sewanee Inn, a Los Angeles nightclub.

The owner of the Sewanee Inn is responsible for the nickname "King Cole" because he asked him to wear a golden paper crown. Though the crown was short lived, the nickname stuck and the musical group became known as the King Cole Trio.

In 1943, the King Cole Trio signed with a fledgling record company known as Capitol Records. The next year, Capitol Records released a song written by Nat "King" Cole and recorded by the King Cole Trio called "Straighten Up and Fly Right."

The song became a huge hit due to its popularity with audiences of different races. The King Cole Trio went on to have a series of musical hits that include "For Sentimental Reasons" and "The Christmas Song."

Nat "King" Cole went on to sell so many records that Capitol Records' headquarters became known as the "House that Nat built."

Nat "King" Cole's legacy not only encompasses his musical genius, but also his bravery in overcoming racial intolerance. During his career, he played in some clubs where he was the first ever Black entertainer to perform. He also endured an attack from white supremacists while on stage in Birmingham, Alabama in 1956.

Mr. Cole holds a special place in the hearts of Los Angeles residents, as a man who brought down racial barriers. In 1948, Mr. Cole and his family purchased a home in the exclusive Hancock Park section of Los Angeles. His would-be neighbors formed an association to prevent him from moving into the all-white community.

Overcoming these protests and threats, Mr. Cole moved in and became the first family to integrate the community.

In honor of this distinguished former resident, members of the community surrounding the Oakwood Station Post Office, have advocated that the post office at 265 South Western Avenue in Los Angeles be named after Nat "King" Cole.

It is my pleasure to introduce such legislation, and I hope that my colleagues will support it.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself and Mrs. BOXER):

S. 2931. A bill to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 5805 White Oak Avenue in Encino, California, as the "Francis Dayle 'Chick' Hearn Post Office", to the Committee on Government Affairs.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today, along with Senator BOXER, to introduce legislation that would name a postal facility in Los Angeles, California after the great Los Angeles Lakers' announcer, Francis Dayle "Chick" Hearn.

Chick Hearn was born on November 27, 1916, in Buda, IL.

His interest in broadcasting began when he worked for the Armed Forces Radio, while he was stationed in the Philippines during World War II.

Soon after he was discharged, he began announcing Bradley University basketball games for a radio station in Peoria, IL.

Mr. Hearn's desire to work in radio broadcasting soon led him to Southern California, where he worked for CBS radio announcing University of Southern California football games.

Then, in 1961, Chick Hearn began announcing Lakers' game when the franchise moved from Minnesota to Los Angeles.

His contributions to the game go far beyond giving the fans the play-by-play. Mr. Hearn pioneered basketball phrases, such as "airball" and "slam dunk" and "finger role" which are now well known and often used by Americans who participate or have an interest in basketball.

Perhaps the most distinguished characteristic of Chick Hearn's career is his extraordinary dedication to his work. Beginning on November 21, 1965, Mr. Hearn announced a record 3,338 consecutive games for the Los Angeles Lakers.

This streak ended on December 16, 2001, three days before Mr. Hearn underwent heart surgery. Until his death on August 5, 2002, Hearn had been the only play-by-play announcer the Los Angeles Lakers had ever had.

During his distinguished career of more than 40 years with the Los Angeles Lakers, Mr. Hearn saw the Lakers capture nine NBA titles.

He had the opportunity to watch the careers of basketball stars such as Jerry West, Wilt Chamberlain, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Magic Johnson, and he spread his love of basketball to all who listened.

He is a member of the Basketball Hall of Fame and the Sportcasters Hall of Fame.

In honor of Chick Hearn's dedicated service, it is my pleasure to introduce legislation to name the post office at 5805 White Oak Avenue in Encino, CA.

It is my hope that the Senate will approve this legislation, and honor the memory of Chick Hearn.

By Mr. GREGG (for himself, Mr. ENZI, Ms. COLLINS, and Mr. COCHRAN):

S. 2932. A bill to make technical amendments to the Higher Education Act of 1965, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, today I am proud to introduce, along with my colleagues Senator ENZI, Senator COLLINS, and Senator COCHRAN, the Higher Education Technical Amendments of 2002. This legislation makes several technical and non-controversial changes to the Higher Education Act, HEA, and is designed to provide relief from burdensome legal requirements, improve the financial aid process, and bring greater clarity to the law.

Most importantly, it provides for a one-year extension of two provisions in the HEA that are of great importance to students, their families, and schools. These provide schools having low student loan default rates with exemptions from the requirement that loan proceeds be disbursed in multiple installments, and the requirement that the disbursement of loan proceeds to first-time undergraduate borrowers be delayed for 30 days after classes start. Under current law, these provisions are set to expire at the end of this month.

Thousands of institutions of higher education across America count on these exemptions to save them time and money in the disbursement of their limited financial aid resources. These provisions also serve as an incentive for schools to keep their default rates low. Additionally, failing to act now means that students needing loan proceeds for books or living expenses could be seriously disadvantaged. At a time when both student and institutional budgets are being squeezed, we should do what we can to provide them with relief.

The bill makes a number of other beneficial changes to the HEA. Most notably, it: Helps protect home-schooled students by making it clear that institutions of higher education will not lose their institutional eligibility for Federal financial aid by admitting home-schooled students. Clarifies the Federal policy on the return of financial aid funds when students withdraw, to better protect students' grant aid. Removes barriers to students seeking forbearance from lenders on student loan payments, by eliminating the requirement that new agreements between lenders and borrowers be in writing. Instead, the bill allows a lender to accept a request for forbearance over the telephone, as long as a confirmation notice of the agreement reached is provided to the borrower and the borrower's file is updated. Makes clear that under the Thurgood Marshall Legal Educational Opportunity Program, the U.S. Department of Education can provide scholarship aid to low-income and minority students to prepare for and attend law school. Eases requirements for Hispanic-Serving Institutions, HSIs, by allowing them to apply for Federal HSI grants without waiting two years between applications. Corrects a drafting error in current law that mistakenly bars students attending certain nonprofit schools of veterinary medicine from eligibility for the Federal Family Education Loan Program. Allows financial aid administrators to use "professional judgment" to adjust a student's financial need in cases where the student is a ward of the court. Expands the use of technology to provide voter registration material directly to students in a timely manner.

I am well aware that extending the two provisions set to expire on September 30 for another year will cost $10 million. However, we intend to find the necessary offsets to pay for these extensions as the bill progresses through the Senate. It is my sincere hope that we can all work together in these final weeks of the session to see that this legislation becomes law.

The Higher Education Technical Amendments of 2002 will improve the financial aid process for everyone involved, but most importantly, for our nation's postsecondary students. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

SENATE RESOLUTION 253—RESOLUTION DESIGNATING THE MONTH OF SEPTEMBER 2002 AS "NATIONAL PROSTATE CANCER AWARENESS MONTH"

Mr. SESSIONS (for himself, Mr. REID, Mr. CRAPO, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. HAGEL, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. SHELBY, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. HELMS, Ms. CANTWELL, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. MILLER, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. INOUE, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. CORZINE, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. KERRY, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. ENSIGN, Mr. KENNEDY, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. THURMOND, and Mrs. CARNAHAN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas over 1,000,000 American families live with prostate cancer;

Whereas 1 American man in 6 will be diagnosed with prostate cancer in his lifetime;

Whereas over the past decade prostate cancer has been the most commonly diagnosed nonskin cancer and the second most common cancer killer of American men;

Whereas 189,000 American men will be diagnosed with prostate cancer and 30,200 American men will die of prostate cancer in 2002, according to American Cancer Society estimates;

Whereas fully ¼ of new cases of prostate cancer occur in men during their prime working years;

Whereas African-Americans have the highest incidence and mortality rates of prostate cancer in the world;

Whereas screening by both digit rectal examination and prostate-specific antigen blood test (PSA) can diagnose the disease in earlier and more treatable stages and has reduced prostate cancer mortality;

Whereas the research pipeline promises further improvements in prostate cancer prevention, early detection, and treatments; and

Whereas educating Americans, including health care providers, about prostate cancer and early detection strategies is crucial to saving the lives of men and preserving and protecting our families: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates the month of September 2002 as "National Prostate Cancer Awareness Month";

(2) declares that the Federal Government has a responsibility—

(A) to raise awareness about the importance of screening methods and treatment of prostate cancer;

(B) to increase research funding that is commensurate with the burden of the disease so that the causes of, and improved methods for screening, treating, and curing prostate cancer may be discovered; and

(C) to continue to consider ways for improving access to, and the quality of, health care services for detecting and treating prostate cancer; and

(3) requests the President to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States, interested groups, and affected persons to promote awareness of prostate cancer, to take an active role in the fight to end the devastating effects of prostate cancer on individuals, their families, and the economy, and to observe the month of September 2002 with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I rise today to submit, along with Senator REID and 36 of our colleagues from both sides of the aisle, a resolution to designate September 2002 as National Prostate Cancer Awareness Month. As a prostate cancer survivor myself, I understand the importance of public awareness and early detection, and I hope that by designating this month as National Prostate Cancer Awareness Month, we can help save lives.

Since the tragic events on September 11, 2001, Americans have continued to honor their heroes of that day with respect, gratitude and, too often, the memory of lives lost. The "first responders" protected our safety and well-being, not only in New York and Washington, but also in cities and towns across the country, where police, fire, emergency service, National Guard and the military have been laden with banners and bouquets of thanks, recognition and remembrance. September is also "Prostate Cancer Awareness Month", PCAM, a time to remember those who have perished from the disease and to celebrate those who are surviving, and a time to work together to accelerate a cure. Along with The National Prostate Cancer Coalition, NPCC, I look forward to raising awareness in September with commemorations of "911" joining the NPCC's special campaign, "Protecting Our Protectors" which encourages men in law enforcement, fire service, and current and former servicemen to get screened for prostate cancer.

This resolution is an effort to help increase awareness and educate American men and their families about prostate cancer and early detection, as well as emphasize the need for more prostate cancer research. It will designate September 2002 as National Prostate Cancer Awareness Month. Together, Senator REID and I ask for your support and encourage all of our colleagues to join us in raising awareness. With your help, prostate cancer can be preventable, controllable, and curable.

Today prostate cancer remains the most commonly diagnosed nonskin cancer in America. According to estimates by the American Cancer Society and the National Cancer Institute, NCI, more than 189,000 American men will learn that they have the disease during 2002. Nearly 30,000 American men will lose their lives to prostate cancer this year, making it the second most common cause of cancer death among men. These statistics translate into devastating realities for men and families across this country.

This disease will affect one in six men in the United States during his lifetime. More than 25 percent of those battling this disease are under the age of 65, prime years of productivity for families and for this nation. The number of Americans impacted by cancer, and prostate cancer, is also expected to grow. If unchecked during the next decade, cancer incidence and mortality rates could increase by 25 percent-30 percent. In too many cases, prostate cancer remains undetected until advanced stages of the disease, when conventional therapies no longer work. This makes it critical that all American families understand the risks of prostate cancer and take measures to ensure early detection.

If a man has one close relative with prostate cancer, his risk of the disease is double that of the average male. With two close relatives, his risk is fivefold. Should he have three close relatives with prostate cancer, his likelihood of a prostate cancer diagnosis is nearly 97 percent.

African American families are at particular risk. African American men have the highest incidence and mortality rates in the world. According to the National Prostate Cancer Coalition, we must raise public awareness about the impact of prostate cancer and emphasize early detection with the PSA, prostate specific antigen, blood test and DRE, digital rectal examination. Over the last five years prostate cancer mortalities have decreased by 27 percent. This shows that, with the right investment in education and research, we are already saving lives.

SENATE RESOLUTION 326—DESIGNATING OCTOBER 18, 2002, AS “NATIONAL MAMMOGRAPHY DAY”

Mr. BIDEN (for himself, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. BUNNING, Ms. CANTWELL, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. CARPER, Mr. CLELAND, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. DODD, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. HATCH, Mr. HELMS, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. INOUE, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KERRY, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. LUGAR, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MILLER, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. NELSON of Nebraska, Mr. REID, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. SPECTER, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mr. WYDEN, and Mrs. CLINTON) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas according to the American Cancer Society, in 2002, 203,500 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer and 39,600 women will die from this disease;

Whereas it is estimated that about 2,000,000 women were diagnosed with breast cancer in the 1990s, and that in nearly 500,000 of those cases, the cancer resulted in death;

Whereas the risk of breast cancer increases with age, with a woman at age 70 years having twice as much of a chance of developing the disease as a woman at age 50 years;

Whereas at least 80 percent of the women who get breast cancer have no family history of the disease;

Whereas mammograms, when operated professionally at a certified facility, can provide safe screening and early detection of breast cancer in many women;

Whereas mammography is an excellent method for early detection of localized breast cancer, which has a 5-year survival rate of more than 97 percent;

Whereas the National Cancer Institute and the American Cancer Society continue to recommend periodic mammograms; and

Whereas the National Breast Cancer Coalition recommends that each woman and her health care provider make an individual decision about mammography: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates October 18, 2002, as “National Mammography Day”; and

(2) requests that the President issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate programs and activities.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today I am submitting a resolution designating October 18, 2002, as “National Mammography Day”. I am pleased that 54 of my colleagues have endorsed this proposal by agreeing to be original cosponsors. I might note that I have introduced a similar resolution each year since 1993, and on each occasion the Senate has shown its support for the fight against breast cancer by approving the resolution.

Each year, as I prepare to submit this resolution, I review the latest information from the American Cancer Society about breast cancer. For the year 2002, it is estimated that over 203,000 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer and slightly fewer than 40,000 women will die of this disease.

In past years, I have often commented on how gloomy these statistics were. But as I review how these numbers are changing over time, I have come to the realization that it is really more appropriate to be optimistic. The number of deaths from breast cancer is falling from year to year. Early detection of breast cancer continues to result in extremely favorable outcomes: 97 percent of women with localized breast cancer will survive 5 years or longer. New digital techniques make the process of mammography much more rapid and precise than before. Government programs will provide free mammograms to those who can't afford them, as well as Medicaid eligibility for treatment if breast cancer is diagnosed. Information about treatment of breast cancer with surgery, chemotherapy, and radiation therapy has exploded, reflecting enormous research advances in this disease. So I am feeling quite positive about our battle against breast cancer. A diagnosis of breast cancer is not a death sentence, and I encounter long-term survivors of breast cancer nearly daily.

In recent months, the newspapers have been filled with discussion over whether the scientific evidence actually supports the conclusion that periodic screening mammography saves lives. It seems that much of this controversy relates to new interpretations of old studies, and the relatively few recent studies of this matter have not clarified this issue. Most sources seem to agree that all of the existing scientific studies have some weaknesses, but it is far from clear whether the very large and truly unambiguous study needed to settle this matter definitively can ever be done.

So what is a woman to do? I do not claim any expertise in this highly technical area, so I rely on the experts. The American Cancer Society, the National Cancer Institute, and the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force all continue to recommend periodic screening mammography, and I endorse the statements of these distinguished bodies.

On the other hand, I recognize that some women who examine these research studies are unconvinced of the need for periodic screening mammography. However, even those scientists who do not support periodic mammography for all women believe that it is appropriate for some groups of women with particular risk factors. In agreement with these experts, I encourage all women who have doubts about the usefulness of screening mammography in general to discuss with their individual physicians whether this test is appropriate in their specific situations.

So my message to women is: have a periodic mammogram, or at the very least discuss this option with your own physician.

I know that some women don't have annual mammograms because of either fear or forgetfulness. It is only human nature for some women to avoid mammograms because they are afraid of what they will find. To those who are fearful, I would say that if you have periodic routine mammograms, and the latest one comes out positive, even before you have any symptoms or have found a lump on self-examination, you have reason to be optimistic, not pessimistic. Such early-detected breast cancers are highly treatable.

Then there is forgetfulness. I certainly understand how difficult it is to remember to do something that only comes around once each year. I would suggest that this is where “National Mammography Day” comes in. On that day, let's make sure that each woman we know picks a specific date on which to get a mammogram each year, a date that she won't forget: a child's birthday, an anniversary, perhaps even the day her taxes are due. On National Mammography Day, let's ask our loved ones: pick one of these dates, fix it in your mind along with a picture of your child, your wedding, or another symbol of that date, and promise yourself to get a mammogram on that date every year. Do it for yourself and for the others that love you and want you to be part of their lives for as long as possible.

And to those women who are reluctant to have a mammogram, I say let National Mammography Day serve as a reminder to discuss this question each year with your physician. New scientific studies that are published and new mammography techniques that are developed may affect your decision on this matter from one year to the next. I encourage you to keep an open mind and not to feel that a decision at one point in time commits you irrevocably to a particular course of action for the indefinite future.

I urge my colleagues to join me in the ongoing fight against breast cancer by cosponsoring and voting for this resolution to designate October 18, 2002, as National Mammography Day.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED AND PROPOSED

SA 4532. Mr. BYRD (for himself and Mr. STEVENS) proposed an amendment to amendment SA 4472 proposed by Mr. BYRD to the bill H.R. 5093, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes.

“(h) The Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation may, in the performance of the Director's duties as the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and subject to the direction of the President, attend and participate in meetings of the National Security Council.”

SA 4534. Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself and Mr. GRAHAM) proposed an amendment to amendment SA 4513 proposed by Mr. THOMPSON (for himself and Mr. WARNER) to the amendment SA 4471 proposed by Mr. LIEBERMAN to the bill H.R. 5005, to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 2, line 4, insert after the period the following:

TITLE II—NATIONAL OFFICE FOR COMBATING TERRORISM

SEC. 201. NATIONAL OFFICE FOR COMBATING TERRORISM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established within the Executive Office of the President the National Office for Combating Terrorism.

(b) OFFICERS.—

(1) DIRECTOR.—The head of the Office shall be the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism, who shall be appointed by the President.

(2) EXECUTIVE SCHEDULE LEVEL I POSITION.—Section 5312 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: “Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism.”.

(3) OTHER OFFICERS.—The President shall assign to the Office such other officers as the President, in consultation with the Director, considers appropriate to discharge the responsibilities of the Office.

(c) RESPONSIBILITIES.—Subject to the direction and control of the President, the responsibilities of the Office shall include the following:

(1) To develop national objectives and policies for combating terrorism.

(2) To ensure that relevant agencies and entities conduct appropriate risk analysis and risk management activities and provide pertinent information derived such activities to the Office, and to review and integrate such information into the development of the Strategy.

(3) To develop, with the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Strategy under title III.

(4) To coordinate, oversee, and evaluate the implementation and execution of the Strategy by agencies with responsibilities for combating terrorism under the Strategy, particularly those involving military, intelligence, law enforcement, diplomatic, and scientific and technological assets.

(5) To work with agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, to ensure that appropriate actions are taken to address vulnerabilities identified by the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure Protection within the Department.

(6)(A) To coordinate, with the advice of the Secretary, the development of a comprehensive annual budget for the programs and activities under the Strategy, including the budgets of the military departments and agencies within the National Foreign Intelligence Program relating to international terrorism, but excluding military programs, projects, or activities relating to force protection.

(B) To have the lead responsibility for budget recommendations relating to military, intelligence, law enforcement, and diplomatic assets in support of the Strategy.

(7) To serve as an advisor to the National Security Council.

(8) To work with the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to ensure that—

(A) the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism receives the relevant information from the Federal Bureau of Investigation related to terrorism; and

(B) such information is made available to the appropriate agencies and to State and local law enforcement officials.

(d) RESOURCES.—In consultation with the Director, the President shall assign or allocate to the Office such resources, including funds, personnel, and other resources, as the President considers appropriate and that are available to the President under appropriations Acts for fiscal year 2002 and fiscal year 2003 in the “Office of Administration” appropriations account or the “Office of Homeland Security” appropriations account. Any transfer or reprogramming of funds made under this section shall be subject to the reprogramming procedures in the Treasury and General Government Appropriations Act, 2002 (Public Law 107-67).

SEC. 202. DIRECTOR AND OFFICE.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the following shall apply for purposes of this division:

(1) DIRECTOR.—The term “Director” means the Director of the National Office for Combating Terrorism.

(2) OFFICE.—The term “Office” means the National Office for Combating Terrorism established under this title.

(b) DIRECTOR.—The Director shall—

(1) develop the strategy with the Secretary under section 102(b)(3); and

(2) carry out the functions under section 192(d)(1) and (2) with the Secretary.

(c) OFFICE.—

(1) RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT AGENDA.—The Under Secretary for Science and Technology shall coordinate with the Office, the OSTP, and other appropriate entities under section 135(c)(2)(A).

(2) TRANSFERS.—Section 189(a) shall apply with respect to transfers to the Office.

(3) GIFTS.—Section 189(f) shall apply with respect to gifts to the Office.

(4) DEFINITIONS.—The definitions developed under section 192(d)(1) shall be considered in determining the mission of the Office.

(5) OFFICE OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY POLICY.—Section 208(a)(1) of the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act (42 U.S.C. 6617(a)(1)) is amended by inserting “the National Office for Combating Terrorism,” after “National Security Council.”.

TITLE III—NATIONAL STRATEGY FOR COMBATING TERRORISM AND THE HOMELAND SECURITY RESPONSE

SEC. 301. STRATEGY.

(a) DEVELOPMENT.—The Secretary and the Director shall develop the National Strategy for Combating Terrorism and Homeland Security Response for detection, prevention, protection, response, and recovery to counter terrorist threats, including threat, vulnerability, and risk assessment and analysis, and the plans, policies, training, exercises, evaluation, and interagency cooperation that address each such action relating to such threats.

(b) RESPONSIBILITIES.—

(1) RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall have responsibility for portions of the Strategy addressing border security, critical infrastructure protection, emergency preparation and response, and integrating State and local efforts with activities of the Federal Government.

(2) RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE DIRECTOR.—The Director shall have overall responsibility for development of the Strategy, and particularly for those portions of the Strategy addressing intelligence, military assets, law enforcement, and diplomacy.

(c) CONTENTS.—The contents of the Strategy shall include—

(1) a comprehensive statement of mission, goals, objectives, desired end-state, priorities and responsibilities;

(2) policies and procedures to maximize the collection, translation, analysis, exploitation, and dissemination of information relating to combating terrorism and the homeland security response throughout the Federal Government and with State and local authorities;

(3) plans for countering chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear and explosives, and cyber threats;

(4) plans for integrating the capabilities and assets of the United States military into all aspects of the Strategy;

(5) plans for improving the resources of, coordination among, and effectiveness of health and medical sectors for detecting and responding to terrorist attacks on the homeland;

(6) specific measures to enhance cooperative efforts between the public and private sectors in protecting against terrorist attacks;

(7) a review of measures needed to enhance transportation security with respect to potential terrorist attacks;

(8) plans for identifying, prioritizing, and meeting research and development objectives to support homeland security needs; and

(9) other critical areas.

(d) COOPERATION.—At the request of the Secretary or Director, departments and agencies shall provide necessary information or planning documents relating to the Strategy.

(e) INTERAGENCY COUNCIL.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established the National Combating Terrorism and Homeland Security Response Council to assist with preparation and implementation of the Strategy.

(2) MEMBERSHIP.—The members of the Council shall be the heads of the Federal terrorism prevention and response agencies or their designees. The Secretary and Director shall designate such agencies.

(3) CO-CHAIRS AND MEETINGS.—The Secretary and Director shall co-chair the Council, which shall meet at their direction.

(f) SUBMISSION TO CONGRESS.—Not later than December 1, 2003, and each year thereafter in which a President is inaugurated, the Secretary and the Director shall submit the Strategy to Congress.

(g) UPDATING.—Not later than December 1, 2005, and on December 1, of every 2 years thereafter, the Secretary and the Director shall submit to Congress an updated version of the Strategy.

(h) PROGRESS REPORTS.—Not later than December 1, 2004, and on December 1, of each year thereafter, the Secretary and the Director may submit to Congress a report that—

(1) describes the progress on implementation of the Strategy; and

(2) provides recommendations for improvement of the Strategy and the implementation of the Strategy.

SEC. 302. MANAGEMENT GUIDANCE FOR STRATEGY IMPLEMENTATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In consultation with the Director and the Secretary, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall provide management guidance for agencies to successfully implement and execute the Strategy.

(b) OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the submission of the Strategy referred to under section 301, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall—

(1) submit to Congress a report describing agency progress under subsection (a); and

(2) provide a copy of the report to the Comptroller General of the United States.

(c) GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE REPORT.—Not later than 90 days after the receipt of the report required under subsection (b), the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit a report to the Governmental Affairs Committee of the Senate, the Government Reform Committee of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, evaluating—

(1) the management guidance identified under subsection (a); and

(2) Federal agency performance in implementing and executing the Strategy.

SEC. 303. NATIONAL COMBATING TERRORISM STRATEGY PANEL.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary and the Director shall establish a nonpartisan, independent panel to be known as the National Combating Terrorism Strategy Panel (in this section referred to as the “Panel”).

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—

(1) APPOINTMENT.—The Panel shall be composed of a chairperson and 8 other individuals appointed by the Secretary and the Director, in consultation with the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives, from among individuals in the private sector who are recognized experts in matters relating to combating terrorism and the homeland security of the United States.

(2) TERMS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—An individual shall be appointed to the Panel for an 18-month term.

(B) TERM PERIODS.—Terms on the Panel shall not be continuous. All terms shall be for the 18-month period which begins 12 months before each date a report is required to be submitted under subsection (1)(2)(A).

(C) MULTIPLE TERMS.—An individual may serve more than 1 term.

(c) DUTIES.—The Panel shall—

(1) conduct and submit to the Secretary the assessment of the Strategy; and

(2) conduct the independent, alternative assessment of homeland security measures required under this section.

(d) ALTERNATIVE ASSESSMENT.—The Panel shall submit to the Secretary an independent assessment of the optimal policies and programs to combat terrorism, including homeland security measures. As part of the assessment, the Panel shall, to the extent practicable, estimate the funding required by fiscal year to achieve these optimal approaches.

(e) INFORMATION FROM FEDERAL AGENCIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the Panel may secure directly from any agency such information as the Panel considers necessary to carry out this section. Upon request of the Chairperson, the head of such department or agency shall furnish such information to the Panel.

(2) INTELLIGENCE INFORMATION.—The provision of information under this paragraph related to intelligence shall be provided in accordance with procedures established by the Director of Central Intelligence and in accordance with section 103(d)(3) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 403-3(d)(3)).

(f) COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS.—Each member of the Panel shall be compensated at a rate equal to the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay prescribed for level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, for each day (including travel time) during which such member is engaged in the performance of the duties of the Panel.

(g) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—The members of the Panel shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized for employees of agencies under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Panel.

(h) STAFF.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Chairperson of the Panel may, without regard to the civil service laws and regulations, appoint and terminate an executive director and such other additional personnel as may be necessary to enable the Panel to perform its duties. The employment of an executive director shall be subject to confirmation by the Panel.

(2) COMPENSATION.—The Chairperson of the Panel may fix the compensation of the executive director and other personnel without regard to chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification of positions and General Schedule pay rates, except that the rate of pay for the executive director and other personnel may not exceed the rate payable for level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of such title.

(3) PERSONNEL AS FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The executive director and any personnel of the Panel who are employees shall be employees under section 2105 of title 5, United States Code, for purposes of chapters 63, 81, 83, 84, 85, 87, 89, and 90 of that title.

(B) MEMBERS OF PANEL.—Subparagraph (A) shall not be construed to apply to members of the Panel.

(4) REDUCTION OF STAFF.—During periods that members are not serving terms on the Panel, the executive director shall reduce the number and hours of employees to the minimum necessary to—

(A) provide effective continuity of the Panel; and

(B) minimize personnel costs of the Panel.

(i) DETAIL OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.—Any Federal Government employee may be detailed to the Panel without reimbursement, and such detail shall be without interruption or loss of civil service status or privilege.

(j) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—

(1) USE OF MAIL AND PRINTING.—The Panel may use the United States mails and obtain printing and binding services in the same manner and under the same conditions as other agencies.

(2) SUPPORT SERVICES.—The Secretary shall furnish the Panel any administrative and support services requested by the Panel.

(3) GIFTS.—The Panel may accept, use, and dispose of gifts or donations of services or property.

(k) PAYMENT OF PANEL EXPENSES.—The compensation, travel expenses, and per diem allowances of members and employees of the Panel shall be paid out of funds available to the Department for the payment of compensation, travel allowances, and per diem allowances, respectively, of civilian employees of the Department. The other expenses of the Panel shall be paid out of funds available to the Department for the payment of similar expenses incurred by the Department.

(1) REPORTS.—

(1) PRELIMINARY REPORT.—

(A) REPORT TO SECRETARY.—Not later than July 1, 2004, the Panel shall submit to the Secretary and the Director a preliminary report setting forth the activities and the findings and recommendations of the Panel under subsection (d), including any recommendations for legislation that the Panel considers appropriate.

(B) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 30 days after the submission of the report under subparagraph (A), the Secretary and the Director shall submit to the committees referred to under subsection (b), and the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives, a copy of that report with the comments of the Secretary on the report.

(2) QUADRENNIAL REPORTS.—

(A) REPORTS TO SECRETARY.—Not later than December 1, 2004, and not later than December 1 every 4 years thereafter, the Panel shall submit to the Secretary and the Director a report setting forth the activities and the findings and recommendations of the Panel under subsection (d), including any recommendations for legislation that the Panel considers appropriate.

(B) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 60 days after each report is submitted under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall submit to the committees referred to under subsection (b), and the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives, a copy of the report with the comments of the Secretary and the Director on the report.

SA 4535. Mr. THOMAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to amendment SA 4471 proposed by Mr. LIEBERMAN to the bill H.R. 5005, to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 166, between lines 6 and 7, insert the following:

SEC. 195A. USE OF COMMERCIAL GOODS AND SERVICES.

(a) POLICY.—It has been and continues to be the policy of the United States that, in the process of governing, the United States—

- (1) should not compete with its citizens; and

- (2) should rely on commercial sources to supply the goods and services needed by the United States Government.

(b) REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary of Homeland Security shall rely on commercial sources to supply the goods and services needed by the Department of Homeland Security.

(c) EXCEPTIONS.—Subsection (b) does not apply to the performance of the following functions:

- (1) A function that is inherently governmental in nature in that—

- (A) the performance of such function is so intimately related to the public interest that it must be performed only by United States Government personnel; and

- (B) the performance of such function by United States Government personnel does not compete with commercial enterprises in the private sector.

- (2) A function that, by law or in the interests of national security, must be performed by United States Government personnel.

(d) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAW.—The Secretary of Homeland Security shall administer this section in a manner that is consistent with the policies and laws that are generally applicable to procurements of goods and services by the United States Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill (S. 2513), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

DESIGNATING “YEAR OF THE BLUES”

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to Calendar No. 567, S. Res. 316.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:
A resolution (S. Res. 316) designating the year beginning February 1, 2002, as the “Year of the Blues.”

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution and the preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 316) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 316

Whereas blues music is the most influential form of American roots music, with its impact heard around the world in rock and roll, jazz, rhythm and blues, country, and even classical music;

Whereas the blues is a national historic treasure, which needs to be preserved, studied, and documented for future generations;

Whereas the blues is an important documentation of African-American culture in the twentieth century;

Whereas the various forms of the blues document twentieth-century American history during the Great Depression and in the areas of race relations, pop culture, and the migration of the United States from a rural, agricultural society to an urban, industrialized Nation;

Whereas the blues is the most celebrated form of American roots music, with hundreds of festivals held and millions of new or reissued blues albums released each year in the United States;

Whereas the blues and blues musicians from the United States, whether old or new, male or female, are recognized and revered worldwide as unique and important ambassadors of the United States and its music;

Whereas it is important to educate the young people of the United States to understand that the music that they listen to today has its roots and traditions in the blues;

Whereas there are many living legends of the blues in the United States who need to be recognized and to have their story captured and preserved for future generations; and

Whereas the year 2003 is the centennial anniversary of when W.C. Handy, a classically-trained musician, heard the blues for the first time, in a train station in Mississippi, thus enabling him to compose the first blues music to distribute throughout the United States, which led to him being named "Father of the Blues": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates the year beginning February 1, 2003, as the "Year of the Blues"; and

(2) requests that the President issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the "Year of the Blues" with appropriate ceremonies, activities, and educational programs.

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE UNITED STATES CONGRESSIONAL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of H. Con. Res. 183, and the Senate then proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 183) expressing the sense of Congress regarding the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society and its mission of promoting musical excellence throughout the educational system and encouraging people of all ages to commit to the love and expression of musical performance.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the resolution and its preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, and any statements regarding this matter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 183) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

DESIGNATING THE WEEK BEGINNING SEPTEMBER 15, 2002, AS "NATIONAL HISTORICALLY BLACK COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES WEEK"

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of S. Res. 305, and that the Senate now proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 305) designating the week beginning September 15, 2002, as "National Historically Black Colleges And Universities Week."

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and the preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, and any statement relating thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 305) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 305

Whereas there are 105 historically black colleges and universities in the United States;

Whereas black colleges and universities provide the quality education so essential to full participation in a complex, highly technological society;

Whereas black colleges and universities have a rich heritage and have played a prominent role in American history;

Whereas black colleges and universities have allowed many underprivileged students to attain their full potential through higher education; and

Whereas the achievements and goals of historically black colleges and universities are deserving of national recognition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION OF NATIONAL HISTORICALLY BLACK COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES WEEK.

The Senate—

(1) designates the week beginning September 15, 2002, as "National Historically Black Colleges and Universities Week"; and

CONGRATULATING THE NATIONAL FARMERS UNION FOR 100 YEARS OF SERVICE TO FAMILY FARMERS, RANCHERS, AND RURAL COMMUNITIES

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Agriculture Committee be discharged from further consideration of S. Res. 324, and the Senate now proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 324) congratulating the National Farmers Union for 100 years of service to family farmers, ranchers, and rural communities.

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and the preamble be agreed to en bloc, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table with no intervening action or debate, and any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 324) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 324

Whereas the National Farmers Union celebrates its centennial anniversary in 2002;

Whereas during its 100 years of service to rural America, the National Farmers Union has faithfully promoted the organization's mission of education, legislation, and cooperation as identified by its founders and proclaimed in its triangular symbol;

Whereas the National Farmers Union represents nearly 300,000 family farmer and rancher members across the United States;

Whereas the National Farmers Union epitomizes the spirit and energy of hundreds of thousands of family farmers, ranchers, rural advocates, and communities;

Whereas the National Farmers Union remains dedicated to protecting and enhancing the quality of life for rural America;

Whereas the National Farmers Union has been instrumental in the establishment and progress of the farmer-owned cooperative movement; and

Whereas the National Farmers Union strives to improve rural America through proactive support and proposals to enhance rural economic development, educational opportunities, resource conservation, market competition, domestic farm income, and international cooperation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate commends and congratulates the National Farmers Union for a century of dedicated service to the farmers, ranchers, and rural communities of the United States.

PROVIDING A TEMPORARY WAIVER UNDER THE CLEAN AIR ACT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.R. 3880, which has just been received from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3880) to provide a temporary waiver from certain transportation conformity requirements and metropolitan transportation planning requirements under the Clean Air Act and under other laws for certain areas in New York where the planning offices and resources have been destroyed by acts of terrorism, and for other purposes.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IN HONOR OF JOHNNY UNITAS

HON. BRIAN D. KERNS

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, March 12, 2002

Mr. KERNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to an individual who many consider to be the greatest quarterback of all time, Johnny Unitas.

The Johnny Unitas story is one that serves as an inspiration to us all.

Hailing from what once was called "low rent Pittsburgh," his rags to riches career began in 1955, when he was drafted in the 9th round, but then cut, by the Pittsburgh Steelers.

A year or so later, after playing semi-pro ball for $6 a game, Unitas signed a pro contract with the Baltimore Colts.

His career then skyrocketed, and he was a key player in the Colts 1958 championship victory over the Giants. That contest came to be known as the greatest game ever played.

Always known for his black high top shoes, Johnny U. passed for over 40,000 yards in his career, which was highlighted by throwing a touchdown in an N.F.L. record 47 consecutive games. This is a record that still stands and one that some say is unbreakable.

A few years ago, here in the Nation's Capitol, it was my honor to meet Mr. Unitas and shake his hand. I can tell you he was truly a gentleman.

As you may know, the Baltimore Colts eventually moved to my home State of Indiana.

In honor of Johnny Unitas, there are reports that current Colts quarterback Peyton Manning will be wearing black high tops this Sunday, when the Colts play the Miami Dolphins.

I think I speak for many when I say Johnny Unitas, #19 of the Baltimore Colts, was one of the toughest and greatest players to ever grace the football field.

Johnny Unitas embodied what it means to be an American. He chased the American Dream. Despite the odds . . . through hard work, determination and sheer guts, he became a champion N.F.L. quarterback.

On behalf of the millions of fans that admired your play on the field let me say thanks for all the great memories.

God bless you Johnny Unitas and may he watch over your family.

EDUCATION SAVINGS AND SCHOOL EXCELLENCE PERMANENCE ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. DENNIS MOORE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 2002

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my great concern with provisions of H.R. 5203.

Supporters of this legislation will tell you it shows their support for the education of our children. I believe that if Congress is serious about supporting elementary and secondary education, we should fully fund the provisions of the No Child Left Behind Act passed overwhelmingly last year. The President's budget not only fails to provide all the funding authorized for this legislation, it actually cuts funding for these programs by $90 million from the 2002 enacted level, to $22.1 billion for 2003. This is $4.2 billion below the $26.3 billion authorized for 2002.

Mr. Speaker, every member of the House has heard from their local school districts how the unfunded mandate of the special education law leaves them struggling to balance the books. I voted for the No Child Left Behind Act and I made a commitment to my local school districts that I would do everything in my power to ensure that this new law is fully funded.

Unfortunately, the bill before us today will divert funds from the commitments we made when passing the No Child Left Behind Act in favor of initiatives for which there is no strong consensus. For example, the Coverdell Savings Account provisions of this bill could divert scarce resources from our public school system, a system that serves over 90% of our nation's kids. These Education Savings Accounts (ESA) provide tax breaks, equivalent to vouchers, for private schools. ESA's drain funds from the treasury that could be used for other purposes—including full funding of the No Child Left Behind Act. Further, ESAs offer no real choice to low-income families, who do not have the funds to put aside for private school, or families with disabled kids, who can still be turned down by private schools.

Mr. Speaker, while I am concerned with the affect certain provisions of this bill will have on scarce public school funds, I do support several provisions in this bill. I have long supported efforts to expand the student loan interest deduction. This policy affirms my belief in the importance of higher education to our nation's future and my hope that the opportunities of college can be made more affordable to more individuals. I also support legislation that would help local communities with school construction and renovation needs. The average age of school buildings in my congressional district is 30 years, and 25% of my schools use portable classrooms. The need is great in both areas, and during my time in office I have actively worked to address these problems. It is regrettable that I was unable to support this bill due to the unfortunate legislative vehicle chosen and that it was brought to the floor by the majority in their zeal to vote yet again for school vouchers.

Finally, I am opposing this bill because it was brought to the floor under an unfair procedure that prevents the consideration of any amendments and even a motion to recommit. Perhaps if the majority had utilized the regular order of the committee process, members like me would have had an opportunity to have our concerns addressed and this legislation, stripped of its controversial elements, could have passed the House overwhelmingly.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JOHN A.F. WENDT

HON. SCOTT MCINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I take this opportunity to recognize the life and accomplishments of John A.F. Wendt, Jr., of Delta, Colorado, before this body of Congress. Mr. Wendt has just recently passed away and as his family mourns their loss, I would like to pay tribute to the extraordinary contributions he made to his community and to his country. Throughout his life, Mr. Wendt embodied the unrelenting principles of honor, character, and sincerity that we, as Americans, should always strive to emulate.

Mr. Wendt was a World War II and Korean War veteran who courageously served his country in the Army's elite 11th Airborne unit in the Pacific. His resolute character and principled demeanor won him the approval and respect of his fellow servicemen who viewed him as a dedicated soldier and a loyal comrade. In fact, Mr. Wendt's courage was so commendable that he was awarded the prestigious Silver Star, Bronze Star, and Purple Heart medals for his military service.

After graduating from University of Colorado in 1951, Mr. Wendt became a very successful and distinguished lawyer. He was a practicing attorney his entire life; he served as a judge and a district attorney and was on the Board of Directors of the Colorado Bar Association for many years. Mr. Wendt loved the law profession and the genuine interest and enthusiasm that he brought to his work won him the esteem and admiration of his colleagues.

Despite the pressures of a demanding career, Mr. Wendt found the time to make significant contributions within his community. Mr. Wendt was a committed member of the Pony Club, a horsemanship education program for children. Mr. Wendt served on the Board of the Pony Club but also took the time to participate directly with the children within the organization. Mr. Wendt was also a sportsman and founded the Roaring Fork Hounds Club, where he eagerly participated in the organization's events.

Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I recognize Mr. John A.F. Wendt before this body of Congress and this nation for the outstanding service and commitment he made to his country. My condolences go out to his brother Allan and his children John, Eric, Wendy, and Hilary. Mr. Wendt lived his life

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3009, TRADE PROMOTION AUTHORITY

HON. DENNIS MOORE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report for H.R. 3009, Trade Act of 2002, which provides for Trade Promotion Authority for the President, among other things.

Globalization is here to stay. With markets now linked globally by computers, satellite communications, and advanced transportation networks, international trade and investment will play an increasing role in American prosperity. We cannot, as a nation, afford to retreat from a proactive strategy of trade expansion that takes advantage of our position as the world's most prosperous and dynamic economy.

Trade liberalization is also an important tool towards developing responsible global relations. It is a tool, as the preamble of the GATT states, for "raising standards of living, ensuring full employment, developing the full use of the resources of the world and expanding the production and exchange of goods." Indeed, open markets are an important engine of economic growth, which can expand opportunities, raise living standards, and affect social change. Perhaps most importantly, however, trade liberalization provides our nation with an additional diplomatic tool and a forum within which our nation may deal with international disputes and/or coalition building. Trade's national security component cannot be understated.

Mr. Speaker, on December 6, 2001, I voted for TPA because I believe trade expansion is necessary to achieve continued economic growth and protect our vital national security interests. House approval of this legislation in December helped move the process forward on this legislation and made possible a stronger bill from the Senate and a conference report that contained many of the important provisions of the Senate bill.

The TPA conference report contained strong trade adjustment assistance (TAA) provisions that improved and expanded the current program. Indeed, the conference report nearly tripled the existing TAA program and set important new precedents regarding coverage for displaced workers and health care assistance for the unemployed. This bill will, for the first time, allow displaced workers to receive assistance in purchasing qualified group health plans and makes them eligible for a benefit to pay 65 percent of their health care costs. This bill also expands the universe of individuals eligible for assistance to include secondary workers and farmers. Finally, the bill doubles the amount to be used to retrain displaced workers in new and better paying jobs, while creating wage insurance for older employees.

With specific regard to trade, the conference report improves upon the House-passed version by requiring, for the first time, that labor and environment issues are "on par" with, or given the same consideration as, other trade-related issues. These labor and environment issues are fully enforceable through dispute resolution mechanisms under current law and the bill contains provisions to ensure that our U.S. trade laws are protected.

The conference report also fully addresses investor-state disputes, or so-called Chapter 11 issues not contained in the original House-passed bill. The legislation will (1) ensure that foreign investors in the U.S. are not accorded greater rights than U.S. investors; (2) establish standards for "fair and equitable treatment" consistent with U.S. legal principles and practice; (3) set up mechanisms to deter and eliminate frivolous claims; (4) provide for public input into the formulation of government positions in investor-state dispute settlements; and (5) create an appellate body to review these disputes.

Finally, this agreement will make the process of foreign trade agreements more efficient and diplomatic. Although the President will form our nation's official policy on trade, Congress will have considerable influence over the development of that policy through the creation of a new Congressional Oversight Committee. Ultimately, Congress will also have the authority to check the Administration's power by accepting or rejecting the policy.

TPA is critical for removing remaining trade barriers to exports of Kansas' good and services. Kansas exporters still face major trade barriers in sectors like civil aircraft and parts, agricultural equipment, industrial machinery and auto parts. With the United States on the sidelines, foreign competitors are forging ahead and pursuing their own market-opening agreements. Kansas' economy is export-dependent, with export sales of $1,879 for every state resident. More than 68,000 Kansas jobs depend on exports of manufactured goods. I believe that this agreement strikes a good balance to protect these export-dependent jobs, preserve our values with regard to labor and the environment, protect our trade laws, and provide unprecedented assistance for displaced workers to receive new, and better jobs.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO JESS J. CAMPBELL

HON. SCOTT MCINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness and respect that I recognize the life and passing of Mr. Jess J. Campbell of Orchard Mesa, Colorado. Mr. Campbell, a resident of Colorado for over a hundred years, witnessed the state's changes and transformations over the course of a century. His loss will be felt by many in his community and I am honored to tell his story before this body of Congress today.

Jess Campbell was born in Steamboat Springs on July 16, 1901. He grew up in the Montrose and Hotchkiss areas of Colorado and lived his entire life on the Western Slope. Mr. Campbell worked as a rancher, a miner, and in real estate and then in 1921, he began working for the Rio Grande Railroad and retired as an engineer after 52 years of service. Mr. Campbell was also a lifetime member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen and the Rio Grande Veterans.

Although Mr. Campbell had an interesting and eventful career, he was also a loving and devoted husband and father. Together, Mr. Campbell and his wife Blanche raised 10 children, 21 grandchildren, 30 great-grandchildren, and 6 great-great-grandchildren. During his free time, Mr. Campbell enjoyed gardening, woodworking, camping, and fishing and enjoyed spending time with friends and family at his cabin on Poncha Pass.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to recognize Mr. Jess J. Campbell before this House of Representatives and this nation for the wonderful contributions he has made to the State of Colorado. Mr. Campbell was a pioneer of the state and has left an indelible impression upon its history. As his friends and family gather to mourn their loss, there is solace in knowing that the legacy of Jess J. Campbell will continue into the future generations of this country.

HONORING THE 25TH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF BURKE CENTRE

HON. TOM DAVIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to honor the 25th Anniversary of Burke Centre, Virginia.

Burke Centre is located in the core of the 11th congressional district of Virginia. This planned residential community began its development in 1976 and has grown into a thriving community with over 5,800 residences in its five neighborhoods: the Commons, the Landings, the Oaks, the Ponds, and the Woods. These neighborhoods are impressive examples of a successful organized community, with each of the five represented by one trustee, and featuring a pool and community center.

The gem of Burke Centre is the Conservancy, consisting of 1,700 acres, including 350 acres of pristine open space area ideal for a wide range of active and passive recreational activities. Ponds, tennis courts, playing fields, swimming pools, and other amenities are maintained for the enjoyment of residents.

This planned neighborhood took into consideration the community needs of its residents during its development. An efficient and effective committee system ensures residents' voices are still heard today. Burke Centre has established itself as a community committed to conservancy with its abundance of nature parks and outdoor activities. The Election Board is responsible for maintaining this mission and overseeing the annual Conservancy Board and Cluster Committee elections.

In commemoration of its 25th anniversary, Burke Centre's Fall Festival, planned and organized dually by volunteers and staff, will be the community's chance to celebrate this landmark anniversary. Antique vendors, entertainment, games and arts and crafts will pay tribute to Burke Centre's beginnings.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, with all that Burke Centre has created and offered its residents since its development 25 years ago, we have great reason to celebrate today. Accordingly, I extend my warmest congratulations to a community that has been dedicated to providing the best possible residential and community environment to its citizens.

IN RECOGNITION OF EDITH LEDERBERG

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my good friend Edith Lederberg, a woman who has served with distinction at the Area Agency on Aging of Broward County for twenty-five years.

Born on October 26, 1929, Edith Lederberg is a native of Freeport, New York. There she attended Hofstra University and obtained a Baccalaureate degree in Spanish and a Master's degree in Education. While residing in New York, Ms. Lederberg held teaching positions in the Freeport and Linderhurst Public School Systems, and Wantagh Union Free School District. In 1975, she became a Public Relations Consultant for the Wantagh Union Free School District.

Moving to Broward County, Florida in 1977, Edith continued her public relations career when she became Director of Community Relations Advocacy as Community Coordinator for the Area Agency on Aging. In 1986, Ms. Lederberg was appointed Executive Director of the Area Agency on Aging of Broward County.

As Executive Director of the Area Agency of Broward County she performs as the Project Director under the guidance of the Area-wide Council on Aging; planning, coordinating, and directing the Area Agency on Aging Programs. She works with the State Department of Elder Affairs, as well as with public and private agencies at the local level. She sets policy for the Area Agencies administrative unit, advocates on behalf of senior concerns locally, statewide, and nationally, and raises financial resources to support programs for Older Americans residing in Broward County.

Throughout the years, Ms. Lederberg's remarkable service has been widely recognized. In 1995, Ms. Lederberg was appointed to serve as a Florida Delegate to the White House Conference on Aging. In 1996 and 1997, she served as President of the Florida Association of Area Agencies on Aging. Edith also is an active member of Broward's Coordinating Board for Transportation Disadvantaged and the Coordinating Council of Broward. Additionally she has been inducted into Broward Women's Hall of Fame and Broward Senior Hall of Fame. In 1999, she was selected as one of the Broward County Fair's First Ladies of Broward and was the designee for the Florida Department of Elder's Affairs' Incredible Partners Award. In 1997, she was appointed by Senator Bob Graham to serve on the Federal Judicial Nominating Commission, and I had the privilege of reappointing her in 2001.

For the past twenty-five years Edith has found her calling as an advocate for the elderly, not only in Broward County, but throughout the state and the country, and what an advocate she is. This 'Angel of the Aging', as she is often called, is knowledgeable, articulate, persuasive and stubborn when fighting for what she feels is right. Many in Florida have seen the poster of this petite woman sitting on a Harley with the caption: 'Fully Engaged in Positive Aging'. How appropriate, Edith Lederberg: mother, grandmother, poet, baker of cakes, and voice of the elderly.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to recognize Edith Lederberg today for all of her contributions, improving the quality of life for senior citizens of Broward County and for her 25 years of service to the Area Agency on Aging of Broward County.

IN PRAISE OF THOMAS O'SULLIVAN, DR. FRED EPSTEIN, AND DR. GEORGE JALLO

HON. PATRICK J. KENNEDY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I today offer my praise for the incredible strength, dedication and bravery of three individuals, Thomas O'Sullivan, Dr. Fred Epstein and Dr. George Jallo.

In the beginning of 1999, then five-year-old Thomas started to have difficulty walking and maintaining balance. His parents, Patrick and Andrienne O'Sullivan, obviously concerned, took Thomas to a doctor in Ireland. Thomas was diagnosed as having an inoperable brain tumor, and his parents immediately began searching for someone who could help him. They had heard of one Dr. Fred Epstein, who founded the Institute for Neurology and Neurosurgery at Beth Israel Medical Center in New York City. Dr. Epstein's team received and reviewed Thomas' medical records.

Through this connection, a doctor trained by Dr. Epstein, Dr. George Jallo, agreed to perform surgery on Thomas without cost. In April of 2002, Dr. Jallo successfully removed 70% of the tumor plaguing Thomas' health. I cannot overstate how much we owe Dr. Epstein and Dr. Jallo for their work, because without this surgery, Thomas would have lost the ability to walk or swallow, his condition would have worsened, and he would most likely not have been able to live a normal life.

While Thomas still faces a difficult road to recovery, thanks to Dr. Epstein, Dr. Jallo and to Thomas' own inner-strength, it is by no means an impossible one. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the determination and commitment that they have all demonstrated. It is truly a testament to the richness of the human spirit. I also wish Thomas good health and long life, and encourage those who are still working on Thomas' behalf to see that he reaches that goal. Your actions have made us all proud and should serve as a reminder to the American people of the good that is in all of us. Thank you.

TRIBUTE TO KANU-FM PUBLIC RADIO OF THE UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an important cultural organization that has played a vital role in my congressional district for the past 50 years.

Radio station KANU-FM began broadcasting on September 15, 1952, in Lawrence, Kansas, when Harry Truman was serving as President. During the coming weekend, they are celebrating their 50th anniversary on the air. I would like to take this opportunity to thank them for their service.

Since 1952, KANU has informed, enlightened, educated and amused the radio listeners of northeast Kansas; it is the flagship station of National Public Radio in our state and it is a cultural lifeline for Kansans and an example of public radio at its best.

At a time when radio programming is becoming more homogeneous, KANU continues to present classical music, jazz, opera, bluegrass and folk music. These genres have a wide audience, but listeners might not be able to hear them on the radio without the steadfast, continued support of KANU.

KANU is also a credit to its home institution, the University of Kansas, which has backed the institution from its beginning.

As a listener, supporter and occasional guest of KANU, I urge all Kansans, and indeed, all fans of good radio, to thank KANU for their 50 years of broadcasting and to wish them well for the next 50 years.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, on September 10 I was unavoidably absent and missed rollcall votes Nos. 378, 379, 380, 381, 382 and 383. If present I would have voted "yea."

PAYING TRIBUTE TO NICK PAPADAKIS

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I stand before you and this body of Congress today to honor a remarkable veteran of the United States Navy who recently passed away. Nick Papadakis of Pueblo, Colorado contributed selflessly to our nation and I thank him for his commitment to this country. As a Navy veteran who served in time of war, Nick is an example of what is best about our country: the passion and valor of its citizens.

In 1959, after service in the Navy, Nick received an honorable discharge and started a career with the Prudential Insurance Company, which lasted for twenty-eight years. He moved to Colorado in 1971 and immediately found his calling. Nick and his wife dearly missed the deli specialties of San Francisco and opened their own restaurant, "The Deli." The Deli was a success because aside from good food, Nick provided a personal atmosphere where customers could discuss sports, politics and the Pueblo Community. Nick's deli has been a vital part of the Pueblo community since it opened.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to join me today in celebrating the life of Nick Papadakis, who tragically lost his battle with cancer recently. Nick dutifully served our country and selflessly committed himself to the betterment of Pueblo. His legacy of love includes his wife, June; his two daughters, Michele and Alison; and their husbands; as well as three precious granddaughters who doted on their grandfather. Nick's remarkable spirit empowered all who knew him. I would like to express my deepest condolences to his friends and family as I pay tribute to the power of his life today before this body of Congress.

ALLEN SHUR: 2002 JOHNS LABOR LEADER OF THE YEAR

HON. BOB FILNER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to salute Allen Shur on receiving the 2002 Johns "Labor Leader of the Year" Award in recognition of his outstanding contributions to the working women and men of our community.

Allen was born in Los Angeles in May 1948. His father was a member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. Allen lost both of his parents at a young age. Overcoming his loss, he graduated from high school in Los Angeles County. Then he attended college in southern California and became active in the labor and political movements of the late 60s and early 70s.

Allen joined the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers in 1967. He graduated from the then four-year IBEW/NECA Inside Apprenticeship program in 1971. Allen distinguished himself by his political involvement, which caught the attention of IBEW's membership. He served on the Executive Board of Local 569 and as a Labor Trustee.

In 1995, the membership overwhelmingly elected him to the office of Business Manager, a position that he continues to hold. Allen has continued his support for organizing the electrical workers in San Diego and Imperial Counties, increasing Local 569's membership rolls each year. In addition, Allen has directed his staff to organize both workers and contractors, providing all workers in the electrical industry the union choice.

Allen serves as the District I Vice President of the California Federation of Labor (AFL-CIO), Executive Board Member of the San Diego Labor Council, Vice President of the San Diego County Building and Construction Trades Council, and Secretary of the AFL-CIO Building Corporations. He also volunteers his time with Christmas in April and other community organizations.

Allen Shur exemplifies the high values, standards, and principles of the late John S. Lyons. I offer my congratulations to him on his receipt of the 2002 "Labor Leader of the Year Award."

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CON-GRESS ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF TERRORIST ATTACKS LAUNCHED AGAINST THE
UNITED STATES ON SEPTEMBER
11, 2001

SPEECH OF

HON. DEBORAH PRYCE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the anniversary of the day our great nation was forever changed when terrorists attacked and killed thousands of Americans simply because they were American.

Today, first and foremost, our Nation pays respect to the victims and their families. We stand united and remind them that one year has passed and still, we will never forget September the 11th.

What happened to the United States on that infamous day brought out the best of the American spirit.

The enemies who struck us grossly miscalculated the strength and resolve of the American people.

They didn't know that our bonds of liberty, our bonds of freedom, and our bonds of democracy are stronger and run deeper than any individual, than any building, than any monument.

As President Bush said, "This country will define our times, not be defined by them. As long as the United States of America is determined and strong, this will not be an age of terror; this will be an age of liberty, here and across the world."

During this unprecedented time of great challenge, there will be no corner of the earth where the demons of September 11th will be safe from justice.

America will continue to fight for the security of our great nation, and for peace in the world.

We will never forget every firefighter, flight attendant, father and friend that died that infamous day. May God watch over their families and continue to bless America.

PITTSBURGH PIRATES ALL-STAR EMPLOYEES

HON. WILLIAM J. COYNE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call the House's attention to the recognition that the Pittsburgh Pirates have recently awarded a number of their employees for their outstanding work.

The Pittsburgh Pirates Baseball Club began playing its home games at PNC Park on Pittsburgh's North Shore during the 2001 baseball season. The new baseball park is an impressive facility, and it has been well regarded by the many fans and visitors who have attended games there.

An important part of the positive experience visitors take away from PNC Park consists of the service they are provided with by the more than 2,500 employees who work at the Park on each game day. These workers take visitors' tickets, staff the concession stands, keep the facility clean, and provide parking and security services. Their work does a great deal to make a visit to PNC Park such a rewarding experience.

As a way of rewarding and encouraging exemplary service, the Pittsburgh Pirates Baseball Club recognizes a number of "All-Star" employees each month. The All-Star employees for the month of August, 2002, were Bill Gray, DeMilles Jones, Keith Hall, Anna Eberhart, Chad Jordan, Tom Prendergast, Michelle Kimble, Phil Coyne, and Dan Felter. I would like to congratulate these individuals on their selection for recognition as exemplars of excellence on the job.

TRIBUTE TO RUDD MAGERS

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Rudd Mayer, a loving mother, tireless worker for the environment and passionate citizen of Boulder, Colorado, who tragically passed away on August 13, 2002.

Rudd spent most of her life raising a family, but in her late forties she became a member of the Boulder-based Land and Water Fund of the Rockies working primarily on energy efficiency and renewable energy issues. Her work was essential in getting Colorado's publicly owned energy utility to include wind power as part of its energy supply portfolio. The success of that program is direct proof that Rudd was on to something. She was instrumental in encouraging consumers to pay a little extra for "green energy" such as wind power. She was the main force behind the program to allow consumers the choice of acting on their beliefs of a cleaner environment by helping to implement and promote renewable energy options.

In addition to her important work, Rudd was someone who held friends and family close and instantly drew people in, constantly forming new friendships and acquaintances. Rudd's presence would light up any room and her enthusiastic personality contributed greatly to gatherings of groups and individuals.

Rudd was first, and foremost, a mother. When her kids were growing up, she was always there after school, and set a table for six without fail. Rudd was incredibly active, and exercising was a huge part of her life in Winnetka, Illinois. She was an accomplished tennis player, platform tennis player, rollerblader, hiker and skier. She also enjoyed golf, mountain biking, and swimming breast-stroke with her head out of the water wearing Ray Ban sunglasses and a floppy white hat.

Rudd knew she belonged in the west ever since her father took her on a train to Yellowstone when she was about ten years old. When she arrived in Boulder in the 90's it was like coming home. Once in Boulder she lived in a solar heated house in Sunshine canyon. Refusing to use electricity, she would wake up every morning and light a fire to heat the house. During the winter she would sleep in full ski wear.

Her first job in Boulder was at the Boulder Book Store. She grew to be a nationally recognized "green power" marketing expert at the Land and Water Fund of the Rockies. Shortly after her retirement, Rudd's energy program received a rare unsolicited grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

What we will remember in the end is more than her big smile, huge heart and sparkling eyes. She was truly an inspiration without bounds to our family and everyone who knew her.

Rudd had always believed in the river of life; she believed that all things had a purpose, and she would have said there was a reason this time for her to go.

Attached is a news story marking her passing. Those that had the pleasure of knowing and working with Rudd will miss her bright smile, her love of life and her passion for enhancing our quality of life.

BOULDER ACTIVIST RUDD MAYER DIES; ENVIRONMENTALISTS SAY WIND-POWER PRO-PONENT WILL BE MISSED

(By Katy Human)

Rudd Mayer, an energetic environmental advocate and the driving force behind Xcel Energy's successful wind-power program, died unexpectedly of heart failure Tuesday. She was 58. The tiny, husky-voiced woman commanded great respect in Boulder's environmental community.

"All day long, I've been getting e-mails from Rudd's colleagues about what a pioneer she was," said Susan Innis, green-power marketing director for the Land and Water Fund of the Rockies, an organization for which Mayer consulted.

Several years ago, a merger settlement forced Xcel, then Public Service Company of Colorado, to develop a wind-power program, Innis said, but she said WindSource would have been a quiet, sidelined program without Mayer's input.

Mayer and several colleagues developed a sophisticated marketing scheme for the wind program, which lets Xcel customers buy "green" power for slightly more than traditional electricity from coal-fired power plants. More than 23,000 households and businesses in Colorado are now signed up, according to Xcel figures.

Several organizations praised Mayer's work with awards, including the President's Council on Sustainable Development, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Center for Resource Solutions.

Mayer's former colleague Kelley Green said her friend's greatest legacy is not WindSource but simply the attitude Mayer brought to her work.

"There are lots of people who do really amazing and wonderful things for the environment," Green said, "but there are few that do it with her spirit, her integrity, her commitment, her joy." Mayer was born Sept. 8, 1943, in Washington, D.C., to Dorothy and Rudyard K. Magers. She spent most of her childhood in Evanston, Ill., and graduated from Smith College with a bachelor's degree in art history.

She married Richard Mayer, her high school sweetheart, said Brooke Mayer Larson, a daughter. The two later divorced but remained friends.

Mayer lived in Boulder for about a decade, and the West suited her, Larson said. "She's such a passionate person. She loved the mountains, the land, the desert. . . ."

Mayer had some health problems as a result of childhood illness but was one of the most enthusiastic and energetic people around, said Claudia Putnam, also of the Land and Water Fund. On Tuesday morning, a friend of Mayer's drove her to Boulder Community Hospital because she was having trouble breathing, Putnam said.

Mayer is survived by four children—Larson, Alexandra Mayer Druker of Palo Alto, Calif., Taylor Mayer of Billings, Mont., and Campbell Mayer, who has been traveling around the world—and five grandchildren.

The Mayer family is planning a "memorial celebration" at 10:30 a.m. Monday on the lawn in front of the Chautauqua Park Dining Hall in Boulder. In lieu of flowers, the family has asked donations be sent to the Land and Water Fund to support wind power.

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. MASCARA. Mr. Speaker, on September 10, 2002, I was absent for personal reasons and missed rollcall votes numbered 378 through 383. For the record, had I been present I would have voted "yea" on all of these votes.

IN RECOGNITION OF STATE SENATOR DEBBY SANDERSON

HON. E. CLAY SHAW, JR.

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize my good friend, Florida Senator Debby Sanderson who has announced her retirement after 20 years of distinguished public service to the residents of Broward and Palm Beach counties.

In 1982, Senator Sanderson was the first female elected from Broward County to the Florida House of Representatives and served as the Freshman Minority Leader her first term. In 1988, Debby was appointed by the Democratic Speaker of the House to the House Health and Human Services Appropriations Committee. It was this committee assignment early in her career which led to her interest in social services and shaped much of her future work in the Florida legislature. She was chairwoman of the Human Services Appropriations in the House until her election to the Senate in 2000.

During her years of service in the House and Senate, Debby brought her low-key, principle driven agenda focusing on issues such as health care, children, education and a commitment to Florida's social services. Always accessible to her constituents, Debby traveled her district listening to the needs and concerns of officials and citizens alike. Although the Florida legislature is only in session for two months out of the year, for Debby it has been a full time job.

When Senator Debby Sanderson recently announced her retirement, the room was filled with admirers from the social services community all of whom have benefitted from her hard work and dedication: PACE, a program for troubled teenage girls; Joe DiMaggio Children's Hospital; Autism Society of Florida; Area Agency on Aging; Special Olympics, to name just a few. Also present were representatives of Florida Breast Cancer Research Coalition whose cause will benefit from passage of the special license plate legislation sponsored by Senator Debby Sanderson.

Mr. Speaker, Senator Debby Sanderson has decided to retire from public life; however I am certain she will remain an active participant in her community, state, and country. During her 20 years of service, Debby and I have shared constituents and lived within each other's district. She represented me in Tallahassee with honor and dignity and I am honored to represent her here in Washington.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF JAMES L. CHARLES

HON. ROB PORTMAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in remembrance of James L. Charles, a dear friend, constituent, community leader, and public servant who passed away on September 1, 2002.

Jim was born in Adams County, Ohio on August 21, 1922. He lived a full life, having proudly served his local community and nation. Early on, he served in the U.S. Marines in World War II. Most recently he was a member of the Ohio Education Association, the National Education Association, the Highland Chapter of Ohio Retired Teachers Association, the Brown County Shrine Club, Georgetown American Legion Post #180, Masonic Lodge #631 of Columbus, Scottish Rite Valley of Dayton, and the Syrian Temple of Cincinnati.

He earned a Bachelor of Education from the University of Dayton in 1953, and a Master of Education from Xavier University in 1967. For much of his life, his passion was helping others learn to read and further their education.

For a number of years, he owned and operated a restaurant in Dayton, Ohio, which established a co-op program so employees could get a college education. In addition, he served as the State Director of The National Right to Read Foundation and also as President of the Ohio Reading Reform Foundation. In the 1980's, he worked with the Ohio General Assembly on the issue of literacy, and he was the author of an Ohio State law, signed in 1989, which encourages the use of phonics to teach reading skills. Jim was a strong believer in the benefits of phonics, and through his personal efforts, he not only made a huge difference in the progress of phonics, but also in the reading skills of thousands of Ohioans.

Mr. Speaker, Jim Charles made a difference in the lives of others. His service to our country and to Southwestern Ohio are to be commended and remembered well. All of us in Southwestern Ohio offer condolences to his wife, Dr. Doris Charles, and are thankful for Jim's many contributions to our community.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF MRS. WANDA FLOYD OF GOOSE CREEK, SOUTH CAROLINA

HON. HENRY E. BROWN, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of a great American and a close friend, Mrs. Wanda Floyd, of Goose Creek, South Carolina. Wanda was born on February 1, 1926 and died on September 5, 2002. She will be sorely missed by her family and host of friends.

Many politicians, including myself, owe much to the tireless work of this "Republican Woman". Wanda served in various roles throughout the county. She was the President of the Berkeley County Republican Woman's Club for many years and was a mainstay at the polls. In fact, she and her late husband, Bud Floyd, celebrated their 50th Wedding Anniversary working the polls at Goose Creek High School! Today, the county she loved, is much stronger, as is the Republican Party of the Low country. We were blessed to have known and worked alongside of this truly loved South Carolinian.

RECOGNIZING THE HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE AND TIMELINESS OF UNITED STATES-IRELAND BUSINESS SUMMIT

SPEECH OF

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 10, 2002

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, today I voice my full support for H. Res. 513. This Resolution is timely and presents an historic opportunity to recognize the long-standing and enduring relationship between Ireland and the United States of America. This Resolution serves as a reminder of the very strong bond that exists between our two peoples.

Our two governments have long recognized and supported a free, fair, market economy and the principles of open markets that are such an inherent part of our free enterprise systems. These same principles served to maintain and strengthen our democratic form of governments.

Ireland's democratic government and market economy were rewarded with external investment from the United States, Europe, and Asia that flowed into her teeming high technology economy.

Since September 11, 2001, when the United States was attacked, it has been forced to assume a new role as it has engaged in a new war on terrorism. This is a war, which, as so many of us have previously stated, is dependent upon the support we receive in the international community.

This resolution also serves to recognize the importance of friends and allies such as Ireland, that share our beliefs in strong market economies and the role such economies play in our current war against terrorism.

As one of America's great presidents, John F. Kennedy, said during a speech in Dublin in 1963, "We need men who can dream of things that never were." These words serve as a call to us to face a new challenge in our time.

Mr. Speaker, in recognizing our relationship with Ireland, I believe that the economic and political success of Ireland and the Irish people combined with a longstanding relationship with the U.S. will serve as a model for peace and increased economic growth in a peaceful Northern Ireland. Private sector innovation and leadership will help to resolve conflict and increase understanding between all parties in the region.

HONORING MR. ERIC MORELAND JONES

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and commend bravery and dedication demonstrated by my constituent, Mr. Jones who was a first responder at the attack on the Pentagon on September 11, 2001.

The memories of the horrific terrorist attacks will remain with us forever. Yet, through the pain and adversity of these tragedies, heroes were also born.

We witnessed the horrific attacks on the World Trade Centers in New York City, we learned of the terrible airline crash in the Pennsylvania countryside, and we witnessed what was once an unfathomed attack on our Nation's center of defense, the Pentagon.

I have known Mr. Jones' family for many years. In the footsteps of his parents, he carries on a legacy of commitment to humanity through public service. On September 11th, Eric was driving by the Pentagon when it was hit by American Airline flight #77. He immediately went to the Pentagon site and quickly began to aid in evacuating injured and dying personnel from the building; he carried and helped people to safety and medical triage. Eric remained at his volunteer post for more than 72 hours.

On July 15, 2002, Mr. Jones was one of two people to receive the Office of the Secretary of Defense Medal of Valor for his actions. As we commemorate the anniversary of the 9-11 attacks, we also pay tribute to thousands of first responders and volunteers like Mr. Jones who risked their own lives to ensure that others were saved.

I am deeply moved by Eric's heroism and want to extend my sincere appreciation to him. As we take time to reflect on the events of 9-11 on this anniversary day, we must also resolve and re-commit ourselves to peace and security.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 5367—TO NAME THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS OUTPATIENT CLINIC IN HORSHAM, PENNSYLVANIA, THE "VICTOR J. SARACINI DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS OUTPATIENT CLINIC"

HON. JOSEPH M. HOFFEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. HOFFEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the resolution that Representative GREENWOOD and I introduced yesterday, which will name the new Veterans clinic in Horsham, Pennsylvania after Victor J. Saracini, a distinguished veteran and victim of the attacks on September 11.

Victor J. Saracini served his country with great pride as an exemplary technical coordinator aboard S-3A fighterjets on the U.S.S. Saratoga. He served in the Naval Reserve at the Naval Air Station Joint Reserve Base, Willow Grove, Pennsylvania, until his honorable discharge as lieutenant in 1985. Victor Saracini was the recipient of the National Defense Service Medal, the Navy E Ribbon, and the Expert Marksmanship Ribbon.

On the morning of September 11, 2001, terrorists hijacked the Los Angeles-bound airplane that Captain Saracini was piloting, and reset course for the South Tower of the World Trade Center, killing everyone on board and murdering hundreds of other innocent civilians inside the building. These innocent victims, Mr. Saracini included, represent our nation's first casualties in this war on terror.

To honor the life of Victor Saracini, devoted aviator, distinguished veteran, and proud defender of America's freedom, is to honor all victims of September 11 and their families. I urge my colleagues to support this resolution, and I call on the House Veterans Affairs Committee to pass this resolution and bring it to the floor of the House of Representatives as soon as possible.

TRIBUTE TO BOB BRIGHAM

HON. JANE HARMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the distinguished career of a friend, Bob Brigham.

I met Bob during my first campaign for Congress and we have been friends ever since. Over the years, I have known Bob to be a savvy and affable man, who greatly cares about educating our children. In addition to his community work, Bob's most enduring accomplishment has been his 35 years as a teacher, coach, administrator, and mentor with the Manhattan Beach Unified School District.

Although Bob's most storied athletic accomplishments lies in being a star football player at Redondo Union High School and Fresno State, I know him best as someone who can keep up with me during Manhattan Beach's annual 10-k run.

In addition to his commitment to his students and to jogging, Bob has always found time to play an active role in his hometown of Manhattan Beach. He has participated in the Manhattan Beach Historical Society, the Centinela-Bay Human Relations Committee, PFLAG, the Beach Cities Symphony Association, and his congregation, the Manhattan Beach Community Church, where he has been a member since 1939.

On a personal note, from Day One, Bob has also been an invaluable member of Team Harman, volunteering in each of my campaigns. After stuffing envelopes and walking precincts together, I have come to trust Bob as another set of eyes and ears in the district, helping to keep me informed about the latest concerns of South Bay residents.

Mr. Speaker, Bob Brigham has been an asset to the South Bay for more than 60 years. And because of his devotion to Manhattan Beach and the South Bay, his retirement from the Manhattan Beach School District will not mean retiring from community involvement. And I know he will also find the time to stay fit, so he can keep up with me during our next race to the finish line.

Thank you, Bob, for your contributions and your friendship.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to salute Michael D'Antuano on receiving the 2002 Johns "Fellowship Award" in recognition of his outstanding contributions to the working women and men of our community.

Michael has over 25 years of construction industry experience and is recognized throughout the country for his skills in labor relations, collective bargaining and negotiations. He joined the Parson Corporation in 1975 as a labor advisor on the massive Alaska Pipeline program. Working with Arco and Sohio on their oil and gas modular fabrication and construction projects, Michael was assigned to construction sites throughout Washington, Oregon, California and Prudhoe Bay, Alaska. In the late 1970s, he was assigned to Parson's headquarters in Pasadena, California, and assumed the administration of labor relations activities throughout the United States on major company projects, emphasizing labor/management cooperation and safe working environments and conditions for craftsmen.

Michael was appointed the President of Parson Constructors, Inc. in April, 1994—the construction arm of The Parson Corporation. As President, he has been instrumental in establishing innovative approaches to labor/management relations. Parsons has negotiated and administered ground breaking Project Labor Agreements for major infrastructure and government programs throughout the country. Locally, the San Diego County Water Authority Emergency Storage Project is under construction with a project labor agreement negotiated and administered by Michael and his staff.

He is on the Board of Directors of the North American Contractors Association (NACA) and serves on numerous labor/management committees across the nation. He is also a trustee for the Laborers International Union Laborers-Employers Cooperation and Education Trust and a Southern California Regional Board Member of the American Cancer Society (ACS).

Michael D'Antuano exemplifies the high values, standards, and principles of the late John S. Lyons. I offer my congratulations to him on his receipt of the 2002 Johns "Fellowship Award."

DINGELL-LAHOOD STEEL LEGACY ACT PRESS CONFERENCE

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, for the thousands of steelworker retirees who have lost or are at risk of losing their pension and health care benefits, help is needed immediately.

The bill we have introduced, the Dingell-LaHood Steel Legacy Relief Act, will ensure that all retirees of all troubled steel companies—companies that have closed, companies that are bankrupt, companies that are being acquired—will have for themselves and their families health benefits equivalent to what's provided by Medicare, and a prescription drug benefit similar to the Blue Cross/Blue Shield program.

To do this, this bipartisan bill sets up a trust fund in the Treasury Department that taps steel import duty receipts, the assets of government-assumed retiree health care plans, and a portion of the profits made by healthy steel companies that benefit from this program.

We are saying that the United States will not stand by and watch while thousands and thousands of workers who helped build this country are left unable to take care of themselves and their families.

We are saying to all of our nation's retired steelworkers: We have not forgotten, and we will not let you down.

This bipartisan legislation is a critical step in our ongoing efforts to help the steel industry and steel workers.

We pushed a long time for the Administration to initiate a Section 201 steel investigation, and finally last year we got one.

We pushed the International Trade Commission to recognize the devastating effect of steel imports through a finding of injury, and we got it.

Many of us have spent countless hours trying to save steel companies in our districts that are on the brink. In my hometown of Cleveland, our entire community—steelworkers, local government, state government, businesses, churches, citizens—coalesced to keep LTV from shutting the doors on our steel mills forever. And we won—the mills remain, and a new owner will keep them running.

And now we are all stepping forward—the steelworkers, steel companies, Members of Congress—to ensure that men and women who have given 20, 30, even 40 years of their lives to the manufacture of steel are not left behind.

I want to tell all retired steelworkers—whom I meet all the time and who ask me how they are going to afford health insurance, how they are going to take care of their families—I want to tell all of you: We will not rest until this legislation is passed.

SUPPORT A DEMOCRACY AND OUR ALLY: TAIWAN DESERVES TO BE PART OF THE UNITED NATIONS

HON. DOUG OSE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, Taiwan is one of the few independent nations that has not been allowed to join the United Nations as a full member. And it looks like opposition to their bid is again forming among those who would keep Taiwan and its 23 million citizens from joining their rightful place among the community of nations.

Simply put, Taiwan's 23 million people deserve a voice and a seat in the United Nations. Taiwan's population is larger than those of two thirds of the U.N. member states. Over the last 50 years Taiwan is the world's 17th largest economy, with the 15th largest trading volume. Taiwan's economic performance has contributed greatly to world prosperity. At a time when the U.N. continues to ask the United States to contribute more money to its budget, why is it turning away a willing, dues-paying member?

Perhaps the best reason the United States should continue to support Taiwan and its bid for U.N. membership is shared values. Taiwan is a vibrant democracy and endorses the ideals of peace, human rights, and development. More importantly, Taiwan is able and willing to carry out all U.N. Charter obligations.

Some have argued that granting Taiwan membership in the U.N. would be unacceptable to the People's Republic of China. However, Taiwan has repeatedly stated its willingness to work with the Chinese mainland. Taiwan leaders have repeatedly appealed to PRC leaders for peaceful settlement of political disagreements between the two sides. In addition, Taiwan hopes that Taiwan and the PRC will work together to help maintain peace and stability in Asia and Pacific. The United Nations should encourage a dialogue between Taiwan and China—not ignore it. Granting Taiwan U.N. membership is a positive first step to permanent peace and stability in the Taiwan Strait.

Finally, it is worth noting that Taiwan's exclusion from the U.N. violates the U.N. principle of universality. Remember that the U.N.'s mission is to "reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small."

As President Bush addresses the U.N. on this very day, and talks about the threats facing the world and those nations truly fighting for peace, I urge him to remember our friend and ally who is not allowed to join him at the U.N.'s headquarters in New York. I urge him to remember Taiwan and to support them in their bid to join that great body of free nations.

TRIBUTE TO SISTER LORRAINE BIEBEL

HON. ROY BLUNT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to praise the work and amazing accomplishment of a Franciscan nun who has left a lasting mark on Springfield, Missouri. She has overcome adversity and criticism to win the respect of many of her peers by creating important social services that have helped the less fortunate people of Springfield, Missouri.

In 1983, Sister Lorraine Biebel took on the temporary assignment of opening a soup kitchen in Springfield. Since then, Sister Lorraine has remained at the helm of what has become known as the Kitchen Ministry. Today the ministry that Sister Lorraine started has a $3.5 million budget, nine buildings, a small army of volunteers and a reputation for helping anyone with a legitimate need.

Sister Lorraine has been a vigilant visionary and leader to meet the demands of those less fortunate. It has been a labor of love and faith. Biebel's holistic approach has seen the conversion of an old hotel into a 90-room shelter with three dormitories and transitional housing. The Family Nurturing Center offers childcare for infants and pre-schoolers, as well as after school programs. There are also counseling services, walk-in medical services, dental clinics, and mental health counseling. In addition, it offers referral services, job programs, outreach programs for at-risk youth, literacy and GED training. Sister Lorraine helped to create a free store for residents and a thrift store for the community that offers free household items, clothing, and food for those people trying to improve their family unit or get back on their feet.

In praise of the God she serves, Sister Lorraine's faith is what has driven her to these accomplishments. Sister Lorraine has been a tireless servant of God's compassion for the disadvantaged, the homeless, and the countless volunteers who have rallied to support the programs.

With the naming of her successor, Tobias Meeker, Sister Lorraine is retiring but her work will not end. She hopes to reactivate the Little Portion Retreat Center where she lives in Republic, Missouri. There she promises to continue to nurture the spiritual health of others in a less stressful environment.

Sister Lorraine Biebel and the Kitchen Ministry are a wonderful example of the substantial social changes faith based initiatives can bring to a community's less fortunate population. Working with the federal and state government, local charities, churches of many denominations, and generous donors, Sister Lorraine has molded a multifaceted ministry that provides shelter, clothing, health care, counseling, education, job skill training, and spiritual guidance. The Kitchen Ministries have professionally and cost-effectively provided these services and care in a manner in which the federal government could not. The ministry is the work of many caring people, led by a woman of great faith whose work has touched thousands of lives.

We wish Sister Lorraine good health and best wishes in her retirement.

H. CON. RES. 401, RECOGNIZING THE HEROISM AND COURAGE DISPLAYED BY AIRLINE FLIGHT ATTENDANTS EACH DAY

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Con. Res. 401, a resolution to recognize the heroism and courage displayed by airline flight attendants each day.

The anniversary of the September 11 terrorist hijackings and attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon is just two days away. All Americans remember and mourn the lives lost that tragic day.

The world has changed for all of us. Before that time, flight attendants and their families and loved ones lived and worked with the knowledge that rare instances of mechanical failure or hijackers could endanger their lives. But no one imagined the dreadful assault of September 11, when terrorists turned four airborne planes into missiles used to attack thousands of Americans.

That day, flight attendants again demonstrated their courage in the face of extreme danger. From all that we know of the final minutes on those flights, flight attendants worked to communicate with the ground, and in all likelihood helped prevent Flight 93, which crashed in rural Pennsylvania, from taking many more lives.

I would like to bring my colleagues' attention to the heroism of Betty Ong, a flight attendant on American Airlines Flight 11, whose family lives in my district of San Francisco. On September 11, Betty called the airline reservations center from the plane to sound the alarm and provide information about the terrorists who had taken over the plane. I am aware of the enormous pain and suffering her family has been experiencing and extend them my deepest sympathy. It is an honor to pay tribute to Betty and express my appreciation for her life and bravery in the face of enormous danger.

Now, even stepping onto an airplane is an act requiring willpower and courage for many Americans. Yet flight attendants do it every day. Flight attendants deserve our respect, cooperation, courtesy, and commendation for their hard work and courage their hard work. I urge my colleagues to vote for this resolution.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HONORING BONNIE ELOISE RUSH MILAM

HON. NICK LAMPSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of Bonnie Eloise Rush Milam. It is fitting that today we honor this great lady, a proud American who gave so much to her country and it's military by founding the Melody Maids.

Eloise Milam was born in a house on the bay shore of Anahuac, Texas. Her family wound it's way through Texas, to Oregon and then eventually settled in Beaumont. She began to take piano lessons at age five and loved playing and singing on local programs, eventually becoming a member of the chorus at Beaumont High School.

After graduation, she continued through college and after as a member of numerous music and drama organizations. She sang in church and community concerts and with the Beaumont Light Opera Company.

By 1942, Eloise Milam had a very large group of private voice students. She was frequently asked to arrange programs for community affairs. When asked to assist with a bond rally at the Jefferson Theater, she presented her students as a choral group. Because the newspaper insisted on having a name for the group, they quickly decided on the Melody Maids. A new career was born.

The Melody Maids traveled countless times from coast to coast, singing for conventions and programs of all sorts, but primarily for military installations and especially veteran's hospitals. They made four tours of Europe, several more to England, three to the Far East, seven to the Far North, four to the Caribbean, five to Mexico, seven to Hawaii and four to Bermuda, Iceland, and the Azores.

Many of the tours were financed by the girls themselves with money made from musicals, style shows, cake and pie sales and other benefits. Practically all the tours after 1956 were sponsored by the Entertainment Branch of the Dept. of Defense. They were the most frequently requested of all the performers who traveled with the Department of Defense's Professional Entertainment Branch. She led her group into numerous hospital wards all over the world where individual conversations with wounded, injured, or ill military personnel proved to be a bright spot for them and a personal privilege for group members.

Her influence has been felt by hundreds of Texas high-school and college-age Melody Maids and by thousands of military personnel around the world. Her talent and spirit represented by this group in their performances before civic organizations and in hospitals and military installations have brought significant goodwill to Texas.

Her leadership was characterized by a combination of kindness and emphasis on excellence. The standards she set for the group are many that we should set for ourselves today. Eloise stressed the value of service to our fellow human beings, the rewards of helping one another in group activities, and a respect for different cultures and religions.

Every August, women from all over the country head toward Beaumont. They come to spend a weekend reminiscing about their Melody Maid experiences, exchange family news, and mostly to be with Eloise and recognize her tireless work and passionate dedication to service and country.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honor to stand here tonight, representing such an amazing lady. Eloise Milam's commitment to her community and country is an inspiration to us all.

CONTINUING CRISIS IN FOSTER CARE

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, in 1980 Congress made a commitment to improve the lives of abused and neglected children. However, lack of federal oversight and accountability has undercut that commitment. In fact, in far too many instances we have had devastating results. Of the estimated 2000 children annually who die of abuse and neglect, more than 40 percent were already known to child welfare agencies.

In Milwaukee, 48 percent of families investigated for abuse had prior involvement with the child welfare system; in Washington, DC, 32 percent of such families had been previously reported to protected services; and in New York City, in 43 percent of families that had been the subject of an abuse/maltreatment complaint, children were abused or maltreated again while under city supervision.

These sobering statistics are made worse when you consider that this state-sanctioned abuse and neglect occurs despite federally mandated procedural safeguards, including individualized case planning, case management and case reviews.

Federal law requires that children have a safe environment consistent with their special needs. Yet year after year, many states have consistently failed to meet even the basic needs of foster care children. This continued failure raises serious questions about the adequacy of federal oversight of state child welfare programs, which the federal government largely funds.

In yet another tragic example of our failure to provide for and protect foster children, a 9-year-old boy died of an asthma attack six weeks after being placed in foster care. According to the following article in the Los Angeles Times, Los Angeles county officials admit that social workers failed to inform medical workers of the child's severe asthma.

[From The Los Angeles Times, July 31, 2002]
TEARFUL APOLOGY IN BOY'S DEATH; COUNTY: A $1-MILLION PAYOUT IS OKD. MOLINA, MOVED BY A MOTHER'S PLEA, VOWS ANSWERS IN FOSTER CARE CASE.

(By Garrett Therolf)

A mother's plea for a criminal investigation into the death of her son—whose life ended while he was in the Los Angeles County foster care system—Tuesday elicited a trembling and tearful apology from county Supervisor Gloria Molina, who pledged to demand answers from county officials about what happened.

Hours later, Molina and her colleagues approved a $1-million settlement in the lawsuit brought over the boy's death.

Molina's remarks and the board action followed an emotional appeal by the boy's mother.

Debra Reid, 44, entered the hearing room grim-faced, flanked by eight family members dressed in black. At her side was her son Debin, who was placed in foster care for 15 months in 1997. His older brother, Jonathan, was taken away at the same time. The children were taken from their mother after social workers concluded that she was unstable and not tending properly to their medical needs.

But Jonathan died six weeks after being placed in foster care, where social workers, by the county's admission, failed to inform medical workers of his severe asthma. Reid has been fighting the county in the courts ever since.

"This is five years in coming," Reid began. Racked with sobs, Reid recalled how she begged social workers to treat Jonathan's asthma. Social workers had dismissed Reid's account of the severity of the child's asthma, county officials acknowledged.

"They said my child was healthy," Reid told the board. "Well, that child now lies in an Inglewood cemetery."

None of the social workers has been disciplined in the case, county officials said. Reid begged supervisors to launch a criminal investigation, alleging that social workers had falsified reports to take the boy from her.

"We have sought true justice and we have not received it until someone sends this case for criminal investigation," Reid said. "All we have received is a payoff, and we're not satisfied with a payoff."

"Not one person from the county," Reid said, "has bothered to apologize."

Reid's appeal to the board is one of many that the supervisors have heard involving the foster care system.

Virtually every week, a parade of parents come before the supervisors, pleading for help in getting their children out of that system. Most weeks, they leave empty-handed, as supervisors insist that they cannot involve themselves in matters that are before the courts. The pleas often meet with indifference from county officials, who typically talk among themselves as parents address the supervisors.

Tuesday was different.

As Reid spoke, the hearing room went silent. Aides and department heads dabbed at tears. In an adjacent chamber where county administrators eat snacks and drink coffee, all movement ceased.

Supervisor Yvonne Brathwaite Burke asked Reid whether she was satisfied with the settlement. After conferring with her attorney, Reid said she was, but reiterated her call for justice.

Then Molina spoke, her voice trembling, her eyes watering.

She recalled how supervisors routinely rebuff requests for help in foster care cases, and how she had told a congresswoman pleading on Reid's behalf that she had to trust the courts to do the right thing.

"I don't know that my apology to you will help you at all," Molina said. "I can only say I apologize for not being more attentive."

Promising to personally pursue the issue, Molina said, "We've got to really take the gloves off on this thing, because this is a real battle. If that department [the Department of Children and Family Services] could not protect those children, then we should not be empowering that department to carry out this work."

Supervisor Mike Antonovich quickly added his apology. Supervisor Zev Yaroslavsky said the whole board apologized for what happened to Jonathan.

After the meeting, Reid said Molina's apology "meant a lot. She was sincere. That is the first sign of remorse I have seen in the county."

Reid said Tuesday's hearing and the conclusion of two civil cases filed over Jonathan's death and Debin's placement in foster care were gratifying milestones in her family's quest for justice.

The determination to press for further action on Jonathan's death has occupied Reid and her family for years, she said Tuesday. At each step of the way, nine family members have gathered to vote on strategic decisions about how to pursue the case, she said.

Along the way, the family has turned to one lawyer after another—seven in all.

"Every time a lawyer didn't believe in me or in this case we got rid of them," Reid said. "Jonathan is still very much a part of this family."

VICTORVILLE, CALIFORNIA CELEBRATES 40 YEARS OF CITYHOOD

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like today to congratulate the citizens and civic leaders of Victorville, California on the 40th anniversary of cityhood for the Mojave Desert community. The history of this rapidly growing city is a fascinating glimpse of the growth of the inland areas of California.

Like many of the towns of the Southwest, Victorville began its existence as a railroad stop. Around 1885, a station was established at the Mojave River crossing on what ultimately became the Santa Fe Railway's on its Mojave Desert. It was named for Jacob Nash Victor, a railroad construction superintendent who was a pioneer in the early development of the expansion of the railroad to the west. In 1901 the US Postal Service renamed the city to Victorville to eliminate a name duplication problem with Victor, Colorado.

When it was incorporated on Sept. 21, 1962, the city of Victorville had grown to just over 8,000 residences; by 1995 the city boasted a bustling population of 60,649 and had increased its size to 67.68 sq. miles, an increase of over 58 sq. miles. Rich soil and an abundance of water encouraged the development of the agricultural community. Large deposits of limestone and granite led to the cement manufacturing industry, which has emerged as the most important sector of commerce in the Victor Valley.

With the historic Route 66 running through Victorville and heading on up to Chicago, the town has always provided numerous activities for tourists, included a Route 66 museum and the San Bernardino County Fair. The city has become the commercial hub of the Victor Valley, which includes more than 300,000 people in a wide range of communities.

One of the most important national connections with Victorville began in 1941 with the construction of the Victorville Army Airfield. Later renamed George Air Force Base, the base construction was completed on May 18, 1943. When fully activated, the base housed two jet fighter wings of the Tactical Air Command whose primary aircraft was the F-4 Phantom Wild Weasel, which provided vital electronic reconnaissance from the Vietnam War through the Persian Gulf War. The base also employed over 6,000 military and civilian personnel. In January 1989 the Secretary of Defense announced the closure of the base. In the past decade since the closure, Victorville annexed the base, renamed it the Southern California Logistics Airport, and has turned it into a booming new commercial center and international cargo airport that is expected to serve the entire Southwest region.

Mr. Speaker, I have proudly represented the City of Victorville for more than two decades in Congress, and I have watched it grow into a dynamic city that is well-governed and fiscally sound. The City Council now oversees a budget of $77.6 million for 69,298 citizens who are known for their friendliness, self-sufficiency and optimism. Please join me in congratulating the city leaders and the community for their 40 years of cityhood, and wishing them continued success in the future.

RECOGNIZING CHIEF TIM HOLMAN, GERMAN TWP. FIRE AND EMS

HON. DAVID L. HOBSON

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the accomplishments of Tim Holman, who is the chief of the German Township Volunteer Fire Department and EMS. Chief Holman was recently named "Volunteer Fire Chief of the Year" at the 2002 International Association of Fire Chiefs Conference in Kansas City.

Tim has volunteered for the German Township Fire Department for 27 years, and he has served as chief since 1991. By incorporating his private sector business experience into the management of the fire department, Chief Holman successfully consolidated two township fire departments, while also implementing an officer development program, a quality improvement process, and a team building process. Chief Holman has been essential in the streamlining of his fire department, allowing the brave volunteers of the German Township Fire Department to better serve their community. I applaud Chief Holman, and the men and women of the volunteer fire departments throughout my district, for the dedication, sacrifice and commitment that exemplifies volunteer fire departments.

AMENDING THE SECURE RURAL SCHOOLS AND COMMUNITY SELF-DETERMINATION ACT

HON. GEORGE R. NETHERCUTT, JR.

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. NETHERCUTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today, along with my colleague in the other body, the Senator from New Mexico [Senator BINGAMAN], who serves as Chairman of the Senate Energy and Environment Committee, to introduce this important legislation. The bill we introduced today will amend PL 106-393, the Secure Rural Schools and Community Self-Determination Act of 2000, to clarify the treatment of Title III funds reserved by counties under such Act.

Since 1908, Congress recognized that federal land deprived counties of revenues they would have otherwise received and therefore accorded a measure of compensation to counties by sharing revenues derived from National Forest System lands. Further, Congress annually appropriates funds for counties that are considered payments in lieu of taxes (PILT), an amount that is based upon a formula derived from the amount of federal land and revenue sharing receipts.

In recent years, counties have increasingly suffered hardship due to the severe fluctuation of shared federal receipts. Local education and road maintenance programs have been the most affected by the declines. PL 106-393, the Secure Rural Schools and Community Self-Determination Act of 2000, was borne as a result. The intent of the bill was to address the fluctuation of shared federal receipts and restore stability and predictability to the annual payments made to States and counties containing National Forest System lands and public domain lands managed by the Bureau of Land Management for use by the counties for the benefit of public schools, roads, and other purposes. Congress further created opportunities within this Act to enhance the restoration, maintenance and stewardship of Federal lands. For example, under Title II of this Act, eligible counties have the opportunity to place a percentage of their payments toward cooperative projects on federal land.

PL 106-393, originally introduced by Representative Nathan Deal and Senator Ron Wyden, enjoyed bi-partisan support in both Houses of Congress and was ultimately signed into law on October 30, 2000. It set forth three categories by which eligible counties could elect to receive their stabilized payments under Title I, II, or III, or a combination thereof. Eligible counties receive Title I and Title III funding directly while Title II funding is directly held by the federal government and allocated toward cooperative federal projects that I briefly mentioned above.

As it stands however, PL 106-393 undermines the stability and predictability of payments it purports to provide the counties. To understand the enormity of impact, it is critical to remember that PILT is the only form of federal payment that a county can use for its day-to-day operations. While appropriated PILT funds have always been impacted by shared federal receipts, the Act kept Title I consistent with the shared receipts and its relationship with PILT payments. However, the intent of the Act was that Title II and Title III would not impact PILT.

Yet, in fact, the Department of Interior and the United States Department of Agriculture have determined otherwise in that Title III payments will affect an eligible county's PILT payments because the funding is directly received and spent by them. I have been told that the margin of impact could be anywhere from fifty cents ($.50) to a dollar for dollar reduction in PILT depending upon the amount the county could elect to receive under Title III. For example, Ferry County, located in northeast Washington, received a PILT payment in 2001 of approximately $200,000. The county elected to receive $182,000 under Title III for fiscal year 2002. Conservatively, an estimate of fifty ($.50) cents on the dollar would equate to a $91,000 reduction in PILT. Further, eligible counties are required to specify their allocations under PL 106-393 prior to the PILT calculations, so they have no way of knowing the impact their allocations may have on their PILT payments from year to year. It is also important to note that no other source of federal funding could replenish the PILT funding lost. Although Title III funding is received directly, specific parameters are set to its spending. Bluntly put, PL 106-393 pits a county's potential desire and need for reimbursement for the emergency services it renders on federal land against its need for PILT funding for general operations. This is contrary to the intent of PL 106-393.

The legislation I introduce today is narrow in scope. It will amend PL 106-393 to re-establish the stability and predictability of payments by directing that Title III funds not be considered when PILT payments are calculated.

Time is of the essence. It is imperative Congress act before we adjourn this session. Please join me in cosponsoring this most important measure.

HONORING VERLYAN RUTH BYRD

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Mrs. Verlyan Ruth Byrd, an honorable federal employee who loyally served her country throughout her life.

During World War II, Mrs. Byrd was recruited by the United States Army as a typist at the Granite City Army Depot in Granite City, Illinois. She worked part time at the depot as a high school student, and upon graduation she got a job as a full-time clerk typist. She continued to serve her country with the Department of Defense through 1978, when she suffered a severe heart attack. Mrs. Byrd was forced into early retirement in 1979.

Upon her retirement, the Social Security Administration told Mrs. Byrd that she could file for social security upon her 65th birthday. However, when she entered the office after she reached the age of 65, she was told that due to the Government Pension Offset (GPO) law she was not eligible to receive Social Security.

This law, which went into effect after she was forced to retire, reduces pension funds for spouses for work that was not covered by Social Security. While the law was originally intended to prevent "double dipping" into social security funds by government workers who receive substantial pensions, many seniors have been forced by the law to live in poverty while being denied the money they paid into the system.

Mrs. Byrd spent the latter years of her life living in an old house that was desperately in need of repairs. She also had substantial medical bills and used as many as 15 prescription drugs on any given day. Despite her life as a loyal government employee, Mrs. Byrd was forced to live in poverty in the waning years of her life.

Mrs. Byrd was said by her friends to be a considerate, generous, family oriented woman with a kind disposition. She wrote to government officials to have the GPO law repealed, but action was not taken quickly enough. Mrs. Byrd died on Sunday, July 28, 2002 at 7:20 p.m. She was not alone in her struggle with the GPO law. Many other government employees, particularly in the teaching community, are ill-served by this law.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing Mrs. Ruth Byrd and wishing the best for her family, and to urge immediate action by the House of Representatives to pass H.R. 664, legislation I have cosponsored to address the GPO problem.

ACT NOW

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, last Friday (September 6, 2002), an outstanding article by our distinguished former Secretary of State, George P. Shultz, was published in a number of American newspapers. Secretary Shultz eloquently explained why he believes we must act decisively against Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein.

As Secretary of State for President Ronald Reagan, George Schultz exhibited remarkable experience in foreign affairs. Since leaving the Department of State, Secretary Shultz has continued to deal with international relations as a Distinguished Fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institution, an institution dedicated to public policy analysis of international and domestic questions. In recognition of Secretary Schultz's outstanding commitment to education and public service, the Hoover Institution's Foreign Service Institute was recently renamed in his honor.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that all of our colleagues in the United States Congress would benefit from reading Secretary Schultz's excellent analysis on the issue of Iraq, and I ask that it be placed in the RECORD.

ACT NOW—THE DANGER IS IMMEDIATE SADDAM HUSSEIN MUST BE REMOVED

(By George P. Shultz)

Are we to be the Hamlet of nations, debating endlessly over when and how to act? Saddam Hussein's performance as ruler of Iraq is a matter of grave concern not just for the United States but for the international community as a whole. The major debate going on in the media, in Congress and with our friends and allies is necessary. But it is also necessary to move beyond debate and create the clarity that is the basis for action.

The world now has entered the third decade of crises and dangers to international peace and security created by Saddam Hussein. In 1980 he launched an eight-year war against Iran. Chemical weapons were used, and at least 1.5 million people were killed or severely wounded. In 1990 he invaded Kuwait in a war aimed at eradicating another state's legitimate sovereign existence. As he was forced out, he deliberately created environmental degradation of gigantic proportions. He has used chemical weapons against the Kurdish people in an attack on a genocidal scale, and he has sent his forces into Kurdistan to conduct widespread slaughter. He has relentlessly amassed weapons of mass destruction and continues their development. He has turned Iraq into a state that foments, supports and conducts terrorism. No other dictator today matches his record of war, oppression, use of weapons of mass destruction and continuing contemptuous violation of international law, as set out by unanimous actions of the U.N. Security Council.

Against this background, much of the current debate ignores the facts of the United Nations' long series of steps to rein in Saddam Hussein and authorize action against his regime. A strong foundation exists for immediate military action against Hussein and for a multilateral effort to rebuild Iraq after he is gone.

A remarkable series of U.N. Security Council resolutions in 1990 and 1991 authorized war to oust Hussein's forces from Kuwait. This was the basis for the Desert Storm campaign that won the Gulf War in 1991. With that military victory, a Security Council resolution declared the "suspension" of offensive operations, deliberately leaving intact the original authorization to use force. Then Security Council Resolution 687 imposed a series of demands upon Iraq with the objective of restoring peace and security in the area. This carried the case against Hussein beyond the matter of liberating Kuwait to focus on the elimination, under international inspection, of his weapons of mass destruction. In other words, the threat to the region and the world of a decisively armed Iraq was fully recognized and declared unacceptable.

In the first years after Desert Storm, U.N. inspectors uncovered Iraqi facilities used to manufacture weapons of mass destruction. They dismantled uranium-enrichment and other nuclear weapons installations and destroyed a chemical weapons plant and hundreds of missile warheads armed with poison gas. Threats of Iraq's noncooperation were countered by U.S. airstrikes. But even limited Iraqi compliance decreased sharply over time.

The U.N. inspectors did what they could. They found a lot, but they missed even more. In 1995 Lt. Gen. Hussein Kamel Hassan Majeed, a son-in-law of Saddam Hussein, defected and revealed that Hussein was making biological weapons at a center where inspectors had found nothing. The center, which had produced 30,000 liters of biological agents, including anthrax and botulinum toxins, was destroyed, but the inadequacy of inspections in Iraq was demonstrated.

In 1997 Saddam Hussein escalated his campaign of harassment, obstruction and threats against the inspection effort. He activated ground-to-air missile systems to deter inspection flights. He expelled all American members of the inspection teams. In early 1998 Hussein refused access to "presidential sites"—the numerous palaces he had built for himself around Iraq. The United States responded with a military buildup, including ground troops deployed to Kuwait. In a speech at the Pentagon in February 1998, President Clinton gave details of Iraq's violations and declared that Hussein must grant "full, free and unfettered" access to inspectors or the United States would launch attacks to compel his compliance.

In an attempt to defuse the crisis, U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan negotiated that same month a Memorandum of Understanding between Iraq and the United Nations, which pledged "immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access" for inspections. A Security Council resolution endorsed the Memorandum of Understanding and warned Iraq of the "severest consequences" if the memorandum was violated.

In September 1998, the chief U.N. inspector informed the Security Council that Iraq was again barring inspections, and the council, in yet another resolution, condemned Iraq for suspending its cooperation. A further U.N. effort to regain Iraq's cooperation failed as Iraq declared that it was suspending all cooperation with U.N. inspections. In an emergency session, the Security Council passed Resolution 1205 on Nov. 5, 1998, condemning Iraq's action as "a flagrant violation" of the original resolutions of 1990-91. Since then, nothing consequential has been done. The failure to take military action against Hussein after his flagrant violation in 1998 has given him nearly four years to continue unencumbered in his development and accumulation of weapons of mass destruction.

Iraq by its own actions has, in effect, terminated the cease-fire established in 1991 at the end of the Gulf War and reactivated the "suspended" authorization to use military force against Iraq. No longer can anyone plausibly claim that Iraq's weapons of mass destruction can be eliminated by an inspection program. The Security Council's judgment still stands: A Saddam Hussein armed with weapons of mass destruction is not acceptable. Military force against Hussein is both necessary and authorized to rid Iraq of weapons of mass destruction.

The full range of reasonable legal, diplomatic and other alternatives has been exhausted. All conceivable forms of leverage have been employed: sanctions; embargoes; massive military buildups to threaten him into compliance; limited military operations in the form of air and cruise missile strikes; the encouragement of internal opposition; positive inducement through the "oil for peace" program; and diplomacy in all forms—unilateral, multilateral, private, public, direct and through intermediaries. Nothing has worked. Any further steps will only provide him with more time and heighten the danger.

Self-defense is a valid basis for preemptive action. The evidence is clear that Hussein continues to amass weapons of mass destruction. He has also demonstrated a willingness to use them against internal as well as external targets. By now, the risks of inaction clearly outweigh the risks of action. If there is a rattlesnake in the yard, you don't wait for it to strike before you take action in self-defense.

The danger is immediate. The making of weapons of mass destruction grows increasingly difficult to counter with each passing day. When the risk is not hundreds of people killed in a conventional attack but tens or hundreds of thousands killed by chemical, biological or nuclear attack, the time factor is even more compelling.

The moment is racing toward us when Hussein's possession of nuclear weaponry could transform the regional and international situation into what, in the Cold War, we called the balance of terror. Some argue that to act now might trigger Hussein's use of his worst weapons. Such self-imposed blackmail presumes easier judgments when he is even better equipped than now. Time is his ally, not ours.

Concern over the future of Iraq is legitimate. Following the end of the current Iraqi regime, a new Iraq can emerge as a territorially integral sovereign state with a federal-style form that respects the Kurdish, Sunni and Shia communities. A set of phased transitional steps, including referendums and elections, can be carried out and involve the range of Iraqi political parties, factions and groups in exile and internally opposed to the Hussein regime over the years.

For the Middle East, a major source of and support for terror and instability will have ended. Those who argue that the Iraq crisis should be deferred until progress is achieved between Israelis and Palestinians are proposing an impossible task. For the Arab world as a whole, a new Iraq offers the opportunity to start a reversal of the stagnation detailed in the "Arab Human Development Report 2002" recently released by the United Nations. The report describes how Arab societies are being crippled by a lack of political freedom, repression of women and isolation from the world of ideas that stifles creativity.

The history of Iraq, the achievements of its peoples, its high civilization of the past, and its extensive natural resources all point to the possibility of a positive transformation once Hussein's yoke is lifted. In the process, a model can emerge that other Arab societies may look to and emulate for their own transformation and that of the entire region. The challenge of Iraq offers an opportunity for a historic turning point that can lead us in the direction of a more peaceful, free and prosperous future.

This is a defining moment in international affairs. Authorization for action is clear. We have made endless efforts to bring Saddam Hussein into line with the duly considered judgments of a unanimous U.N. Security Council. Let us go to the Security Council and assert this case with the care of a country determined to take decisive action. And this powerful case for acting now must be made promptly to Congress. Its members will have to stand up and be counted. Then let's get on with the job.

The writer was secretary of state from 1982 to 1989. He is the Thomas W. and Susan B. Ford Distinguished Fellow at Stanford University's Hoover Institution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. VITO FOSSELLA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I am not recorded on rollcall No. 384, Expressing the Sense of the Congress on the anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001. I was with my constituents of Staten Island and Brooklyn on this sad anniversary. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

For the past year, our nation has grieved over the loss of nearly 3,000 brave men and women who were cruelly and unfairly taken from God's earth much too soon. These past 365 days have been a time of immense sadness for our nation. We have buried too many innocent souls—too many mothers, too many fathers, too many sons and too many daughters.

Today is officially known as Patriot's Day as a result of legislation that I passed in Congress. I chose this name because I thought it best described the victims of September 11th—men and women who loved their country and who died in its name. While they were not soldiers, they certainly were patriots.

Indeed, no one among us will ever forget the indelible images of brave firefighters, police officers and other emergency services personnel entering the burning towers bound by honor, duty and courage. Or the pictures of ordinary Americans leading their friends, co-workers and even strangers out of the rubble because they were taught to help those in need. In an age when the word heroism is bandied about much too often, we watched true heroes in action.

And so today, we remember these patriots—to recall their smile, their laugh, their kindness. Their loss is an injustice to humanity. And while they can never be replaced, they must be remembered and honored for making the greatest of all sacrifices.

The American story is far from finished. Indeed, the best chapters are yet to come. We must believe that, for I know in my heart that it is our destiny.

We also must believe that there is a just God directing our people in a just cause of liberty. That cause, like others before, which crushed fascism and communism, is now to forbid the tyranny of terrorism. The terrorists sought to destroy America by crushing brick and twisting steel. They didn't understand that the source of America's strength is its people, and that its people embody a spirit of optimism and hope that can never be destroyed. Our hearts may still be heavy, but our soul is stronger and more vibrant than ever. The values of America will forever stand firm and resolute.

My prayers go out to every family that lost a loved one on September 11th. My words cannot ease your suffering, so I simply tell you that you remain in my thoughts. God Bless you and God Bless America.

I ask unanimous consent that this statement be printed in the appropriate part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

TRIBUTE TO REV. JOHN A. TOTH

HON. NICK SMITH

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, all over the United States we are blessed with a wonderful sense of community, where neighbor helps neighbor. One important reason for this great blessing is the inspired guidance of our religious leaders.

In my home state of Michigan, one of those leaders has been bringing God's word for over 30 years. The Rev. John A. Toth, of the First Presbyterian Church in Dimondale, has been a beacon of faith and prayer, of hope and service, and of charity and outreach to the less fortunate. His life's work has been devoted to the service of others—his faith, his family, his community and his country.

John has been supported in his ministry by his remarkable wife Joanne. Thanks to their work, Dimondale is a better place to live and raise a family.

I am honored today to rise in recognition of the steadfast service and commitment of this fine American and a principled man of God, Reverend John A. Toth.

Reverend Toth pastored the First Presbyterian Church in Dimondale, Michigan for 30 years and has been a positive and energetic force for the community outside of his ministry. He has served as precinct delegate, on the Eaton County Courthouse Square board, on the state Boundary Commission, village appeals board and Eaton County's Solid Waste Planning Commission. The fruits of his work know no bounds. For instance, what started as a church youth paper drive for camp scholarships developed into the Dimondale recycling center, which recycles over 1.8 million pounds of materials a year.

On Sunday, September 15, 2002, Rev. Toth will give his last sermon as the church's minister and he will be honored for his hard work and dedication at a special dinner. John Toth's significant contribution to not only those his ministry touched, but also the entire State of Michigan, in no way goes unnoticed. I would like to express my sincere gratitude for the efforts of Rev. Toth to improve the lives of those around him. The people of Michigan are truly grateful for his service.

DEDICATION OF THE SEPTEMBER 11 MEMORIAL IN ORADELL, NEW JERSEY AND PRESENTATION TO MRS. TRACY WOODALL

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call to the attention of my colleagues the dedication of a memorial in Oradell, New Jersey to honor and commemorate those who lost their lives in the tragic events of September 11, 2001.

Let me say first, Mr. Speaker, that I have been deeply moved by the outpouring of support and dedication that we all have seen throughout our Nation over the past year. In the days and weeks after the tragic events of September 11, we heard and read the stories of countless family members, neighbors, and friends who went to work on that day and never came home.

In my own district, our Bergen County community was particularly hard-hit. We all know someone who was lost. Their stories are heart wrenching . . . and still remain nearly unbearable in their sadness.

Over the past year, I have spoken to many families in my District in an attempt to bring them some consolation. Even though there are no words to relieve their anguish, I have told each family that they should take some comfort in the knowledge that the hearts and prayers of the entire Nation were with them.

As we dedicate this memorial in Oradell this evening to all of those who lost their lives on that tragic day, we pause to remember each of the men and women whose lives were so tragically cut short by a brutal and senseless act of terrorism.

In particular, we commemorate the tragic loss of one of Oradell's own residents, Brent Woodall.

In their deaths, the victims of the World Trade Center attack have come to symbolize all that we love in America. The terrorists attacked the Towers because they represented America's democracy, freedom, diversity, and economic prosperity.

Brent Woodall embodied these ideals in his work and in his life. Whether in his work in the stock market—the nerve center of America's economic freedom—or as a talented athlete, or simply as a man deeply devoted to friends, family, and those whom he loved, Brent's life exemplified the American values which have made our country great.

The loss of every life that day was tragic. The loss of Brent touches each of us, as he and Tracy were just beginning so much of their life together. They had just bought a home, and were beginning a family together.

I did not know Brent personally, so I will not presume to elaborate upon his life and times beyond that. But as I have come to know the nearly one hundred residents of my Congressional District who never came home on September 11, so I have come to know Brent Woodall.

In every way, Brent's life was a life that is easy to celebrate.

This evening, we will commemorate our losses, and send a message of heartfelt sympathy and support to Brent's family and friends, particularly his wife, Tracy, and their son, Pierce Ashley, who came into this world on April 22, 2002, only after a few short months after his father had perished. How proud Brent would have been of his son . . . and how proud Pierce will someday be of his father, whose good nature, humor, and zest for life live on in him.

At tonight's memorial, I will be honored to present to Tracy Woodall an American flag, which was flown over the United States Capitol in Brent's honor.

Our flag has long stood as the symbol of our core values of freedom and liberty. It now stands also as a symbol of our national resolve to bring those responsible for this atrocity to justice, and, tonight, as a tribute to Brent, and all of those who lost their lives in one of America's darkest hours. Let it serve also to let Tracy, Pierce, and all of their family know that the support of extended family, friends, community, and the Nation, are with them now and always.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in asking that God bless Tracy and Pierce Woodall, the rest of their family, and all those who lost friends, family, or loved ones in this national tragedy. And, as Brent Woodall would have wanted, we ask that God bless the United States of America.

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF TERRORIST ATTACKS LAUNCHED AGAINST THE UNITED STATES ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

SPEECH OF

HON. WILLIAM O. LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 11, 2002

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, December 7, 1941 is the worst day in the history of our Republic in the 20th Century, and September 11, 2001 is the worst day in the history of our land of liberty in the 21st Century. Both days cost this nation thousands of lives; mothers, fathers, daughters, sons, grandmothers, grandfathers, aunts, and uncles and perished on these days because they were Americans. Their families and friends left behind have never been the same—nor will they ever be the same—and the same can be said for our nation.

On both occasions these victims were victims because of what America stands for: liberty, freedom, justice, human rights, opportunity, and a faith in a caring and loving God. But out of this criminal act perpetrated upon the citizens of this nation and on this fortress of freedom that we call the United States of America, a fierce determination arose to destroy those forces of evil that without cause or warning attacked the U.S. We brought those that attacked us on December 7, 1941 to justice, and we are well on our way to bringing those who attacked us a year ago to the same fate. But today, September 11, 2002, we stop to remember in a formal way the victims and their families who perished on these very, very dark days in our nation's history. Today we stop to honor them, remember them, pray for them, and rededicate ourselves to seeing to it that this never happens again in America or any place else in the world.

HONORING BILL CARR

HON. KEN BENTSEN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself and my colleague Gene Green, I rise to honor the memory of an extraordinary woman, Billie Carr, known far and wide as the "Godmother of Texas Liberals," who passed away on September 9, 2002, at the age of 74. Her death is a tremendous loss not only for her family, but for Texas and the nation. Ms. Carr will be long remembered as an unapologetic partisan, a champion of civil rights, a challenger of the status quo and a visionary who fought to forward the goals of the Democratic Party of the local, state, and national level.

Billie Carr was an exceptional individual whose life underscored what it meant to be an American. Known as a hard driving Democrat, revered by many, reviled by others and intimidated by none, Billie Carr was a kind and caring human being whose commitment to the American democratic experiment made our state and nation a better place. She once told me that political parties did not exist for the benefit of the politicians, but rather the politicians existed for the benefit of the parties and their volunteers. And she never let me or any other elected official forget it. She understood not only the function of politics better than most, but the purpose as well.

Billie Carr, was first exposed to politics as a 26-day-old infant when her parents took her to a session of the 1928 Democratic National Convention, held that year in her native Houston. At the age of 18, Billie discovered what would become the true loves of her life, David Carr and politics. In the early 1950's, David was elected president of the United Steelworkers Union at the plant where he worked, and together, Billie and he learned the political ropes by working with union officials and labor organizations. In what would be a key to her political education, Billie volunteered for the Truman campaign in 1948, establishing herself as a tough political insider.

In 1953, in what would serve as the beginnings of the liberal movement within the Texas Democratic Party, Billie along with the legendary Frankie Randolph, enraged at local and state Democrats who had endorsed Republican Dwight D. Eisenhower for president, took action. On Texas Independence Day of that year, they formed the Harris County Democrats, a liberal arm of the party that eventually became a powerful voice in the Harris County and Texas Democratic Parties.

Billie Carr was not only instrumental in the development and success of the Texas Democratic Party, but she was also influential on the national level, having attended every national convention since 1952. In 1968, infuriated by the direction of the state party, Billie led a challenge to the entire Texas Delegation, along with a busload of over 100 people, some of whom went on to become members of Congress, to protest the selection of delegates. As a testament to her tenacity and resolve, in 1972, she was elected as a national Democratic Committeewoman from Texas and later was a member of the Democratic National Committee's, Executive Committee.

During her more than fifty years of political involvement, many turned to Bill Carr for wisdom and guidance, including former President Bill Clinton who came under Billie's tutelage when he worked in Texas for the McGovern campaign in 1972. Billie Carr, a woman of irreproachable integrity, never used her status for personal gain, instead she believed the way to expand her movement was to bring people together under a unified front. Her unflagging drive and passion for each of her causes, has had a profound impact on the politics of Texas.

Throughout her tenure, Billie Carr sought to reinforce the tried and true notion that politics are best influenced, and best practiced, when done so at the grassroots level. She came of age simultaneous with the outgrown influence of money and media in politics. And she fought to the very end to ensure that volunteers and old-fashioned shoe leather remained as influential in elections as they did in the policy effected. Few would realize that the return of grassroots politicking recently heralded in a front page New York Times article is a phenomenon, which can be attributed in part to the tenacity of Billie Carr's life work.

Although Billie Carr has served the Democratic Party well, she considered her most important role to be mother, grandmother and friend. She is survived by three sons, David, Billy and Michael Carr, three grandchildren and many friends. It is fair to say that she was as devoted to them as they were to her. In an age when many politicians sought to coin family values, Billie Carr practices them to the fullest extent.

Mr. Speaker, many in Texas and across America mourn the loss of Billie Carr but rejoice in her memory and the contributions she has made to the betterment of our nation.

IN HONOR OF THE DEDICATED WORK OF DALE A. CALLAWAY AND SHIRLEY LEA JOSEPH FOR THE DELAWARE VOLUNTEER FIRE SERVICE COMMUNITY

HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize Dale A. Callaway, President of the Delaware Volunteer Firemen's Association (DVFA) and Shirley Lea Joseph, President of the Ladies Auxiliary of the Delaware Volunteer Firemen's Association for their hard work and continued dedication to the fire service and our State.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the volunteer fire service in Delaware. These men and women protect their communities, our State, and our Nation—and do so unselfishly. On behalf of my fellow Delawareans, I would like to commend and salute DVFA President Dale Callaway and Ladies Auxiliary President Shirley Joseph, not only for their tireless efforts on behalf of the citizens of the First State, but for their many years of contributions to fire and emergency services.

Dale Callaway has been a vital and active member of the fire services community for years. Mr. Callaway has worked diligently for the Milton Fire Company and served as past President of the Sussex County Firemen's Association. Shirley Joseph, too, has played an extremely critical role in keeping the Ladies Auxiliary of the DVFA a vital part of our communities. Her 42 years of dedication to the fire service as a charter member of Ellendale Station 75 serves as a model of service for us all. The Ladies Auxiliary has a long rich history and their commitment to the community is to be commended.

It is a tradition in the volunteer fire service for these men and women to not seek praise for what they do as volunteer firefighters, but today I offer my thanks on behalf of all Delawareans. Dale Callaway and Shirley Joseph are both exemplary models of commitment and excellence. I know they will continue to serve as valuable members of the Delaware fire service community. Their selfless commitment contributes every day to the quality of life at home in their community as well as throughout the entire State. This is why they will have a permanent place in Delaware's volunteer fire service history, and why, today, we say thank you.

TRIBUTE TO RICHARD N. GRAY

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that a long and exceptionally distinguished career has come to an end. Mr. Richard Gray, of Marshall, MO, has retired as Executive Director of the Missouri Valley Human Resource Community Action Agency.

Mr. Gray began his work at the Missouri Valley Human Resource Community Action Agency 13 years ago in February of 1989. The MVHR Community Action Agency has a myriad of programs to assist low-income people in the communities of Carroll, Chariton, Johnson, Lafayette, Pettis, Ray and Saline counties. Under Richard's leadership the agency has thrived and has been improved considerably. The Affordable Housing Development Program, which offers decent, affordable apartments around the community, was conceived and has flourished under his leadership.

Mr. Speaker, Richard Gray has dedicated 13 years to the MVHR Community Action Agency, serving with honor and distinction. The people of Central Missouri have greatly benefitted from his service. I know that the Members of the House will join me in wishing him all the best in the days ahead.

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, September 11, 2002, I was in my congressional district participating in ceremonies honoring constituents who perished in the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on America. Due to this circumstance, I was unable to cast a vote for rollcall 384. Had I been present, I would have voted in the following manner: "Yea" on rollcall 384.

TRIBUTE TO BAYMEC

HON. ZOE LOFGREN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend BAYMEC, the Bay Area Municipal Elections Committee, as they celebrate 18 years of advocating for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) rights in Santa Clara Valley and in communities along the central coast of California.

BAYMEC was founded in 1984 by local activists Ken Yeager and Wiggys Sivertsen. At that time, the Santa Clara Valley region was still reeling from the repeal of city and county ordinances which would have given gays and lesbians protection in housing and employment. BAYMEC was formed to organize the local gay and lesbian community, reverse the political tide, and advance the civil rights of LGBT individuals.

The past 18 years has produced a legacy of successes for BAYMEC and for the citizens of Santa Clara Valley. BAYMEC stands as a united front to fight for civil rights and end discrimination, to educate public officials, and to provide a voice for the LGBT community.

I am proud of the leadership, volunteers and network of supporters whose dedication has built BAYMEC into an integral part of the fabric of our local community. And, in so doing, BAYMEC is contributing to making Santa Clara Valley and the Central Coast a place where all people can expect to be treated with justice, dignity and respect.

CONGRATULATING H. BYRON MASTERTSON ELEMENTARY SCHOOL OF KENNETT, MISSOURI ON WINNING THE KIDS ARE AUTHORS CONTEST FOR "SEPTEMBER 12TH . . . WE KNEW EVERYTHING WOULD BE ALL RIGHT"

HON. JO ANN EMERSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mrs. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I come to the House floor today with the memories of September 11th forever etched on my mind. I remember thinking that the world would never be the same again after that fateful day. I was right. Now, one year later, I am touched and moved by the courage, compassion and character that people across our nation have shown in the days and months since the attack on America.

I am nearly moved beyond words by the ways our children have responded to the new challenges facing our nation. Immediately following September 11th I visited classrooms all over the Eighth Congressional district. I listened and spoke with students, teachers and parents and felt—for the first time I can remember—a bond and sense of purpose that was somehow missing in the days before.

I have never been as proud to be an American as I was when I visited with the children at those schools in my district. To be honest, I wasn't sure exactly how to talk about the tragic events of September 11th, because I wasn't sure how much they understood about why this tragedy happened to us. Instead of comforting them, they comforted me. Instead of me telling them what happened, through their patriotic songs, intelligent questions, cheers of pride, patriotic bulletin boards, and their hugs and tears, they shared what they had learned and seen.

One of those schools was H. Byron Masterson Elementary School in Kennett, Missouri. The students shared their feelings, but they did more than that. They took action. And this week, a year later, the results of their actions were heard and seen in New York City. The message from the children is one of comfort. Their story is summarized in a story reported by the Associated Press and I would like to share it with all of you.

Darlene Robertson says that on some days, the rut is the best place to be. On Sept. 12th, it was the daily rut of life in Robertson's southeast Missouri town that provided the stability her first-grade students needed in that insecure time after the terrorist attacks. "September 11 upset the routine of America, and these little children felt it," Robertson said. "That's why the rut was so important for us that day." Those students, now second-graders at H. Byron Masterson Elementary School, wrote about their experience in a book entitled, September 12th . . . We Knew Everything Would Be All Right. The book, which the children also illustrated, won the Kids Are Authors contest sponsored by Scholastic Books. Now Scholastic is publishing the book and distributing it nationwide.

When Robertson first heard of the contest, she began talking with her husband about topics for a book her students could write. They knew that a lot of children would be writing about the terrorist attacks of September 11th, so her husband suggested September 12th as a topic. So the idea for the book was born, and in March, Robertson and her students began to recall what September 11th and 12th were like—how they had discussed what they saw on television, and how she assured them they were safe inside their classroom. "September 11th shook us all up. As a faculty, we had to be careful not to show our true feelings about the day. We had to do things just like we had been doing the day before. It gave the kids security." The book takes readers through the day after the attacks and how the students' daily routine was a comfort to them: "The sun rose again, and the students traveled to school as usual. They still had homework. And two plus two still added up to four," they wrote in the book. "On September 12th, our parents still tucked us in our warm, safe beds," they wrote. "We knew we would be all right because our parents said they loved us."

My favorite quote from the books is one that I used recently in my weekly column about September 11th. The children wrote, "We knew everything would be all right because the stars and moon came out and America went to sleep. And the next morning the sun came up again."

The students, together with their parents, were recognized for their achievement. They along with teacher, Darlene Robertson and her husband, Dennis, and Masterson Principal Elsie Heller, left for New York City early Monday morning, September 9th.

The group of approximately 40 spent three days in the Big Apple including the one year anniversary of September 11th. The trip, sponsored by NASDAQ, ended with the group taking part in the ceremonial opening and ringing of the bell at the NASDAQ market on September 11th. During their stay in NYC, the group visited various sights including every child's dream, Toys R Us, New York. They also toured the Empire State Building and the New York Public Library. And they took a trip to the company, Scholastic, whose contest made all of this possible.

Scholastic will be at H. Byron Masterson Elementary School on September 12th for a banquet, where they will present the students with medals. The school also will receive 100 copies of the book and an autographed copy of the book will be sent to President Bush.

As their teacher Mrs. Robertson said "We're just a little small town of 11,000 in the Bootheel of Missouri but here we are . . . It is an honor to be chosen."

It is an honor for me to represent these children and their families in Congress. Congratulations on this remarkable and special milestone in your lives. You children have inspired me. You have shown your compassion for others. You have displayed the true character of America. You have shown me and other parents and adults your maturity and depth of understanding about our great nation. You have given us resolve. You have given us courage. And you will help us show the world that no act of terror will ever bring us to our knees. We will be stronger than ever in the face of adversity. We will be one. We will be tougher. We will prevail.

CONGRATULATIONS TO LEAH A. CUNNINGHAM

HON. ROB SIMMONS

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 12, 2002

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Leah A. Cunningham of Niantic, CT. Leah Cunningham was named a national winner in the 2002 Voice of Democracy Program and received the $1,500 Department of Colorado and Auxiliary Award. Leah was sponsored by VFW Post 5849 and its Ladies Auxiliary in East Lyme, Connecticut.

I applaud the achievements of Leah Cunningham and ask that her award-winning essay be submitted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

REACHING OUT TO AMERICA'S FUTURE
(By Leah Cunningham of Connecticut)

Yiyia, what is your advice for me and my role in helping America to have a better future?

"I came to this country at only 12 years old, alone and frightened of the unraveling journey ahead. I immigrated from Greece, but I soon became a loving citizen of this great land called America. I have learned that for America to have a better future, we must trust and learn from the issues of the past."

And then, my Yiyia (which is Greek for grandma) would smile in her strong oak rocking chair, gazing out the window of her apartment. Yiyia would have faith in the youth of America and their love for a country. She had seen the beginning stages of World War I as torpedoes were launched at her boat; she had watched America slowly enter World War Two, and thankfully, she died before her eyes would witness the devastation of the worst terrorist act to ever assault American soil: The destruction of the New York trade center towers by two hijacked airplanes.

These horrific events of September 11th have sparked a new found interest in our past and pride. Have we perhaps become more aware of our duty to create a peaceful life for our youth? The idea is to reach out to America's future, enabling our children to create a better world, providing them with knowledge, insight. Someday as a grandmother, I hope to share with my grandchildren the knowledge a nation has touched my existence with. I will reach out to America's youth—empowered in good faith to help America's future.

Our nation has indeed suffered tragedy but at the same time, we have been blessed by devoted American citizens striving towards a common goal: to make America a peaceful nation. Firemen, Red Cross volunteers, policemen, and average American citizens are so diligently working in New York City, to defy evil and restore the site of utter human devastation. We have refocused our priorities, acknowledging kindness, not only kindness for our friends and relatives, but a rejuvenated sense of benevolence towards strangers and fellow Americans. I see a confident nation, converging together, providing that we will not fall, we will not falter, we will not fail in a time of unforeseen cruelty towards our freedom land. We are reaching out to America's future in quiet and bold ways. I even see a rebirth of historical values and national pride.

President George Washington wrote in his 1796 farewell address: "The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquilly at home, your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize . . ." Washington's words ring across more than 200 years to reach America today and in the future.

The future of America depends on our ability to secure unity and influence the well being of active American citizens. Simply requiring a civics or history course for high-school graduation is not enough. We should urge our youth to become involved in the social fabric of the community. The little things truly aide in reaching out to America's future: encouraging youth to register for voting, involving teenagers in mock political systems, having children understand the American flag, and ensuring appreciation towards war veterans and their roles in providing long-standing freedom in America.

I have come to think of it as my responsibility, my mission, to in some way reach out to America's future. My grandparents remember where they were when Pearl Harbor was attacked by the Japanese. My parents remember where they were when John F. Kennedy was assassinated. And, I will forever remember exactly where I was on September 11th, 2001, when terrorists attacked our nation, killing thousands. My greatest achievement will be if a defining moment of my grandchildren's life is not a catastrophic pre-empt to war, or a brutal disheartening assassination of a loved president, or an act of horrific human destruction. But rather, their moment of true American unity and love for a nation will be when their grandmother reaches out to their curious eyes and big hearts, and tells them of her experiences as an American and what they must do to hopefully following her patriotic footsteps.

As Thomas Jefferson suggested in his first Inaugural Speech, our principles for peace in the future depends on the ability to historically, look back, in order to look forward. Jefferson states, ". . . Let us hasten to retrace our steps and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty, and safety." The youth of America will bloom with bright hearts and clear visions if they are mindful of America's pursuits and "retrace their footsteps" of answers.

America is living and breathing, and within this country there is embedded a recipe for survival and for peace. Our youth needs the support and encouragement of patriotic citizens. We must trust in the goodness of people, and work towards a humane world, with the youth of America as leaders towards peace and justice. We must start with the seeds of tomorrow, the children of America's future, to not only establish a long-term remedy for terrorism, but to maintain strength, pursue unity, and forever sustain national loyalty.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, September 13, 2002

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ADERHOLT).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
September 13, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable ROBERT B. ADERHOLT to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

In You, O Lord, we find wisdom and hope. In the dark night, You bring forth light. In loneliness, You make Your presence known. In times of doubt and indecision, You speak Your word. In facing threats that frighten us, You providentially provide confirmation that strengthens resolve and frees the spirit. You are the source of all power and the foundation of all human freedom; therefore, we place our trust in You.

Be with this Nation at this time of its recovery from the sad events which have affected both the people and the economy in this past year. Make us once again strong and united so that we can be Your instrument of peace and justice in the world. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

The Speaker pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a bill and a concurrent resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3880. An act to provide a temporary waiver from certain transportation conformity requirements and metropolitan transportation planning requirements under the Clear Air Act and under other laws for certain areas in New York where the planning offices and resources have been destroyed by acts of terrorism, and for other purposes.

H. Con. Res. 183. Concurrent Resolution expressing the sense of Congress regarding the United States Congressional Philharmonic Society and its mission of promoting musical excellence throughout the educational system and encouraging people of all ages to commit to the love and expression of musical performance.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2513. An act to assess the extent of the backlog in DNA analysis of rape kit samples, and to improve investigation and prosecution of sexual assault cases with DNA evidence.

COMMUNICATION FROM HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT, DEMOCRATIC LEADER

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from RICHARD A. GEPHARDT, Democratic Leader:

OFFICE OF THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER,

SENATE—Friday, September 13, 2002

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JEAN CARNAHAN, a Senator from the State of Missouri.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, at dawn one hundred and eighty-five years ago tomorrow, Francis Scott Key saw the Stars and Stripes over Fort McHenry and wrote the stirring words of our national anthem that have moved our hearts to patriotism ever since. "O say does that star spangled banner yet wave, o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?"

Yes, Lord, thankfully, it does. As our flag flies over the Capitol this morning, we commit ourselves anew to serve You by doing the strategic work of government and by leading our Nation through the present challenges in the way that pleases You. It is good to know that You are not surprised by the needs we bring to You. Help us to see that prayer is how You call us to do what You think is best rather than just a call for You to assist us with what we already have decided. Help us to wait for You, to listen intently to You, and to gain strength to carry out Your best for us, personally and for our Nation. You are our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JEAN CARNAHAN led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,

Washington, DC, September 13, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JEAN CARNAHAN, a Senator from the State of Missouri, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mrs. CARNAHAN thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leader time is reserved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF JOSE E. MARTINEZ, OF FLORIDA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now go into executive session and proceed to the consideration of Executive Calendar No. 961, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jose E. Martinez, of Florida, to be United States District Judge for the Southern District of Florida.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. GRAHAM. Madam President, I thank the Judiciary Committee for recognizing the needs of Florida and favorably reporting the nomination of Mr. Jose Martinez.

Jose Martinez's long and impressive legal career makes him an outstanding candidate. Beginning as counsel and now partner at Martinez & Gutierrez, Mr. Martinez has been associated with the firm since 1991. Jose Martinez has served as Assistant United States Attorney in the Southern District of Florida, and Legal Officer for the United States Navy, Judge Advocate General Corps. He took a two-year leave from his firm to become the Regional Director for the Office for Drug Abuse Law Enforcement of the United States Department of Justice.

Mr. Martinez received his undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Miami. He was the President of the highest honorary on campus, the Iron Arrow. His involvement with Student Government ranged from working in the Student Activities Office to becoming the treasurer of the School of Business.

Currently, Mr. Martinez is the vice chairman of the Federal Court Practice Committee of the Florida Bar. He is also a member of the American Bar Association, the Federal Bar Association, the Cuban American Bar Association, and the Hispanic National Bar Association.

In summary, Mr. Martinez is a highly regarded and qualified candidate for the federal bench.

I appreciate the Senate's consideration of Judge Martinez's nomination and appreciate the Senate's recent confirmation of Kenneth Marra and Timothy Corrigan, who will serve in Florida's Southern and Middle Districts, two of the largest and busiest judicial districts in the country.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now return to legislative session.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of H.R. 5093, which the clerk will report by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5093) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Byrd amendment No. 4472, in the nature of a substitute.

Byrd amendment No. 4480 (to amendment No. 4472), to provide funds to repay accounts from which funds were borrowed for emergency wildfire suppression.

Craig/Domenici amendment No. 4518 (to amendment No. 4480), to reduce hazardous fuels on our national forests.

Dodd amendment No. 4522 (to amendment No. 4472), to prohibit the expenditure of funds to recognize Indian tribes and tribal nations until the date of implementation of certain administrative procedures.

Byrd/Stevens amendment No. 4532 (to amendment No. 4472), to provide for critical emergency supplemental appropriations.

AMENDMENT NO. 4522

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, first of all, let me say, I know under the existing order of the unanimous consent request agreed to yesterday between the leaders—let me make a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand it, there is a vote to occur at 10:15; is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DODD. On or in relation to the Dodd amendment?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, let me say, first of all, for the benefit of my colleagues, I know our staffs, right now, are working to see if it is possible to come to some compromise on the amendment that I proposed along with my colleague from Connecticut, Senator LIEBERMAN. My hope is that we might be able to do that.

I thank Senator INOUE and Senator CAMPBELL and their staffs and my staff. They began to work last evening, talking about this matter. There was some discussion about possibly delaying this vote, but the leadership wanted to go forward with a vote this morning, and so we are going to try to work this out, if we can. That would be my fervent goal and desire.

Let me state, again, why they are talking and working here. It was not my hope or desire to have to get involved in all of this, but each of us represents our respective State. And my State has been undergoing some additional pressures. There are some nine applications pending for designation for recognition.

I have been—and still am—a strong supporter of the Native American community. I have a strong relationship with the two tribes in my State that have added tremendously to the economic well-being of my home State of Connecticut.

What provoked this response among the constituents in my State, and provoked the approach that Senator LIEBERMAN and I are taking, is that over a year ago we submitted a piece of legislation calling for a moratorium, a delay on the designation process, so that we could bring some rationality to the recognition process of the Bureau of Indian Affairs; it seemed to be out of control.

In fact, the previous Assistant Secretary at the BIA, on his departure, cited the significant problems that existed within the Bureau of Indian Affairs in terms of its recognition process.

What happened in my State most recently was that two tribes sought recognition, and the BIA rejected both tribes and came up with a third approval that had never been sought, despite the fact that the two tribes had been in opposition to each other during the recognition process. Needless to say, my constituents believed they did not have an opportunity to be heard and don't understand how it is that when a recognition is being sought, all of a sudden a third alternative emerges that was never on the table.

There is a concern that the Bureau of Indian Affairs is sort of out of control; that if this is the way things are going to proceed, we need to put a hold on here to figure out how it will work so people have an opportunity to respond.

There are 200 designation applications pending in 37 different States. What I am talking about in my State, which is smaller than Yellowstone National Park—I said to my colleague from Montana yesterday, I think there are ranches in Montana that are probably larger than the State of Connecticut. So you can imagine, with nine applications pending in a State that is 100 miles by 40 or 50 miles, with an impact on 3½ million people, this is not insignificant.

I sat here and voted for drought relief legislation. I voted for assistance to farmers in the Midwest. When there are hurricanes and fires, even though my State is not affected, I stand up and support those efforts because I respect the needs of various States.

My State is now facing some real problems on this issue. And I am not asking to stop a process. I am not anti-Native American at all. My record is replete with indications of how strongly I feel about Native Americans. But I have an obligation to stand and speak for my constituency. And they are feeling threatened when they are not allowed to be heard. When they cannot participate in a debate that is going to have a huge impact on their lives, it seems to me something needs to be done.

If I wait much longer, then the issue is going to be over, because I would vehemently oppose—vehemently oppose—any effort to reverse a designation and a recognition. That, to me, would be outrageous and a dreadful precedent. But once that recognition occurs, it is unlikely to ever be rolled back.

So what I am trying to do is not, in any way, to suggest that those who have been designated or recognized—that anything be done there at all but merely in the future, as we are talking about this, shouldn't the people of my communities be notified? My Governor, my attorney general, the mayors of my towns that are surrounding these areas, shouldn't they be notified?

What about in the other 37 States where this is going to occur. It may be in Connecticut today, but it may be your State next. I think being heard on these matters, being invited to participate—there are seven criteria that are listed in the regulations, and in some cases various criteria are totally disregarded. In some instances, the technical staff have made one recommendation and have been overruled by the Assistant Secretary, totally disregarding all the efforts and work done by the people at the BIA.

So I do not like doing this. This is not the way I normally proceed, but I am in a tough place. I have to stand and speak for my constituents. I am hopeful we can find some compromise in the next few minutes to avoid asking our colleagues to make choices on matters such as this. This is not how I like to proceed, but if I let this go and another year comes and goes; and these processes go forward under a system, as it did with the two applications I just described, you can imagine how my constituents and yours may react down the road.

I also am concerned that this is going to devalue the recognition process. For those who get recognition, to suggest somehow the process was not as thorough and as fair as it should be does a disservice to those who deserve recognition.

So this process needs fixing. If we do not do that, everybody gets hurt by it and we build up a level of hostility that is unnecessary.

This is a moratorium. The moratorium could end next week. It need not be a moratorium indefinitely. It just says a moratorium until you make these fixes. No new law is being requested here—nothing. It just says comply with the existing regulations and make sure the people are notified and invited to participate in a debate that can have a profound effect on their lives and their families. That is not too much to ask. It does not give them a veto power. It does not make it an adversarial proceeding. It just says we ought to invite people to participate. That is the American way. That is the way we do things.

So this amendment merely says to have a moratorium until these matters are put in place and worked out. I do not know how my colleagues may vote. I may lose today. But as I stand here, I promise you, if you are one of the 36 other States and this comes to your State, then you are going to be standing where I am, and you are going to be insisting upon the same sort of thing.

We stand and vote to support each other's needs when they occur. I am asking my colleagues to support me in this particular case because my State is feeling it. And we are not anti-Native American at all. Quite to the contrary. We are deeply proud of the Mohegan and Pequot Tribes in my State. I strongly supported their recognition efforts. In fact, I have been highly criticized in books because I stood in support of them when they were under threat of not being recognized.

So I will not take a back seat to anyone in my determination to fight for them. But I need to fight for my constituency as well when they feel as though they are not being served well by a process that is fundamentally broken. And when the Assistant Secretary for the Bureau of Indian Affairs says the system is broken, it is not working, then we ought to pay attention. And that is what this amendment is designed to do.

My fervent hope would be, with the staff of the committee, in the remaining 15 minutes or so we have, we put on the table an offer that would make this moratorium only exist for 1 year, to clarify some language they were concerned about. We can offer that, accept it, and move on. We need not have this become a divisive debate.

I know the chairman of the committee and the ranking member are here, and they want to be heard. I have spoken my piece. I hope we can work it out in the next 15 minutes or so and then put this issue behind us. But if we cannot, I am going to ask my colleagues to support my State. Look to your own States. If you are unclear, inquire, because the issue will come to your State, I promise you, sooner or later. And this vote will be looked back upon as to where you stood on this issue when you, all of a sudden, are confronted, as we were, with two groups seeking recognition and neither one was approved, and then there is a third one. That is how bad this system is right now. That is wrong. That is unfair. My people deserve better than that.

So I urge my colleagues to support this amendment if a compromise is not reached.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum and that the time be charged equally to both sides.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut withhold his suggestion of a quorum call?

Mr. DODD. Yes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Madam President, I would defer to Senator INOUE, our chairman, if he wishes to speak first.

Madam President, I support a motion to table the Dodd amendment. Let me say at the outset, though, that no one questions Senator DODD's commitment to the Indian people of America. He has an exemplary voting record, and he has always been there when we needed help.

My problem with his amendment is that there has been almost no input from tribes themselves, and in the past they have opposed any moratorium. We all know the problem that exists now with the recognition process. We all know it needs to be streamlined and needs to be changed. It is replete with problems. We have heard it over and over.

We have had a couple hearings on this already in the Indian Affairs Committee, and we intend to take it up again. Whether we have run out of time this year has yet to be determined.

But I was not aware there was going to be some discussion on a compromise amendment. And because the unanimous consent request was entered into yesterday, many of us, including me, have made reservations on planes that we can't change. So I hope I am going to be able to be here to speak to it, but knowing how these things sort of creep, I may not be able to do so.

So from my own standpoint, if I do have to leave, I am going to defer to our chairman, Senator INOUE. The Indian Affairs staff is working with Senator DODD's staff on an amendment that may be acceptable, but I will certainly defer to my chairman in his decision of whether to support that amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. STABENOW). The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUE. Madam President, it is with some considerable reluctance that

I rise today to speak in opposition to the amendment proposed by my good friend, the senior Senator from Connecticut, that would prohibit the expenditure of funds for the operations of the Branch of Acknowledgment until the Secretary of the Interior has certified to the Congress that certain administrative procedures have been implemented with respect to the consideration of any petition submitted to the Secretary.

The provisions of this amendment are drawn from an authorizing bill, S. 1392, that is now pending in the Committee on Indian Affairs.

At Senator DODD's request, in July of this year I agreed to schedule a hearing on S. 1392.

That hearing is to be held on Tuesday, September 17.

As chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I believe that Senator DODD's request for a hearing in the authorizing committee reflects a position on which we can both agree that the appropriate venue for the consideration of reforms to the Branch of Acknowledgment process is in the authorizing committee of jurisdiction.

In an effort to responsibly address the matter of whether there is some urgency associated with effecting reform in the Branch of Acknowledgment that cannot await action by the authorizing committee, particularly as such reform may affect the State of Connecticut, I authorized my staff to contact the Department of Interior's Branch of Acknowledgment officials for information on the petitions currently pending before the Branch.

The committee is advised that there are two petitions of tribal groups located within the State of Connecticut that are currently pending in the branch.

Both petitions are the subject of court-ordered negotiated agreements, and thus both petitions are subject to the ongoing jurisdiction of the Federal district courts.

So for those members who believe that the Congress should forebear from injecting itself into pending litigation, the jurisdiction of the Federal district courts should be honored as well here and action should not be taken on an amendment which would interfere with the courts' jurisdiction. The court-ordered negotiated agreement for the Schaghticoke Tribe provides that the proposed finding whether positive or negative is due to be published on December 5, 2002.

Thereafter there is a 6-month comment period, followed by a two-month response period, both of which may be extended at the request of the parties.

If no extensions are requested or granted, then assuming a positive finding, the earliest time in which a positive finding would become effective for purposes of any appeals by the State of Connecticut or other parties, is August 5, 2003.

For the Golden Hill Paugussett Tribe—under court order, the proposed finding whether positive or negative is due to be published on January 21, 2003.

Thereafter there is a 6-month comment period, followed by a 2-month response period, both of which may be extended at the request of the parties.

If no extensions are requested or granted, then assuming a positive finding, the earliest time in which a positive finding would become effective for purposes of any appeals by the State of Connecticut or other parties, is September 21, 2003.

The other groups that will be affected by the amendment proposed by Senator DODD are two petitioning groups of the Nipmuc Tribes of Massachusetts, the Mashpee Tribe of Massachusetts, the Snohomish Tribe of Washington State and the Burt Lake Band of Michigan.

I firmly believe that Senator DODD's authorizing legislation can be addressed through the hearing process and acted upon well within the time frame that is anticipated for action on the two pending petitions from Connecticut tribal groups, and thus, that it is not necessary for the authorizing provisions of this amendment to be considered within the context of the Interior appropriations bill.

In addition, I am certain Senator DODD would agree with me that reforms of the magnitude proposed by his amendment merit the full consideration of all those now involved or who may become involved in the Federal acknowledgment process—including the administration, and equally important, the Nations of Indian country, as well as other interested parties.

There has been no hearing nor public record developed on the proposal advanced in Senator DODD's amendment, and I think it is incumbent upon us to develop such a record and to receive testimony on this proposal before any action is taken precipitously.

There are other proposals now pending in the Congress for the reform of the Federal acknowledgment process—Senator CAMPBELL, the vice chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has one such proposal.

Clearly, the proponents of those measures would also wish to have their legislative initiatives given full consideration, and I believe we should afford a full and fair opportunity for all such measures to be considered rather than adopting one proposal that has not yet been the subject of hearings.

Under current law, the Branch of Acknowledgment works with petitioning tribal groups in a cooperative process which is designed to assure that a petitioning group has submitted data sufficient to address each of the seven criteria that petitioners must meet.

The regulations require the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs for the Department of the Interior to provide notice of the petition to the Governor and the Attorney General of the State in which the petitioning group is located.

It has been represented that the proposed amendment does nothing more than codify the existing Branch of Acknowledgment regulation, but in fact, the proposed amendment proposes to replace most of the existing procedural rules governing the acknowledgment process with a contested hearing process.

It would grant interested parties, and not petitioners, the power to control the timing of the contested case and would prevent the expenditure of any funds by the Branch of Acknowledgment if the Branch does not comply with the new procedural rules established by the amendment.

The amendment requires the Secretary to consider "all relevant evidence submitted by a petitioner or any other interested party, including neighboring municipalities."

Upon the request of an interested party, the Secretary may conduct a formal hearing for interested parties to present evidence, call and cross examine witnesses, or rebut evidence even before a petition is complete.

A transcript of the hearing is to be made part of the administrative record upon which a decision may be based.

Nowhere in the existing administrative regulations is a contested case hearing, such as the one proposed by my colleague's amendment, authorized.

Instead, the general spirit of the regulations is to enable a cooperative relationship between the petitioning group and the Branch of Acknowledgment, as reflected by the authorization for a technical review of each petition by the Branch of Acknowledgment and the opportunity to supplement or amend a petition before it is actively considered and to have information submitted by third parties who have legal, factual, or property interests in the recognition decision to be considered.

The present administrative process allows for publication of a proposed finding, a 6-month comment period for all interested parties, and a 2-month response period for the petitioning group.

A final determination is then made and time lines are established governing requests for reconsideration and when the decision becomes final.

In contrast to the existing regulations, the proposed amendment creates a contested case process the timing of which is controlled not by the Branch of Acknowledgment in conjunction with the petitioning group, but by those municipalities, counties, State attorney generals, State Governors, and other tribes falling within the notice provisions of the amendment.

Given the fact that the amendment proposes to include State, county and municipal governments from each area that the petitioning group was historically located—and that Federal policy forced not one but many relocations of most tribal groups from their traditional areas—the amendment contemplates the involvement of scores if not hundreds of small communities that no longer are in close proximity or have any geographic relationship with the petitioning group.

With the exception of the continued application of the seven criteria in the existing regulations, almost every other aspect of the regulations would be changed under the amendment, including the burden of proof a petitioning group must satisfy to meet the criteria.

In addition, a petitioning group would be required to defend its petition whenever an interested party requests and is granted a hearing, even though that request may be made at a time where a petitioning group has not yet perfected its petition.

I am not suggesting that the proposals advanced in this amendment do not merit the consideration of the Congress.

Indeed, as I have earlier indicated, the Committee on Indian Affairs has scheduled a hearing on Tuesday, September 17 for that very purpose.

What I am suggesting, Mr. President, is that there is an appropriate venue for the consideration of substantive changes in Federal Indian law and policy, and that venue is in the authorizing committees of the Congress.

I ask unanimous consent to print the following statement in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR—FY 2003 INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS BILL EFFECT STATEMENT TO THE CONFERENCE MANAGERS

Bureau/Office: Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Appropriations: Operation of Indian Program.

Activity/Subactivity: Central Office Operations/Tribal Government.

Project/Budget Element: Tribal Government Services.

(In thousands of dollars)

Item	FY 2002 enacted	FY 2003
		Pres. request level	House level	Senate level	Compared to request
					House      Senate
Branch of Acknowledgment and Research .....	1,050	1,100	1,600	1,100	500      0

House Action: House added $500,000 to the Bureau's Central Office, Division of Tribal Government Services. Fund are specifically for the Branch of Acknowledgment and Research (BAR).

House Report Statement: None.

Reference: This amendment was reported and voted on by the full Appropriations Committee.

Effect of House Action: The House Action would enable the BAR to hire additional staff to process requests from Indian groups who are petitioning for Federal recognition.

What would the funding be used for?: Currently the BAR has three research teams. Each team is composed of a cultural anthropologist, a genealogist, and a historian. FY 2003 funding for three teams and support staff for BAR is $1,100,000. The additional funding would enable the BAR to staff one additional research team and hire support staff who would focus on administrative functions, such as FOIA requests, preparation of administrative files for litigation, and other time consuming responsibilities that are currently handled by the professional research teams. Consequently, this funding would allow four research teams to focus on processing documented petitions.

Feasibility/capability of the proposed funding level or language this fiscal year?: On November 2, 2001, General Accounting Office (GAO), released a report on the acknowledgment process titled "Improvements Needed in Tribal Recognition Process." The two concerns raised by GAO were the need to improve the speed and transparency of the decision-making process. These additional funds will enable the Department to address these two identified concerns.

Is the program/project ranked on existing priority setting system? This program was included within the total budget priorities competing for increased funding. However, because many other priorities, funding was not included within the President's Budget Request.

Senate Action: Proposed at the President's Budget request level; however S. 2708 was introduced on the floor which amends the Department of the Interior's appropriations bill.

Senate Report Statement: None.

Reference: S. 2708.

Effect of Senate Action: S. 2708 is an amendment to the Department of the Interior's appropriations bill. The purpose of this bill is "[T]o prohibit the expenditure of funds to recognize Indian tribes and tribal nations until the date of implementation of certain administrative procedures."

The Department should oppose this bill because it will result in the Department being unable to comply with court scheduling orders for issuing acknowledgment decisions and because many of its provisions are ambiguous and appear to be unworkable.

Sections 1(c)(1)(A) and 1(c)(1)(B) require notice to each state, county and local government in the area where the petitioner is located and in the area historically occupied by the petitioning group. The acknowledgment regulations already provide for written notice to the state and local government where a petition is currently located and provide for notice of the petition in the Federal Register and in local newspapers. Written notice to governments where the petitioner was historically located within 30 days of the receipt of a letter of intent is unrealistic. There is insufficient evidence in a letter of intent to identify these locations.

Section 1(c)(1)(C) requires the Department within 30 days to notify any Indian tribe and any other petitioner that, as determined by the Secretary (i) has a relationship with the petitioner (including a historical relationship); or (ii) may otherwise be considered to have a potential interest in the acknowledgment determination.

As with the prior provision, the difficulty with the notification provision with the 30-day deadline, is that it may be that until a petition processing is begun, or at least until the preliminary technical assistance review, that the Department will not know all of the petitioners, tribes, states, and others that could be involved. Notice beyond that in the Federal Register to such entities within 30 days of the receipt of a letter of intent is not feasible.

Section 1(c)(2)(A) requires the Secretary to consider all relevant evidence submitted by a petitioner or any other interested party, including neighboring municipalities that possess information bearing on the merits of a petition. The Department already considers all evidence which is submitted within prescribed time frames by petitioners and any other interested party, including neighboring municipalities.

Under section 1(c)(2)(B), the Secretary, on request by an interested party, may conduct a formal hearing at which all interested parties may present evidence, call witnesses, cross-examine witnesses, or rebut evidence presented by other parties during the hearing.

The bill leaves unspecified who the hearing would be before, when in the acknowledgment process this hearing would take place, and the purpose of this hearing. Therefore, any advantages of a hearing are unclear.

Further under the existing regulations, The Department provides for hearings before the IBIA, an independent administrative review body. If an additional hearing is intended, it would further delay decisions on the petitions.

Under section 1(c)(3)(A), the Secretary shall ensure that the evidence presented in consideration of a petition is sufficient to demonstrate that the petitioner meets each of the 7 mandatory criteria for recognition contained in section 83.7 of title 25, Code of Federal Regulations (as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act).

This section appears to restate the existing standard used by the Department.

Under section 1(c)(3)(B), the Secretary shall consider a criterion to be met if the Secretary determines that it is more likely than not that evidence presented demonstrates the satisfaction of the criterion.

The meaning of the stated standard is unclear, particularly as to whether it changes the regulatory standard which provides that a criterion shall be considered met if the available evidence establishes a "reasonable likelihood of the validity of the facts relating to that criterion." It is unclear if this provision would change the existing standard.

Under section 1(c)(4), the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register, and provide to each person to which notice is provided under paragraph (1), a complete and detailed explanation of the final decision of the Secretary regarding a documented petition under this Act that includes express findings of fact and law with respect to each of the criteria described in paragraph (3).

The regulations already require that notice of the final determination be published in the Federal Register. It is ambiguous if the complete final determination is to be published in the Federal Register which would be an extraordinary and unnecessary expense. Presently, the decisions are publicly available and will be posted on the Internet as soon as possible.

Recommendation: The Department does not support this amendment, and it opposes considering it as part of the Interior Appropriations Bill.

Mr. INOUE. Madam President, what I would like to propose is to convert this amendment into a bill and have it referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs to give time to the respective staffs, the staff of the committee and the staff of Senator DODD, to work over this measure and come forth with a resolution of the matter. When that resolution is reached—and I gather it can be reached in 24 or 48 hours—we can once again bring up the new amendment and consider that.

If I may, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Madam President, last night I worked with Senators INOUE and DODD until almost 11 o'clock. The arrangement made at that time was that we would have a vote at 10:15 on the Dodd amendment. The Senators have worked with their staffs and we are still going to have a vote at 10:15 but not on the Dodd amendment. We are going to ask unanimous consent to set that aside and to see if Senators DODD, CAMPBELL, and INOUE can work out this problem that is now facing us. They do believe by early next week they can work something out.

I know some Senators are going to be upset that we are only voting on a judge this morning, but there has been a lot of work going into having this amendment withdrawn. I think it is in the best interest of the Senate that we not charge forward on something if it can be resolved. There will be a vote at 10:15. We will vote on Arthur Schwab, of Pennsylvania, to be a judge. We expect to announce that in a moment or two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, before the unanimous consent request, I thank the distinguished majority whip. I thank my colleague from Hawaii, my colleague from Colorado, and the Senator from Montana as well. I apologize to colleagues who were counting on a vote. I know the leadership wants to have a vote. This matter is very important. If we can resolve this by not having a divisive Senate on this issue, I think that exceeds the importance of whether we have a vote. We are going to try to work this out so we can deal with the underlying cause of the amendment. I thank the Senators for offering my colleague from Connecticut and I a chance to come to a solution. We will ask unanimous consent to temporarily set aside the Dodd-Lieberman amendment. Then this will pop back up again, I presume, Tuesday when we come back after Yom Kippur and deal with the matter. I am confident that at that time we will have resolved this problem and we can vote on a compromise. I apologize. We worked late last night. I thank the Senators and their staffs. Senator REID was on the phone until after 11:30. Time didn't permit us to get it done. I don't want to see the Senate vote on a matter of this importance without trying to resolve the differences. We will vote on a judgeship, but we will, at some point, vote on this matter—a compromise or the Dodd-Lieberman amendment. I hope it will be a compromise that will be satisfactory to everybody.

I thank the Senator from Nevada. He works hard to keep things on track. This is something which I think rises to the level of reaching a compromise on an important effort.

Mr. REID. I simply say to my friend that I think we have far too many votes here anyway that are not necessary. I think it shows the experience and wisdom of the people who have been working on this issue, along with you and Senator CAMPBELL. There is no need to have a vote on this matter. We may never have to have one. If we do, we will vote on it. I think a lot of people say "I want a recorded vote" because it looks good—or whatever reason. We spend far too much time voting on matters that could be passed without a recorded vote. Even though there is no vote on this amendment, I think the Senators have saved us a lot of time.

The next vote will occur at 5 o'clock Tuesday.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF ARTHUR J. SCHWAB, OF PENNSYLVANIA, TO BE UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider Calendar No. 963, Arthur Schwab to be U.S. district judge; that the Senate vote immediately on the nomination; that upon the disposition of the nomination, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and statements thereon be printed in the RECORD as though read and that the Senate resume legislation session, with the preceding all occurring without any intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Arthur J. Schwab, of Pennsylvania, to be United States District Judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Arthur J. Schwab, of Pennsylvania, to be United States District Judge for the Western District of Pennsylvania? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. MILLER) are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. COCHRAN), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. MURKOWSKI), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. SMITH), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. SMITH), and the Senator from Kansas (Mr. ROBERTS) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 92, nays 0, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 216 Ex.]

The nomination was confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is tabled. The President will be immediately notified of the Senate's action.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I yield such time as the Senator from Pennsylvania may require to make a brief statement.

Mr. SPECTER. Madam President, I thank the majority leader.

I have sought recognition to comment very briefly on the nomination of Arthur J. Schwab of Pittsburgh, PA. Mr. Schwab is an outstanding lawyer and will make an outstanding judge. His credentials include: Graduating cum laude from Grove City College; Order of Coif from the University of Virginia Law School; an extraordinary litigation record as a trial lawyer, appearing in some 22 States, in addition to Pennsylvania; in the Federal courts in Pennsylvania, he argued appeals in the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuit Courts. He has an extraordinary litigation background and will make an outstanding judge.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the qualifications of Arthur J. Schwab.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Arthur J. Schwab graduated cum laude from Grove City College in 1968. He then attended the University of Virginia law school, where he graduated Order of the Coif in 1972. After law school he was an assistant district attorney with the District Attorney's Office of Allegheny County. He then became a partner in the law firm of Mansmann, Beggy, McVerry & Baxter, later named McVerry, Baxter & Cindrich, from 1970 to 1988. He has also been Of Counsel to the law firm of Tucker Arensburg, a shareholder of Grogan, Graffam, McGinley & Lucchino, P.C. Currently, Mr. Schwab serves as the chief counsel and chair of litigation at Buchanan Ingersoll, P.C., in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Over the past 20 years, Mr. Schwab has developed a practice in the areas of trade secrets, confidential information, employment agreements, software copyright infringement, trademark, unfair competition, and diversion of corporate opportunities. He has tried cases in state and federal courts in more than 22 different states, as well as in the Courts of Common Pleas of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and in the United States District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania. Mr. Schwab has also been responsible for cases involving appeals to the United States Courts of Appeals for the Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, and Eleventh Circuits.

Mr. Schwab is also actively involved in his local community, including serving as the co-chair of the Senator John Heinz Level of Giving Division of the United Way of Allegheny County. From 1979 to 1988, Mr. Schwab began an extensive pro bono project concerning Child Advocacy for the Allegheny County Bar Association that produced, with the assistance of 60 Reed Smith attorneys, over 3400 hours of representation of indigent children.

Once again, I believe that Arthur Schwab will be an excellent addition to the federal bench and I urge my colleagues to vote for his confirmation. Thank you.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, today the Senate has confirmed its 76th and 77th new judges since the change in majority last summer, with the vote on Arthur Schwab, who is nominated to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania and the vote earlier this morning on Jose Martinez, who is nominated to the Southern District of Florida. In less than 15 months we have confirmed more judges than the Republican majority confirmed in its final 30 months in the majority. We have been more than twice as productive as they were and Republicans are nonetheless complaining that we have not worked three or four times as fast as they did to fill vacancies their inaction perpetuated.

The Senate has now confirmed more judges than were confirmed in all of 1989 and 1990, the first two years of the first Bush Administration, and almost 40 percent more confirmations than in the first 15 months of the Reagan or Clinton Administration, both of which were cooperating with a Senate majority of the same political party.

Another stark comparison would be between how we have proceeded this year and how the recent Republican majority proceeded in the years they were in the Senate majority but the President was a Democrat. In the 1996 session for example, the second full year in which the Republican majority was in control of progress on President Clinton's judicial nominees, the Republican majority allowed only 17 judges to be confirmed the entire year. Not a single circuit court judge was confirmed that entire session all year—not one. By contrast, just since January, in this the second session of this Congress, this Democratic Senate has already confirmed 180 percent more judges than were confirmed in the second year of the Republican majority. We have also already confirmed seven judges to the circuit courts, which is seven more than were confirmed in the 1996 session.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2003—Continued

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I call for regular order with respect to the amendment numbered 4480, and I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on Senator BYRD's amendment No. 4480.

Mr. DASCHLE. Madam President, I am happy to yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank the majority leader for yielding. He has just filed cloture on the Byrd amendment. The underlying second degree is the Craig-Domenici amendment to try to deal with forest health. I appreciate the frustration of time here and the reality we have to get a lot of work done in the next several weeks to conclude the appropriations process.

It was never our intent to block the Byrd amendment. This is a critical and necessary amendment that deals with fire itself and replacing some of the moneys or refurbishing, replenishing some of the moneys that have been spent fighting fires, primarily in the West but across the country, in our public forests.

We are continuing to work. We had another meeting this morning. I told all of my colleagues, Democrat and Republican alike, that Monday was drop dead. I meant that only in the sense of the legislation itself. Clearly, we have worked hard. There have been some good faith efforts. There has also been a reality as to where all of the sides are on this issue. Tragically enough, no matter what we accomplish, the forests of our country are going to continue to burn at a high rate because of their diminished health because of public policy over the last good number of decades.

But on Monday, in visiting with Senator REID, I hope we will have something we can vote on—or a clear decision that we cannot arrive at an agreement. I hope at some point, Leader, I can come to you and ask you if you could vitiate the vote on cloture, that we could expedite this ourselves. But there are a good number on my side, and some on yours, who want more debate and at least more discussion on this issue, even if we can have opposing positions on which to vote.

I do believe for the American people, who have seen the western skies full of smoke now since the middle of June, it is important that this Senate express its will on this issue.

The Senator from South Dakota found an expression that fit his State.

I do not criticize him for it because the Black Hills of South Dakota are in a state of forest health problems, as are other public forests. Clearly, it is important that we not walk away from this session of Congress without the public knowing where we are on this issue because, as the Senator knows, no matter what we do, even if we can have some aggressive effort on thinning and cleaning, the country must become ready to accept, tragically enough, that we are going to lose 5 million or 6 million acres a year of old growth and watershed and wildlife habitat to wildfires because of the public policy that has brought our forests to this current health environment.

But I hope we can make a step, probably not a big one but at least a small step, in the right direction of showing the public we can manage their land and we can do so in an environmentally sensitive way that will replenish the health of these magnificent forests that have now grown to a state of disrepair.

I understand where the leader is. I did want that expression out there. I hope we can come to the majority leader on Monday and say we have something, we hope you can vitiate, and we hope we can come to this floor and debate this issue and get on with the process.

Mr. DASCHLE. Let me respond to the Senator from Idaho. I would be more than happy to entertain a consent agreement to vitiate the cloture vote on Tuesday if we arrive at a consensus about this over the weekend. We laid this bill down on September 4. It is now September 13, and I am told we have not spent this much time on any appropriations bill to date. So I attempted to be as patient as I could be with regard to the ongoing discussions. We have offered procedural arrangements to deal with this. They have not been acceptable to some. We have offered as many different iterations of compromise as I think our imaginations allow. But if there is a productive and successful effort over the weekend, we will certainly revisit the question.

However, we have to move on, this is not only a fire amendment but it is a drought amendment, now, as a result of the overwhelming action taken by the Senate just last week. This is a very important piece of legislation, and we have to move along. There is too much work to be done in too short a time.

So we will look at where we are on Monday and come to some conclusion. But if we are unsuccessful, we will have to move on with the cloture vote on Tuesday.

I yield the floor and I thank my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, before the majority leader leaves the floor, I would like to comment on the discussion that just took place between the majority leader and Senator CRAIG and indicate to him I have been a daily participant in those negotiations. I have tried to act in good faith; many have. But somehow or another, we make one step forward, and literally the next time we meet, it looks as if we have gone one and a half back. It is getting more difficult.

We don't intend to delay this bill once we know the good faith efforts of the Senators—which is about 10 of them—cannot reach an agreement. We will come forward. But we will have to take a little time, as best we can, without delaying things too much, to let everybody know what has happened. It will not take too long for that to occur. There are other Senators who may feel differently. The amendment is a Craig-Domenici amendment. We put it together, gathered the Senators, but I wanted the record to reveal we are not interested in delaying the good faith effort on this bill, but we have a powerful issue, as you well known, that burns at many of our hearts. I am sorry I had to use that terrible word. We are having burns elsewhere in our States.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, I had wanted to make some comments this morning on the issue of homeland security. I understand we are currently back on the Interior appropriations bill; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DORGAN. I ask the chairman of the Appropriations Committee if he has other business to transact on that appropriation. If not, I would like to offer some comments on homeland security, which is the second track we have been working on this week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, if I may respond to the Senator's question without his losing his right to the floor? He has asked me a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. I assume the Senate will return to homeland security this afternoon. The order is, I believe, 12 or 12:30?

Mr. REID. Yes, at 12 noon, with Senator BYRD having the floor.

Mr. BYRD. At 12 noon, at which time, under the unanimous consent order entered last evening, I will get recognized.

Now, I intend to explain my amendment clearly because my amendment is not adversarial to the Lieberman bill. My amendment improves, in my judgment—and I think people will agree once they really understand my amendment—the Lieberman amendment, the Lieberman bill. Therefore, I will be explaining my amendment. That is in answer to the question of the distinguished Senator.

At that time, if he wishes me to yield to ask questions about homeland security, that will be fine, but I intend to take some time this afternoon. At that time, the Senator can speak. As far as I am concerned, if Senators are going to speak on the Interior bill at this time, why, the Senator could get unanimous consent to speak out of order. I do not believe the Pastore rule has run its course yet. So the Senator could get consent to speak out of order for 10 minutes, 20 minutes, whatever he wants, and nobody is around here to object.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield for a question?

Mr. DORGAN. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Nevada for a question.

Mr. REID. We have the two managers of the Interior bill here now. We have approximately an hour until we go to the homeland security bill. I have looked to staff, and we have no amendments to clear at this time. That is my understanding. So it would probably be to everyone's benefit, because the cloture motion has been filed on the pending amendment, that we go off this bill.

Mr. DORGAN. Yes.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that until 12 noon today, the Senate be in a period of morning business and at 12 noon we go to the homeland security bill and Senators be allowed to speak during morning business time for up to 10 minutes. Is that OK with the two managers?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak in morning business for as much time as I consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOMELAND SECURITY

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, let me thank the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the ranking member. We have a very short amount of time in which to do a great deal of business. I did not wish to interrupt their work on Interior if in fact there was an amendment that was to be acted upon. I appreciate their courtesy.

Let me make some comments about the broad question of homeland security and relate it to the discussion yesterday at the United Nations that was offered by President Bush.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, will the distinguished Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DORGAN. I am pleased to yield for a question from the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I wish I could be on the floor to hear what the Senator has to say. I have an appointment. I have to be down below this floor at 11 o'clock, which is 1 minute or 2 from now. I will read the remarks of the Senator. I know they will be good. If I can come back before he completes his remarks, I will do that.

Is it the understanding of the Senator that he will complete his remarks by 12 noon?

Mr. DORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, I have not been on the floor until now to speak about the homeland security bill and the issues surrounding that bill. I have been thinking a lot about it, as have many of my colleagues. We have had a good number of amendments, and I do not believe anyone here thinks the issue is whether we shall pass a piece of legislation dealing with homeland security. Of course we should enact a piece of legislation dealing with homeland security. We need to respond to the President's request. We will do that. The question isn't whether, the question is how.

There are many ideas about homeland security that come from all corners of this Chamber. We ought to take the best of all of those ideas and incorporate them into this legislation.

Yesterday the President spoke at the United Nations about the threat that comes from Saddam Hussein and Iraq. Because that also relates to the issue of homeland security, I wanted to make some comments of a general nature this morning.

In my desk, I have a couple of pieces of materials taken from weapons that were once targeted at the United States. I ask unanimous consent to be able to show them on the floor. I am doing this for a very important reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, this piece of material is part of a wing strut from a Backfire bomber that the Soviets used to fly. This Backfire bomber doesn't exist anymore. It wasn't shot down. It wasn't part of combat with the United States. This was sawed off of an airplane. The wings were sawed off of a Backfire bomber that used to carry nuclear weapons—presumably that would threaten our country in the middle of the Cold War. It was dismantled, sawed apart, and destroyed. And in a sense, we purchased it. We paid for it under the Nunn-Lugar program, in which we decided through arms control agreements with the Soviet Union—and then with Russia—to reduce the number of nuclear warheads and reduce the delivery vehicles for nuclear warheads, because we believed that allowed us to step back from the dangers of nuclear war.

I hold in my hand part of a Soviet Backfire bomber that we didn't shoot down. We helped pay to saw the wings off this bomber.

This other material is ground up copper wire that used to be in a Soviet submarine that carried nuclear missiles with warheads aimed at the United States of America. That submarine doesn't exist any longer. I am able to hold in my hand this ground up copper from that dismantled submarine because of an arms control agreement by which we negotiated with the Soviets to reduce the number of nuclear weapons and reduce the delivery vehicles for those nuclear weapons, and, therefore, have made this a safer world. A bomber and a submarine that used to carry nuclear weapons no longer exists. We have made progress.

But there are, of course, somewhere in the neighborhood of 30,000 nuclear weapons that continue to exist on the face of this Earth. And many in this world aspire to acquire nuclear weapons. Terrorist groups and other countries want to become part of the club that has nuclear weapons. Our children and their children are threatened by the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

It doesn't take 100 nuclear weapons or a thousand nuclear weapons to create chaos and hysteria and concern for the future of the world. It just takes one—just one nuclear weapon.

Today, if someone is notified that there is a nuclear weapon missing from the Russian arsenal and that has been stolen by terrorists and is put in the trunk of a rusty Yugo car on the dock at New York City, or in a container on a ship coming into the ports of Los Angeles—if just one nuclear weapon is thought to be entering this country's space, its ports, its docks, its cities—that is enough for the kind of nuclear blackmail that can cause chaos and hysteria and threaten a nuclear war.

The President gave a very forceful speech yesterday to the United Nations. He is—and we are—concerned about Iraq and Saddam Hussein having access to weapons of mass destruction. He is—and we are—concerned about the potential of a Saddam Hussein getting access and acquiring a nuclear weapon.

I don't diminish at all the concern about that. We ought to be concerned about that. We and the President are all concerned about that.

But let us understand that the broader issue of arms control and arms reduction ought to be front and center in this Chamber. This country needs to be a leader in the world to help reduce the number of nuclear weapons and help prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to other countries.

Regrettably, in recent years, some Members in this Chamber—and elsewhere in the Government of the United States—have expressed, if not a benign neglect, an open hostility to arms control and arms reductions.

Let me go through a few of the things that have happened. We had a vote in this Chamber on the issue of the Comprehensive Nuclear Test-Ban Treaty. We should have such a treaty. After all, we don't test anymore in this country. The first George Bush Presidency said we will no longer test nuclear weapons. But this Senate voted against a Comprehensive Nuclear Test-Ban Treaty—despite the fact that we unilaterally decided not to test, and have not tested for a decade. This Senate turned that treaty down, sending a message to the rest of the world that this is not our priority.

There is nothing more important, in my judgment, to the children of America and to their children and their future than dealing with this question of a nuclear threat. The Soviet Union is gone. The Cold War is over.

The President's discussion about Saddam Hussein underscores the concern about one dictator in Iraq—an evil man in Iraq who is seeking to get nuclear weapons.

But I am just saying that there is much more at stake than that. The Iraq situation is at stake for us, and we need to respond to that. But there is much more at stake.

So many others want to acquire nuclear weapons. There are so many nuclear weapons around in this world. I indicated that there are somewhere between, perhaps, 25,000 and 30,000 nuclear weapons in existence. A fair number of them for a number of reasons are not very well controlled. So we need to talk in the broader context about what our responsibility is, and what our role is with respect to arms control and arms reduction in the future.

The Senate was asked to consider the nomination of a fellow named John Holum, who the President said he wanted as senior adviser for arms control. John Holum is a remarkable American, who has had incredible experience, and he was nominated for the position of Under Secretary of State for Arms Control and International Security Affairs. He is somebody who believes in his heart that we need to pursue negotiations and efforts to achieve treaties for nuclear arms reduction and to achieve progress in stopping the spread of nuclear weapons. But his nomination was blocked.

The President sent us instead John Bolton, who doesn't have experience in arms control, who has never served in an arms control position, who has expressed disdain for arms control and those who promote it, and who expressed disdain for the United Nations. He said:

... a building in New York has 38 stories. If it lost 10 it wouldn't make a bit of difference.

And his nomination was approved by the Senate.

So we have someone in this area who really isn't interested in pursuing the approach that we have used, which has been quite successful in beginning the process of reducing nuclear weapons and reducing the nuclear threat.

We also have had discussions in recent months about perhaps developing a new type of nuclear weapon. Perhaps a nuclear weapon can be developed that will be a cave buster—some nuclear-tipped bomb that will bust into caves and be more effective in dealing with the problem that we encountered in Afghanistan where terrorists burrowed into caves.

The minute you start talking about designing nuclear weapons—especially a little nuclear weapon with a special nuclear tip that can be used against caves—once you start talking about the potential to use nuclear weapons, the genie is out of the bottle.

Our discussion in this country ought never to be a discussion about how to use a nuclear weapon. That is not what we ought to be discussing.

We ought to be discussing our obligation to assume a world leadership position to stop the spread of nuclear weapons and stop the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Do you want a future 10 years from now or 40 years from now in which 50, 75, or 100 countries, including terrorists and rogue nations, have nuclear weapons at their disposal? I don't think so.

We have had a 50-year effort in this country—50 years—to stigmatize nuclear weapons and brand them only as a weapon of last resort. We ought not do anything to undermine that basic approach to nuclear weapons.

We are talking about homeland security in these days. When you talk about nuclear weapons, you have to talk about homeland security against the ultimate weapon; that is, a nuclear weapon. But there are many other kinds of weapons.

We may spend $7 to $8 billion this year, in this Congress, on a national missile defense program, trying to build a missile that has the capability of hitting a bullet with a bullet. The purpose of that is a defensive mechanism by which if a rogue nation or terrorist or some other country were able to launch an intercontinental ballistic missile against the United States, we would be able to shoot it down and prevent a nuclear attack using an ICBM.

We will spend an enormous amount of money on that, believing that one of the threats is an intercontinental ballistic missile coming in at 14,000 miles an hour, with a nuclear warhead, sent by some rogue nation or terrorist state. It is one of the less likely threats; the Pentagon will tell you that. Rogue nations and terrorist states would have a very difficult time dealing with an ICBM, if they could acquire one in the first place.

A far more likely prospect would be a container, on a container ship, pulling up to a dock in New York City at 3 miles an hour, with a low-yield nuclear device in the middle of a container, in the middle of a container ship.

There are 5.7 million containers that come into this country every year to all of our ports and docks. These big ships pull up with containers stacked on top of their decks. Of the 5.7 million, 100,000 are inspected. So 5.6 million are not. I was at a dock in Seattle recently, and they had pulled off a ship container, and they were inspecting it at the Customs facility. I asked them: What is this? What is in the container?

They said: Frozen broccoli, from Poland.

I said: Well, do you know anything about it, the frozen broccoli from Poland?

They said: No, but we'll show you.

They opened up the container, pulled the bag out, and ripped it open, and, sure enough, there was broccoli from Poland.

I said: How do you know what's in the middle of this container? You just pulled the one bag out.

They said: Well, we don't. We just opened it to see that it was frozen broccoli from Poland.

So we have 5.6 million containers that come into this country, and they are largely uninspected. Does anyone here not believe that port security, the security of containers, is critically important?

Did you read the story about the fellow from the Middle East who decided to send himself to Canada, presumably with the thought of coming into the United States, and he put himself in a container? He had a cot, he had potable water, he had a telephone, he had a computer, he had a GPS system, he had a heater. And there he was living in a container, on a container ship, shipping himself to Toronto, Canada.

Well, they found this guy. They thought he was a terrorist. I don't know what the disposition of that was. But think of it, how easy it is, if 5.7 million containers come into this country, and we only take a look at 100,000 of them. What is in the other 5.6 million?

That is a big homeland security issue. What are we going to do about that?

We have heard discussions about the potential for a dirty bomb. The National Research Council gave a long listing the other day with respect to homeland security, about our shortcomings on preparedness to defend against nuclear and dirty bomb threats, and against biological warfare.

Here is what the report said. We have to develop vaccines for airborne pathogens—we are way behind in doing that—create better sensors and filters for dangerous chemicals; build a system to counter sabotage of the Nation's food supply; find better methods to fend off attacks on nuclear reactors, electrical power grids, and communications systems; and develop defense in depth for airport and other transportation security.

Much of what we are talking about in the current debate about homeland security is organizational. We say, let's take a look at an organizational chart and find the boxes and evaluate how we can put all these boxes together in a different way. And so you have, at the end, 170,000 people in a new agency.

Putting agencies together in a way in which they are better prepared to deal with homeland security makes good sense to me. But there is not a right or a wrong way to do it. There are a lot of different ideas on how it might or might not work, and we will not know, perhaps for a year or 2 or 3 or 4 years, after the Congress finishes its work, and the President signs the bill, whether what we have done advances our interests or retards it.

It is reasonable to ask the question, if homeland security is going to be restructured, should we consider some change to the way we use the FBI and the CIA, and the way we gather and analyze intelligence? I know there is a portion of that in this bill, and I think this is a question we have to consider carefully.

Good intelligence is critical. I mentioned the issue of nuclear weapons. Russia, which is now the nuclear repository of the old Soviet Union, has thousands of excess nuclear weapons in storage facilities that fall far short of what we expect for decent security standards. We are told they have more than 1,000 metric tons of highly enriched uranium and at least 150 metric tons of weapons-grade plutonium, much of it in less than adequate storage facilities. That is enough for 80,000 nuclear weapons, by the way.

In addition, dangerous biological pathogens are kept at scores of poorly guarded sites around the former Soviet Union.

Tens of thousands of former Soviet Union scientists and engineers are living hand to mouth because of military downsizing and the collapse of the economy. These are people who know how to make these bombs, were involved in the development of the Soviet nuclear capability.

We know that individuals and groups have attempted to steal uranium or plutonium from sites in the former Soviet Union dozens of times in the past 10 years.

Former Senate Majority Leader James Baker and former White House Counsel Lloyd Cutler headed a panel last year that studied the threat to our country posed by nuclear weapons, materials, and know-how in the former Soviet Union. Here is what the panel said about a scenario where a terrorist would have access to some basic material and could get the engineers and scientists to put this together:

The national security benefits to the U.S. citizens from securing and/or neutralizing the equivalent of more than 80,000 nuclear weapons and potential nuclear weapons would constitute the highest return on investment in any current U.S. national security and defense program.

In a worst case scenario, a nuclear engineer graduate with a grapefruit-sized lump of highly enriched uranium or an orange-sized lump of plutonium, together with material otherwise readily available in commercial markets, could fashion a nuclear device that would fit in a van like the one terrorist Yosif parked in the World Trade Center in 1993. The explosive effects of such a device would destroy every building in [the] Wall Street financial area and would level lower Manhattan.

The Baker-Cutler panel recommends spending a substantial amount of money, $30 billion over 10 years—three times what the administration is proposing—to secure weapons and fissile and biological material in Russia by expanding cooperative threat reduction, which is an important part of the outgrowth of the Nunn-Lugar program, and a range of other efforts.

So Iraq is important, but there are broader issues to consider as well.

Incidentally, the President yesterday did the right thing by going to the United Nations and saying to the U.N.: Look, you have had resolution after resolution after resolution, and Iraq has defied you. They have failed to live up to their terms of surrender from the Gulf war, and they simply thumb their nose at your resolutions.

What the President said to the United Nations yesterday was: You had better decide whether you are going to pass resolutions and enforce them or not. And the President said: We will take this to the National Security Council.

A lot of people were worried that he would not do that. I am glad he has. It is exactly the right step. The notion of saying we don't care what the Security Council does or what the U.N. says, that is not the way to do it. The President yesterday did the right thing. He said to the National Security Council and the United Nations: You need to begin enforcing what you are doing by resolution with respect to the country of Iraq.

I hope the United Nations will decide to do that. My hope is we can put together a coalition through the United Nations of coercive inspections that demand and achieve the inspections necessary to make sure we are not threatened by weapons of mass destruction in Iraq.

But let us agree that the problem is bigger than just Iraq, and let us decide to be a world leader in dealing with stopping the spread of nuclear weapons. Let's bring back the comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty. Let's pass it. Let's send a signal to the world that we care about the chemical weapons ban, because this country wants to lead in the right direction to stop the spread of weapons of mass destruction.

Now, let me say a few words about the proposed Department of Homeland Security. The President says to us he wants to put this agency together, and he wants to do it in a way that he has maximum flexibility with respect to all of these workers. Whatever we do, however we do it, we will give this President very substantial flexibility. But to suggest somehow that the basic protections that workers expect and have received for many years in this Government of ours should be discarded or disallowed makes no sense.

We propose to provide the same basic protections to workers in all of these agencies that you have for civilian workers at the U.S. Department of Defense. That makes good sense.

I get tired of people saying: Federal workers, they are not worth much. They are people who can't find a job elsewhere.

We have terrific people working for the Federal Government. We have great people in public service—not just the Federal Government, but State and local government as well.

Among those people who filed out of the World Trade Center, we had firefighters and law enforcement officers climbing the stairs. Some of those firefighters were up on the 70th floor carrying 60-pound backpacks, climbing up as that fire was coursing through that building, knowing they were risking their lives. They were not asking about overtime or about how tough it might be, what the risk was. They were doing their jobs—wonderful, brave people. There are a lot of people like them all over this country in public service. This Government ought to say to them: We value your work. We honor your work.

I don't want anything in this homeland security bill to in any way denigrate the work of those public employees or pull the rug out from under them. They are going to be our first defenders, the first line of defense. They are the ones who will make this work.

We have a lot to do here. We have a government of checks and balances which requires cooperation, which requires that we work together. The President has some good ideas. I think our colleagues have good ideas. I think Senator BYRD does us a service by talking about how we put this together in the long term.

In politics, there are always a couple of sides. Each side too often wants the other to lose. We should get the best of both rather than the worst of each. That is especially true on homeland security.

It is up to us. The moment is now. The President is right to be talking about concern of weapons of mass destruction. But is it not just Iraq. This is a much bigger subject. We need those who now talk in the most aggressive ways about dealing with this issue to join us to develop new arms reduction strategies and to develop approaches by which the rest of the world joins us in stopping the spread of nuclear weapons.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

ELDER JUSTICE ACT OF 2002

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I take a moment to speak to legislation that has been introduced by myself along with a number of bipartisan colleagues, which is entitled the Elder Justice Act of 2002.

The legislation has been introduced by me along with Senators HATCH, BAUCUS, COLLINS, CARNAHAN, SMITH of Oregon, LINCOLN, BOND, TORRICELLI, NELSON of Florida, and also Senator STABENOW.

I will take a minute to just describe the problem we have in this and outline the features of the legislation. I think there are probably few pressing national concerns of social issues that are as important and also ignored as much as elder abuse, elder neglect, and also the exploitation of elder Americans.

This abuse of our seniors takes many different forms. It could be physical abuse, sexual abuse, psychological abuse, and it could also be financial abuse. The perpetrator may be a stranger you have never heard of or never seen; it may be an acquaintance; it may be a paid caregiver in some institution; it may be a corporation; and, unfortunately, far too often it can be a spouse or another member of the elderly person's family.

Elder abuse happens everywhere—in poor, middle class, and upper income households; in cities, suburbs, and in rural areas. It knows no demographic or geographic boundaries.

The cost of such abuse and neglect is extremely high by any measure. The price of the abuse is paid in needless human suffering, inflated health care costs for everyone, depleted public resources, and the loss of one of our greatest national assets: Of course, the wisdom and experience of the elders in our country.

With scientific advances and the graying of millions of baby boomers, this year the number of elderly on the planet will pass the number of children on the planet for the very first time. Although we have made great strides in promoting independence, productivity, and quality of life, old age still brings inadequate health care, isolation, impoverishment, abuse, and neglect for far too many elder Americans.

Studies we have looked at in our Aging Committee, which I have the privilege of chairing, conclude that elder abuse, neglect, and exploitation are widely unreported. These abuses significantly shorten the lives of older Americans. A single episode of mistreatment can "tip over" an otherwise independent, productive life, triggering a downward spiral that can result in depression, serious illness, or even death.

Too many of our frailest citizens suffer needlessly and cannot simply move away and escape from the abuse. Frequently, they cannot express their wishes or their suffering. Even if they can, they often do not because they fear retaliation.

Congress has passed comprehensive bills to address the ugly truth of two other types of abuse—child abuse and crimes against women. These bills have placed these two issues into the national consciousness and addressed the issues at the national level.

These laws created new Federal infrastructure and funding—focusing resources, creating accountability, and changing how we think about and treat the abuse of women and children. Most jurisdictions now have established coordinated social service, public health, and law enforcement approaches to confront these abuses.

It is interesting when we look at how Federal dollars are being spent in the area of abuse and neglect. On the chart, the area in red represents the money being spent with regard to child abuse—$6.7 billion on various programs. On the other hand, if you look at what we are doing in the area of spousal abuse, domestic abuse, it is about $520 million. When you look at how much we are spending on the question of elder abuse, it is only a very small amount in comparison—approximately 2 percent of the money that is spent on trying to alleviate, understand, and prevent abuse. It is focused on the fastest growing segment of our population, where in our hearings in the Aging Committee we have found it is a substantial and real problem.

I am not saying domestic abuse and child abuse should be terminated from the standpoint of spending money to prevent it. Of course not. It is a high priority. What we are saying is that we need more attention on the question of how we treat, as a society, the elderly in our country, which is the fastest growing segment of our population.

Despite dozens of congressional hearings over the past two decades on the devastating effects of elder abuse, neglect, and exploitation, interest in the subject has risen and fallen, it has waxed and waned. To date, no Federal law has been enacted to address this issue of elder abuse in a comprehensive fashion.

In these hearings we had in the Aging Committee, elder abuse was called a disgrace, a burgeoning national scandal. Indeed, we found no single Federal employee working full time on the issue of elder abuse in the entire Federal Government, in any Department, anywhere.

I think the time has come to provide seniors a set of fundamental protections. That is why, along with the colleagues I listed, we have introduced S. 2933, the first comprehensive Federal effort to address elder abuse in the United States—the Elder Justice Act of 2002.

Our bill will elevate elder abuse, neglect, and exploitation to the national stage in a lasting way. We want to ensure that there is Federal leadership to provide resources for the services, prevention, and enforcement effort to those on the front lines.

You know, a crime is a crime, no matter who the victim is, or wherever the victim happens to be, or whatever the age of the victim is. Crimes against seniors must certainly be elevated to the level of child abuse and crimes against women.

It is clear, in confronting child abuse and violence against women, that the best method of prevention has been a two-pronged approach—through both law enforcement and social services. With offices in the Department of Health and Human Services, HHS, and the Department of Justice, our legislation will ensure a combined public health-law enforcement coordination at all levels.

In addition, because elder abuse and neglect have been virtually absent from the national research agenda, our legislation establishes research centers of excellence and funds research projects to fuel future legislation that may be necessary.

These measures lay the foundation to address, in a meaningful and lasting way, a devastating and growing problem that has been invisible for far too long. We can no longer neglect these difficult issues afflicting frail and elderly victims—American citizens.

This effort takes numerous steps to prevent and treat elder abuse. It improves prevention and intervention by funding projects to make older Americans safer in their homes, facilities, and in their neighborhoods, to enhance long-term-care staffing, and to stop financial fraud before the money goes out of the door.

It enhances detection by creating forensic centers and develops expertise to enhance detection of the problem.

It bolsters treatment by funding efforts to find better ways to mitigate the devastating consequences of elder mistreatment.

It also increases collaboration by requiring ongoing coordination at the Federal level, among Federal, State, local, private entities, law enforcement, long-term care facilities, consumer advocates, and families, to bring all of these agencies together in a coordinated fashion.

It aids prosecution by assisting law enforcement and prosecutors to ensure that those who abuse our Nation's frail elderly will be held accountable, wherever the crime occurs and whoever the victim happens to be.

It also helps consumers by creating a resource center for family caregivers and those trying to make decisions about the different types of long-term care providers.

The importance of defending our right to live free of suffering from abuse and neglect does not diminish with age.

If we can unlock the mysteries of science and live longer, what do we gain if we fail to ensure that Americans also live better lives and longer lives, lives with dignity? More and more of us will enjoy a longer life in relatively good health, and with this gift comes the responsibility to prevent the needless suffering too often borne by our frailest citizens.

I appreciate the work of the members of our Aging Committee and our co-sponsors and their joint effort with me to put together this legislation. I recommend it be considered by our colleagues and that the Senate proceed ultimately to action on the bill, S. 2933, the Elder Justice Act of 2002.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Chair.

IRAQ

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to voice my strong support for the convincing call to action against Iraq that President Bush issued yesterday at the United Nations to discuss the unique dangers created by Saddam Hussein's regime and to argue that it is imperative that the international community, led by the United States of America, mobilize now to eliminate those dangers.

On September 11, 2001, a foreboding new chapter in American history began. On that day, our Government was reawakened in this new century to its oldest and most solemn responsibility: protecting the lives and liberty of the American people.

As we survey the landscape of threats to our security in the years ahead, the greatest are terrorists—al-Qaida and rogue regimes such as Saddam Hussein's.

Saddam hates America and Americans and is working furiously to accumulate deadly weapons of mass destruction and the missiles, planes, and unmanned aerial vehicles to use in attacking distant targets.

Every day Saddam remains in power is a day of danger for the Iraqi people, for Iraq's neighbors, for the American people, and for the world. As long as Saddam remains in power, there will be no genuine security and no lasting peace in the Middle East, among the Arab nations or among the Arabs, Israelis, and Christians who live there.

The threat Saddam poses has been articulated so often that some may have grown numb to the reality of his brutality. But after September 11, we must reacquire ourselves with him because if we do not understand and act, his next victims, like Osama bin Laden's, could be innocent Americans.

President Bush advanced that process with great effectiveness in his speech at the U.N. yesterday, albeit after a season long on the beating of drums of war and short on explaining why war may now be necessary. But the President did that yesterday in New York. Now we, in Congress, must go forward together with him as the Constitution's competing clauses require us to do. Each of us must decide what actions will best advance America's values and secure the future of the American people.

The essential facts are known. We know of the weapons in Saddam's possession—chemical, biological, and nuclear in time. We know of his unequaled willingness to use them. We know his history, his invasions of his neighbors, his dreams of achieving hegemonic control over the Arab world, his record of anti-American rage, his willingness to terrorize, to slaughter, to suppress his own people and others. And we need not stretch to imagine nightmare scenarios in which Saddam makes common cause with the terrorists who want to kill Americans and destroy our way of life.

Indeed, 2 days ago on September 11, 2002, the state-owned newspaper in Iraq showed a picture of the World Trade Center's Twin Towers in flames with the headline "God's Punishment."

This man—Saddam Hussein—is a menace to the people and the peace of the world. It was his brutal invasion of his peaceful neighbor, Kuwait, in August 1990 that first and finally convinced America and the world that Saddam had become a tyrant, like so many before him in world history, who had to be stopped before he did terrible damage to his people, his region, and the wider world. I was privileged in January of 1991 to join with my colleague from Virginia, Senator JOHN WARNER, in sponsoring the Senate resolution that authorized the first President Bush to go to war against Saddam.

The American military fought bravely and brilliantly, in that conflict and won an extraordinary victory in rolling back Saddam's invasion of Kuwait. But we did not achieve total victory. On April 9, 1991, I came to the Senate floor and expressed my disappointment that our forces in Desert Storm had not been authorized to remove Saddam from power, while his military was in disarray.

I said then: "The United States must pursue final victory over Saddam. We must use all reasonable diplomatic, economic, and military means to achieve his removal from power. Until that end is realized, the peace and stability of the region will not have been fully accomplished."

In 1997 and 1998, I joined with Senators BOB KERREY, TRENT LOTT, and JOHN MCCAIN to introduce the Iraq Liberation Act, which established in law for the first time that it is U.S. policy to change the regime in Baghdad, not just contain it, and authorized specific assistance, including military training and equipment, to the Iraqi opposition in furtherance of that goal. That declaration was based on Saddam's record of barbarism before, during and after the gulf war, and his repeated violations of U.N. resolutions.

On November 13, 1998, after Saddam ejected the U.N. weapons inspectors, I said, "If we let him block the inspections and the monitoring that he agreed to as a condition of the cease-fire in the gulf war, then there is no doubt that one day soon, he will use weapons of mass destruction, carried by ballistic missiles, against Americans in the Middle East or against our allies."

Since then, months and years have passed and the danger from Baghdad has only grown greater. International pressure—legal, diplomatic, economic, and political—has failed to change Saddam's behavior. Growing stockpiles of Iraqi weapons, toxins, and delivery systems have accumulated. So too has a growing pile of U.N. resolutions which Saddam has persistently defied. They testify to the repeated opportunities the international community has given him to prove he has changed and to his determination nonetheless to remain a recidivist international outlaw.

As President Bush made clear yesterday, this must end. The hour of truth and decision has arrived. This is Saddam's last chance, and the United Nations' best chance to show that its declarations of international law stand for something more than the paper on which they are written. It is time for all nations, law abiding and peace loving, to make clear that, after September 11, the world will not hesitate or equivocate while a tyrant stocks his arsenal and builds alliances with terrorists.

I am grateful that President Bush has effectively begun the critical work of educating the American people, the Congress, and the world about why. Our cause is just. The facts are on our side.

"Making this case" is not a burden. It is the vital responsibility of a democracy's leaders when they have decided that our Nation's security may necessitate war.

It is an extraordinary opportunity, as well, to engage our allies in meeting the greatest security threat of our generation before it is too late—not just for us but for them. An opportunity to make the consequences of repeated defiance of the United Nations painfully clear to Iraq, and to any other government that might follow in its criminal path. An opportunity to show the world's law-abiding, peace-loving Muslim majority—who share the same values we do, the same aspirations we have for our families, and, I might add, the same extremist foes—that as we oppose tyranny and terror, we will actively support them in their fight for freedom and a better life.

President Bush has acted wisely and decisively in asking the United Nations to lead this noble effort, to insist that Iraq obey its resolutions, and to be prepared to enforce them militarily if Iraq does not comply. But if Saddam does not comply, and the United Nations proves itself unwilling or unable to take decisive action, then the United States surely can and must assemble and lead an international military coalition to enforce the United Nations resolutions and liberate the Iraqi people, the Middle East and the world from Saddam Hussein. If we lead, I am confident many other nations will come to our side.

For more than 11 years now, since the early spring of 1991, I have supported the use of military force to disarm Iraq and to remove Saddam Hussein from power. In fact, since the Iraq Liberation Act was passed by Congress and signed by President Clinton in 1998, that has been the law of our land. Therefore, I am fully supportive of such military action now.

I know that many of my colleagues in the Senate believe thoughtfully and sincerely that it would be preferable to give support to the President in two stages, first to endorse yesterday's call for U.N. action, and then to return later, if the U.N. does not act, to authorize the use of America's military power against Iraq. Other Members of the Senate are understandably concerned that a debate on the question of war against Iraq may be unnecessarily politicized if it occurs in the more heated environment of this fall's congressional elections.

But the White House has made it clear it will ask for a resolution of support and authorization in the very near future. Each member of the Senate must, and I am confident will, face that reality in a spirit of non-partisanship, going where their hearts and heads take them, in deciding how best to fulfill our Constitutional responsibility to provide for the common defense in the current circumstances. For my part, I intend to work with Members of both parties in the Senate with the White House to draft a Senate resolution that will receive the broadest possible bipartisan support for the President, as Commander in Chief, as he works to protect our Nation and the world from Saddam Hussein.

On October 22, 1962, as nuclear weapons were being amassed in Cuba, President Kennedy spoke to the Nation and warned Americans of the need to act in the face of the rising threat. President Kennedy's courageous and eloquent words can guide us now. He said on that occasion.

My fellow citizens, let no one doubt that this is a difficult and dangerous effort on which we have set out. No one can see precisely what course it will take or what costs or casualties will be incurred. Many months of sacrifice and self-discipline lie ahead, months in which many threats and denunciations will keep us aware of our dangers. But the greatest danger of all would be to do nothing.

The path we have chosen for the present is full of hazards, as all paths are, but it is the one most consistent with our character and courage as a nation and our commitments around the world. The cost of freedom is always high, and Americans have always paid it but there is one path we shall never choose, and that is the path of surrender or submission.

Our goal is not the victory of might, but the vindication of right—not peace at the expense of freedom, but both peace and freedom, here . . . and, we hope, around the world. God willing, that goal will be achieved.

I yield the floor.

HOMELAND SECURITY ACT OF 2002

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. LINCOLN). Under the previous order, the hour of 12 noon having arrived, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 5005, which the clerk will report by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5005) to establish the Department of Homeland Security, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Lieberman amendment No. 4471, in the nature of a substitute.

Thompson/Warner amendment No. 4513 (to amendment No. 4471), to strike title II, establishing the National Office for Combating Terrorism, and title III, developing the National Strategy for Combating Terrorism and Homeland Security Response for detection, prevention, protection, response, and recover to counterterrorist threats. (By 41 yeas to 55 nays (Vote No. 214), Senate failed to table the amendment.)

Lieberman amendment No. 4534 (to amendment No. 4513), to provide for a National Office for Combating Terrorism, and a National Strategy for Combating Terrorism and the Homeland Security Response.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from West Virginia is to be recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I do not expect to yield, except for questions. I have several thoughts with respect to the pending measure. I can speak at great length. Only the Lord can intervene and make that statement fall. But I don't expect to do that today.

House Republicans yesterday criticized the majority leader and the managers of the bill, Senator LIEBERMAN, for not moving quickly enough to pass legislation to create a new Homeland Security Department. They accuse the Senate Democratic leadership of endangering the country by not passing legislation.

We are going to hear more and more of that. There is no excuse for not giving the people of this country a homeland security bill, said the Speaker of the House yesterday.

Let me say again what the Speaker of the House yesterday said: There is no excuse for not giving the people of this country a homeland security bill.

What a flimsy argument, with all due respect, and I have great respect for the Speaker. I know the rules of the Senate and the House. I am not going to go beyond that quotation in referring to what the Speaker of the House said. I am not going to go beyond that to in any way appear, in any way, and I do not now appear, even presume; I don't want anyone to presume or to assume or to interpret what I say as any personal criticism of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. But what a flimsy argument. We are going to hear that argument; we are going to hear it from other people. It will not be long in coming, if it has not already been expressed by others. But worse than flimsy is the kind of argument we ought not be making. It is an empty argument. It is shallow. That kind of argument cannot stand up under its own weight, that there is no excuse for not giving the people of this country a homeland security bill.

Let us be clear about a few things. Neither the House bill nor the President's proposal would create any new agencies. They are proposing only to move existing agencies from one Department to another. The Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Customs Service, the Coast Guard, all of these agencies currently exist. They are operating. They are funded. And the people are out there working day and night. These agencies have been working around the clock since the terrorist attacks last year on September 11. They have been out there working. They were on the borders. They were patrolling the U.S. waterways last night, the night before, and the night before that, and in all of the nights that have occurred, beginning on September 11, and before.

Whether or not we create a new Homeland Security Department, and regardless of when we do it, these same agencies will continue to protect our homeland. The funds are there. The funds are being used. The people are there on the job. So do not have any concern about that. They are not absent their protest and they are not empty handed. They are not empty handed. They are working.

Now, we must be careful about how we create this Department. And I want to create this Department of Homeland Security; I want to create a Department of Homeland Security. But I am not one who wants to debate the bill on the Senate floor for 2 days and vote on it. That is what the House did, the other body. They have their own rules. I have been a Member, many years ago. I say "many;" many in the context of the ordinary lifetime of many years ago. They have their rules. I don't criticize that at all. They can operate fast. The House can operate quickly, they can operate fast, and so can the Senate, as we did last year when we passed an appropriations bill within 3 days of the fall of the towers, the Twin Towers. We passed an appropriations bill within 3 days, a bill appropriating $40 billion.

The Senate can act fast, too. But thank God, the Senate has different rules from the rules of the other body. And that is no criticism of the rules of the other body. But why the hurry? Why pass a bill in 2 days? Why should the Senate not take a little time and discuss this? The people are out there. Our security people are at their posts. They have been funded. As a matter of fact, the Senate has passed bills coming out of the Appropriations Committee, chaired by me and with the ranking member, Mr. TED STEVENS, a former chairman of that committee, and all of the members acting unanimously—Republicans and Democrats alike. We have provided funds, more funds than the President has been willing to sign into law. We sought to provide $2.5 billion in a bill. All the President needed was to sign his name. That was all he needed. Two point five billion more would have been available—for what? For homeland security. And the President had 30 days in which to sign that measure into law. He refused to sign it into law. So who is in a hurry?

The real threat to the American people is that by transferring 22 agencies and 122,000 employees to this new Department, all at once we will throw our homeland security efforts into a state of chaos and therefore make the country even more susceptible to a terrorist attack. What is more, if we are not careful about how we create this Department and the authorities that we grant to this new Department with regard to its intelligence and law enforcement powers, we could do irreparable harm to the constitutional liberties of the American people.

For this reason, 26 leaders of nationally prominent conservative organizations have urged the Senate to exercise—and I use quotes—"restraint, caution, and deeper scrutiny before hastily granting unnecessary powers to a homeland security bureaucracy."

Let me say that again: 26 leaders of nationally prominent conservative organizations have urged the Senate to exercise "restraint, caution, and deeper scrutiny before hastily granting unnecessary powers to a homeland security bureaucracy."

I say to those who would say there is no excuse for not giving the people of this country a homeland security bill: Don't push this Senate. Don't push it. The Senate will act in due time. Don't push this Senate. Back off. Don't push this Congress as a whole into unwise and hasty decisions that would make this country even more vulnerable to another terrorist attack.

That attack can happen right now, later today, tonight. Why should we hurry in acting on this particular measure? The people are out there. The people in the agencies, the Customs, the Coast Guard, the Naturalization and Immigration Service, at the ports of entry into this country, at the river ports, at the seaports, food inspectors, the health officials, the firemen, the policemen—they have been there. We have done our part, up to this point, by funding those agencies that provide security to the country, to the nuclear facilities, along the border. We have funded them. We have provided more funds than the President himself has been willing to sign a bill for. They have been there. He had days to sign that bill, but he didn't do it. Now the hue and cry is: Pass this bill, the homeland security bill.

The House of Representatives passed it in 2 days. That is all right; their rules will allow them to do that. But I say to the leadership in the House, and to the leadership down at the other end of this avenue: Don't push the Senate. Don't push the Congress into unwise and hasty decisions that would make this country more vulnerable to another terrorist attack. Don't push the American people. Don't push the American people, I say, as I look through those electronic eyes, the lenses there. Don't push those people into handing over their civil liberties.

Now, pay attention. Not much attention has been paid thus far to my expression of concerns about this hasty action on this legislation. But don't push the American people into handing over their civil liberties in the name of homeland security. And some debate on this bill—when I say this bill, the House bill or the Lieberman substitute—debate will surface, will open the eyes of the American people and the eyes of Senators, to the threat of eroding the liberties of the American people.

Don't risk eroding the liberties of the American people. It doesn't sound like passing a homeland security bill would do all that, does it? It has an innocent sounding name, a good name. But let's take a look at the bill. Read closely the bill. Don't push the American people into handing over their civil liberties in the name of homeland security.

Everybody understands when our Nation is put on a wartime footing, we have to put certain limits on ourselves. But take a look at this bill. Take a look at the bill. Don't risk eroding the liberties of the American people and lead the public to believe this proposal is a panacea for homeland defense. That is what the administration is pressing for. That is what those who are pressing the Senate are pressing for when they argue that the Senate is endangering the security of the American people by not quickly passing the President's proposal. I believe that the administration and others who take that position have lost sight of the real goal here, which is not a Homeland Security Department but a more secure homeland.

The President and his administration seem more concerned with scoring a political victory, maybe, than whether a Homeland Security Department will actually work and will actually protect the American people from another terrorist attack.

My interpretation of what is being done is—I have to say that I can be wrong, too. Perhaps I am putting the wrong interpretation on it. Perhaps the President is not more concerned with scoring a political victory than whether the Homeland Security Department will actually protect the American people from another terrorist attack. I don't want to read it that way. I don't want to misinterpret it. I don't want to see the President as doing that, or feeling that way about it. I don't want to even assume that is his motivation. But that is the motivation of some. That is the motivation of some.

Forty-one Senators opposed the Thompson amendment to strike titles II and III from the Lieberman substitute. Yet there is only one Senator on the floor defending those titles. I did not draft the language. Yet I am the only one fighting for it. I am the only one fighting at the moment to retain titles II and III of the bill. I will have something to say about those titles at some point.

When I say titles II and III, I am talking about the Lieberman proposal. Let me briefly explain what my amendment does so those who are listening will understand that my amendment is not seriatim to the bill that has been introduced by Senator LIEBERMAN. My amendment only goes to title I of that bill. There are 24 titles to the bill. My amendment only goes to title I of Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill. I am not yet addressing the House bill. That is far worse. The House bill is really a poison pill.

Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill has 24 titles listed. My amendment only goes to title I.

Mr. LIEBERMAN's proposal has encompassed in the bill that was reported by the committee a Department of Homeland Security. I am for that. My amendment does not do otherwise in support of a Department of Homeland Security.

The Lieberman proposal provides for a Secretary. My amendment provides for a Secretary.

The Lieberman proposal provides for a Deputy Secretary. My amendment provides for a Deputy Secretary.

The Lieberman proposal provides for seven Under Secretaries. My proposal provides for seven Under Secretaries.

The Lieberman proposal provides for five Assistant Secretaries in title I. My amendment provides for five Assistant Secretaries in title I.

The Lieberman proposal proposes six directorates. My proposal provides for six directorates in title I.

There is another directorate provided for in title XI. I don't touch that at the moment. My amendment does not touch that. We are only talking about title I in my amendment.

Thus far, the same superstructure that is provided for by Mr. LIEBERMAN is provided by the amendment which I have introduced—the same thing; no change; nothing different about that.

The Lieberman proposal provides for a huge transaction here, which Mr. LIEBERMAN has told me involves 28 agencies and offices. We have heard the figure 22 banded around here. I have seen those all over the press. I accepted that figure for a while, until I asked Mr. LIEBERMAN how many agencies are we really talking about. He said: I have counted them, and I count 28 agencies and offices, and 170,000 Federal workers being transferred to this Department.

I don't say anything criticizing Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill. I am comparing my amendment in certain respects with the bill which was reported by the Senate committee which Mr. LIEBERMAN chairs and of which Mr. THOMPSON is ranking member.

That bill provides for all this huge transaction—all of this movement of people, all of this shifting around of people in the agencies, or among the agencies in which they are presently working. And it provides for all this to be done—for these agencies to be shifted into the new Department.

Their letterheads will probably change. Their telephone numbers will probably change. The offices in which they serve today may or may not change. They may be moved up Pennsylvania Avenue to a new place. They may have to move their desks and their telephones and their computer systems. Their culture will change. They may not have the same associates. They may not be located in the same location. Their telephone numbers may be changed. Their missions may be changed. Their assignments may be changed. Their objectives, overall, may be changed. We have seen the objectives of the FBI, for example, change since the September 11 attacks.

Mr. DAYTON. Madam President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Just in a moment, if I may, and then I will yield.

They are undergoing all of these changes. This will all be done within a period of 13 months following the signing by the President of the act. Thirteen months after that act becomes law, all this will be completed. My amendment does not change that calendar date as to when this massive transaction will be completed.

My amendment provides that at the end of the 13 months this is envisioned as to be done the same way, the same thing—not the same way, but the same time period over all. Thirteen months occurs with respect to the Lieberman bill and with respect to my amendment, if my amendment is adopted—the same time period, 13 months.

So what is the difference? Under the bill, the committee bill, once the Senate passes whatever it passes, and that is sent to conference, and it comes back, and it is signed into law, Congress is out of it except with respect to the appropriations that will go forward to the agency, to the new Department. When the Senate passes this bill and sends it to conference, for all purposes of amending that process in the Senate, it is over. When it goes to conference, whatever comes back from the conference between the two Houses—the Republican-controlled House and the Democratic-controlled Senate—whatever comes back from that conference is it.

We have one more—one more—chance, and that is in voting up or down on that conference report. When that conference report comes back to the Senate, it may not even look like the bill that passed the Senate. Ha, ha, ha. Now, Senators, you may have an entirely different breed of legislation on this bill when it comes back. It is there. You can vote it up or down. But, Senators, you will not be able to offer any amendments to that conference report. You can vote it down, you can vote it up, but you cannot change it.

It may be virtually an entirely new proposition. Who knows what the conferees will agree to. Senators, you are having your last chance here when we vote, eventually, on this bill, if we do.

So why, why, why should Senators just roll over and play dead, as it were; perhaps come to the floor, make a short speech—of 10 minutes, 15 minutes—in support of the bill, or a short speech in opposition to it? Why should Senators have to do that within the next week, let's say, or 2 weeks or 3 weeks? Why should Senators have to do that before a new Congress sits in January?

Let me repeat, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Customs Service, the Coast Guard, other existing agencies that provide security to our country and to us—all of these agencies currently exist. The agencies have been working around the clock since the terrorist attacks last year. They were on the borders. They were patrolling U.S. waterways.

Whether or not we create a new Department of Homeland Security in September, whether or not we create a Department of Homeland Security in October, whether or not we create a Department of Homeland Security in November, whether or not we create a Department of Homeland Security in December, these same agencies will continue to protect our homeland.

Now, back to my amendment, and then, shortly, I will yield to the Senator for a question.

What is the difference between the bill, then, and my amendment? I have already said as to the superstructure, as to the overall time period of 13 months, we are in lockstep, we are in lockstep with Mr. LIEBERMAN and his committee.

Now, here is the difference. Here comes the difference: Remember, this is all to be done within 13 months. Under the Lieberman committee proposal, once this bill that is before the Senate—once whatever the Senate passes, and it is concurred in by both Houses—whatever package is sent to the President, and he signs it, these things are going to take place.

We are going to do it in the same period of time, but under the Byrd amendment, all of this chaotic happening is not going to occur at once. We are not going to pass the bill and send it to the President and say: Now, Mr. President, it's all yours. We're going to step off to the sideline. Congress is not going to have any more part in it. We have passed the bill. It sets up the new Department by legislation. It deals with 22 or 28 or 30—that many—agencies and offices. So here it is. Here is the bill. Here is our bill. It's yours. Under the Lieberman approach, it's yours. You have 13 months to do it in. Have at it. Good luck. Good luck, Mr. President. Here's the package. It's all yours.

Can Senators imagine the chaos that will occur in trying to do all of this in a way that is other than systematic and orderly?

My amendment provides an orderly process whereby on February 3—if the amendment is included in the act—on February 3, the Secretary of the new Department would send up his recommendations as to what agencies, what functions, what assignments, and so on, would need to be carried out to complete the flushing out of this skeleton, of putting into effect the establishment of the first directorate.

Remember, I said that there were directorates in the Lieberman bill. There are Directorates in the Byrd amendment.

The Secretary of the Department of Homeland Defense, the new Department—which will be established by this law, if it becomes law—the Secretary sends up his policies, his recommendations as to what agencies shall go into this new Directorate. That is on February 3.

The recommendations of the Secretary will be sent to the committee in the Senate and the committee in the House that have jurisdiction over this subject matter. Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee and Mr. THOMPSON's committee, their committee will still be in the mix. Their committee will still be front and center.

Under my amendment, we are not going to say: OK, Mr. President, here it is. Have a good time. Good luck to you. Enjoy what you are doing. We are just going to move off to the side.

Our committee is going to say: All right, we have a department. We are going to create this first directorate. We are going to have this new Secretary of Homeland Defense send up his policy recommendations to the House and Senate. They will be referred to the committees of jurisdiction, Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee in the Senate, and his counterpart committee in the House. And those committees will take these policy recommendations that have been sent up by the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, and they will treat those as recommendations for a bill.

They will look over those policies. They will debate them in the committee. They will report, ultimately, a bill which accepts the policies or which amends those policies.

There will be, in my concept, an expedited procedure where that bill does not just go through the committee and lie there. But within 120 days after the policies have been sent to the Congress by the Secretary, the Secretary then, 120 days later, or on June 3, would be required to send up his recommendations for fleshing out the next two directorates which are named in Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill also.

The second proposal, there will be the Directorate of Intelligence and the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure Protection. Those directorates are named in the Lieberman bill.

But we say, now, the first directorate that we will deal with will be the directorate of Border and Transportation Protection. All of these directorates are the same directorates as are provided for in the Lieberman bill. But we are saying that the first directorate to be decided upon and to be fleshed out will be the Directorate of Border Transportation and Protection.

That is February 3. So there is 120 days for action to be taken in moving those agencies that are involved in the Directorate of Border and Transportation Protection into the Department. One hundred twenty days later, June 3, the Secretary will send up his recommendations for the Directorate of Intelligence and for the Directorate of Critical Infrastructure Protection; 120 days later, or October 1, the Secretary would send up his recommendations. And in each of these three phases, Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee would take the recommendations of the Secretary. And in each, the Lieberman committee will report to the Senate a bill containing the recommendations of the Secretary. They may have been amended in the committee. They may have been modified somewhat. But Mr. LIEBERMAN's committee would then report that and so would the House committee report that bill to their respective houses, and then the respective houses would take up the bill under expedited procedures, as I conceive it, expedited procedures. So there could be no filibuster.

That committee can be discharged from the bill. If the committee cannot report the bill, the committee will be discharged, and it will come to the full body, in the House or in the Senate, whichever is having a problem.

So we have three phases, each phase of 4 months. The first phase will take a look at that, the committee does, the Senate does. There you go, you have a directorate in being, one directorate, the agencies, the number of people that will be moved into that particular directorate, that will be going forward.

When it comes time, on June 3, for us to take a look at the policies, at the recommendations sent by the Secretary ensuring the next two directorates, we will have the advantage of seeing the mistakes, seeing the errors, seeing the faults, seeing the shortcomings of the way these agencies were moved into the first directorate. So we profit by staying in the mix. Congress profits, and the people represented by the Congress profit.

Perhaps I should not use the word "profit." They "benefit" from the experience in fleshing out that first directorate. Then comes along the second and third directorates, every 4 months, and the same thing happens. And then the fourth and fifth directorates come along 4 months later, and the same thing obtains. The recommendations go to the two committees. They are reported out under expedited procedures. Each House would be required to go to the measure under expedited procedures, and it is passed.

Congress stays in the mix. Why Congress? Because Congress is made up of the elected, directly elected, not sent here by any electoral college but directly elected by the people of Arkansas or the people of Minnesota or West Virginia. So Congress stays in the mix.

It is phased. There is an orderly process of doing what Mr. LIEBERMAN wants to do and over the same time period. So we come out at the end, 13 months; we have created this Department that Mr. LIEBERMAN creates. We have created six of the seven directorates that Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill creates, and we have set up the superstructure. We have appointed the same number of directors, the same number of Secretaries, the same number of under secretaries, the same number of assistant secretaries—all of it.

We take Mr. LIEBERMAN's proposal, but we say we won't just turn it over to the administration the day after it is passed. We will go off fishing, if it is summertime, or perhaps we can go play golf. We will just quit. That is the responsibility of the administration, his bill says.

Mine says, oh, no. No. That is the responsibility of Congress and the administration—Congress working with the administration; the administration working with Congress in an orderly process. The people in 28 agencies won't have to be moving their desks all at once. It will be some now; 4 months later, some more; 4 months later, the rest.

What's wrong with that? That provides an orderly process. Madam President, I think at this point I have explained enough of what my amendment does to yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota for a question. We will have plenty of opportunity later to explain what my amendment does. I want people to go home this weekend to know what my amendment does. That is it in a nutshell.

I don't claim to be a medicine man. I don't claim to be a magician. I don't say watch what is in my right hand and don't watch what the left hand is doing. It is there. This is it.

Yesterday, included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was a brief statement explaining the amendment. I also tried to explain it on the floor today. I have been up all night and the night before with my wife in the hospital. I sat right in her room all night, watching her and reading my Constitution again. It is a little hard to make things quite come together as one would like when one has lost sleep. I merely mention that so that everybody will know that I have tried to explain the purpose of my amendment, but not under the best conditions.

I yield now to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota for a question only, retaining my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAUCUS). The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia, whose explanation has been very clear—last night and also today. I trust the Senator's amendment comes from wisdom gained from many years of watching executive branch organizations, new departments brought together, and, of course, the Senator has the sweep of history both in this institution, and also I recall hearing the Senator last week quote a Roman, and I must confess a week later, whose name and statement I have forgotten, but which the Senator has remembered for all these years. It was something to the effect that reorganizations are just another way of delaying and confusing matters.

I wonder if the Senator can share some of that experience gained and the insight into other organizations or reorganizations of Federal agencies, and how that might have suggested some of the oversight that the Senator has in his amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the very dedicated, patriotic, able, and distinguished Senator for the diligence with which he pursues his responsibilities as a U.S. Senator. I appreciate very much what he has said with reference to me. Those remarks are very flattering. They might, if left alone, appear to be more than exactly the fact. I don't have a lot of experience, but I have seen some departments created during my tenure. I remember the new Department of Health, Education and Welfare, I believe it was called. I remember I was here and voted for that Department; the new Department of Energy, I voted for that; the new Department of Education, I voted for that; the new Department of Veterans Affairs, I voted for that.

Now, as to reorganizations, I can take a look at recent experience as to reorganizations. The administration, since the September 11 attacks, has announced at least 3 major governmental reorganizations prior to the President's proposal to create a new Homeland Security Department.

Last December, in response to numerous media reports criticizing the Nation's porous borders, the administration proposed the consolidation of the Customs Service and the Immigration and Naturalization Service within the Justice Department. Last March, following the mailing of two student visas by the INS to two of the September 11 hijackers 6 months after they crashed planes into the World Trade Center Towers, the administration announced that the INS, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, would be reorganized—split into a services bureau and a separate enforcement bureau.

Last May, following the reports about intelligence failures by the FBI, the administration announced a reorganization of the FBI. These reorganizations have either produced very little, or they have been replaced by subsequent additional reorganization proposals. It is as if we are spinning around in circles, with little left to show for all of the energy that we have expended, little left but dizziness. To avoid a similar fate of this new department, which I support—I am not opposed to creating a new Department of Homeland Security. As a matter of fact, I urged that months ago.

The story behind that, which I recounted more than once, about the efforts of Senator STEVENS and myself to have Tom Ridge, the Director of Homeland Security, which was created by Presidential Executive order—not by statute—come up and testify before the Senate Appropriations Committee on the budget, on the homeland security agency's budget, he would not come. I have gone through that ad nauseam, time and time again. I may go through it again.

Right now, it is sufficient to say that we had an unfortunate experience there. So I suggested that we have the Homeland Security Director be a person appointed by the President, and with the consent of the Senate, requiring Senate confirmation of that position, that officer. I recommended that, and we could not get him to come by invitation, the President having put his foot down hard and in concrete, being immovable, claiming that "this is my staff person, this is my adviser. He is not required to go up there." Well, with all of the responsibilities and the authorities that were being assumed or carried out by the new Homeland Security Director, Mr. Ridge—he was going all over the country speaking to chambers of commerce, explaining his work and the things we were doing and the things we needed to do to secure our homeland—he would appear anywhere, anytime, apparently, because I read of many of his appearances around the country.

Each time I read about his being here, there, or out in Montana, or wherever, I thought: Why can't he come up before the people's branch and tell the people's representatives what he wants, what he needs, what this country needs, what the people need for their security and safety? Why doesn't he come before the elected representatives of the people? Oh, yes, he is an adviser to the President, but the President has lots of them. He is on the staff of the President, yes. But this man is carrying a much larger bag of responsibilities than the ordinary staff person, the ordinary adviser to the President.

I know the President has to have advisers to whom he can talk. They do not need to come before Congress. I told the administration: Look, we are not going to ask Mr. Ridge, your Homeland Security Director, who was appointed pursuant to a Presidential order—we are not going to ask him about his private conversations with the President. We are not interested.

We want to ask this man, who is the point man for the administration on homeland security—he is the person who is running around telling everybody what it is. He is the man running around all over the country spilling his beans to this agency, that agency, whatever agency, whatever committee or whatever group of people, fraternal order or civic order, whatever it might be—he is the man running all over the country talking to the people everywhere and going up to Canada. He is the man who has gone down to Mexico and talked about various and sundry subjects pertaining to border controls, surely, and so on.

Why can't he come to Jenkins Hill, on which this great architectural structure has been for 200 years or thereabouts? Why can't he come here and answer questions by the people's elected representatives in the Congress? After all, it is the people's money. He is being paid out of the pockets of the American people, this Mr. Ridge is. Pennies do not fall from heaven. He is being paid by the taxpayers, and the President is being paid by the taxpayers. Who pays him?

He says this man cannot come up, this man does not have to go up to Congress. That is the President talking. Who pays him? The people. The people. Who pays us? The people. So the people are entitled to know a little about this, about how their moneys are being spent.

That is why we have public hearings in the Appropriations Committee and by the subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee. The hearings are in public. The hearings are open. There can be a huge audience out there in some of those massive, handsome rooms over in the Senate office buildings. People can hear. They can see on television. They can hear over the radio. They can hear their people, their representatives, and they can hear the President's man, all of us being paid by the people, some of us being elected by the people.

But some of those who testify are not elected by the people. Tom Ridge is not elected by the people; he has not been elected by the people, except to run as Governor of Pennsylvania and run for membership in the other body, which he has done. He has been Governor of Pennsylvania. He has been a Member of the other body of the Congress. So he is a man who knows a great deal about the subject matter, and he has thrown himself into his work. He is the expert. He knows the answers to a lot of these questions. He is a very intelligent man, a very articulate person. He is the person in charge.

Why shouldn't the Congress hear him? They said: We will be happy to send him up for briefings. He can meet with Senators and House Members and have little briefings, and we can tell you all about it. That is not the point. His portfolio is much greater than the portfolio of an average staff person of the President or an "adviser" to the President.

He is dealing with a subject that is virtually brand new to the American people. Last September 11 brought to the view of the American people something we had not seen before, something we had not experienced before, and opened to all of us a new kind of world, and the world is changed forever. Our country in some ways is changed forever. Every person in this country—man, woman, boy, or girl—their life is changed forever. It is not going to be a short time. The President himself has said this war—they call it a war; it is a different kind of war—this war is going to last a long time. It is going to take us a long time.

Does anyone think we are going to get all the terrorists ever? No. We have not even gotten Bin Laden yet. We do not know where he is. He may be alive; he may not be alive. But whether he is alive or not, his agents are spread, we hear, in 60 countries or more. This is something big, and it affects our lives, it affects our work in the Senate.

Why shouldn't the person who is the top man in the United States with reference to homeland security appear before a Senate committee, the Appropriations Committee? We are not seeking to put him on the spot or to embarrass the President by some question, such as: Tell me about your private conversations with your President. We are not going to do that.

The Senate Appropriations Committee has been in business for 135 years. This committee was established in 1867. Think of that. Two years after the Civil War ended—1867. Fifty percent, or more—a very high percentage—a great majority of some of our students in the polls do not know when the Civil War ended; they do not know that it even occurred in this country.

But we know that in 1867 this Appropriations Committee in the Senate was established. Before that, the Finance Committee in the Senate, which had been established in 1816, did the appropriations work, as well as raising taxes, and so on. In 1867, the Finance Committee did that work no longer. Seven Members of the Senate were appointed to this new Appropriations Committee. I believe it was seven Members. In any event, the Appropriations Committee has been doing business ever since.

The way we have done business is the right way. We get testimony; we get people to appear before the subcommittees. There are 13 subcommittees of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and every one of those subcommittees has subpoena power in that Appropriations Committee. That committee has subpoena power—the Appropriations Committee. No wonder everyone wants on the Appropriations Committee.

That Appropriations Committee deals with the public purse, and by virtue of this Constitution, the power of the purse is vested in the legislative branch. Article I, section 9, of this Constitution, which I hold in my hand, vests the power of the purse in this body. So the right way to do it is to have public hearings.

The people need to know what questions are asked. The people need to know what answers are being given.

It is out there. Everybody can see it. Everybody can hear it. There is a record of it.

Then when the appropriations bill is put together, the testimony of these witnesses is read again. There are hearings printed. Hearings will be available to members of the Appropriations Committee of what was said during the testimony by Mr. Ridge, if he had come before the committee. And when the bill is taken up on the floor, there are the printed hearings. They are available. There is a committee report—aha, a committee report on that bill—for the benefit of the Senators who are to vote on the bill.

That committee report is important. It is really laughable that the administration would propose that they would be willing to send up this man, who is the know-all, as far as anyone can know, about homeland security and what is being done by our Government, or what we hope to do—So the American people need to know that. The committee needs to know that. But he is going to come up in a private briefing? That is the administration's proposal: No, we will not let him come up there and get before that committee. No, no, no. He is the President's man. We are not going to let him come up. You do not call Condoleezza Rice. He is in the same position.

No, he is not. You cannot equate the one with the other in this respect.

So the committee is going to write a report. How important is a committee report? Suppose there is a court case at some point with respect to a provision in a bill. One of the things the court would need to know is what was said in the committee. In order to get the intention of the legislators, in order for the court to interpret the intention of the legislators with respect to that particular bill or that particular provision, the court may want to resort to a committee report. That has happened before in this country.

What committee report is going to be around where we have a shadow government, as it were, with the administration officials coming up to the Senate and talking in private, behind closed doors? Oh, the doors can be open, that is all right, but there is no record. The people out there do not see what is going on. What kind of government is that?

This is an open government—it is supposed to be—with respect to its appropriations, with respect to our bills. How utterly foolish the administration was to take that utterly foolish position in refusing to allow Tom Ridge to come before the Appropriations Committee of the Congress. That was utterly foolish. It poisoned the well.

The result was a provision which Senator STEVENS and I wrote into an appropriations bill providing that the Director of Homeland Security would indeed require confirmation by the Senate of the United States, and that appropriations bill came before the Senate not too long ago. Not one finger was raised against it. Not one Senator rose to strike that language from the bill.

It was in the bill. Everybody knew it. The staff of every Senator saw it. They knew it, or they should have known it. Not one effort was made to remove it. That overall appropriations bill passed the Senate, including that provision, by a vote of 71 to 22—quite a secure majority, 71 to 22. I will try to remember that. That bill was passed, including that provision.

I say to the distinguished senior Senator from Montana who presides today, that bill passed the Senate by a vote of 71 to 22, and went to conference.

Oh, wait a minute. The administration suddenly sees on the horizon, here comes this bill, here comes this provision. Oh, Mr. Director, Mr. Tom Ridge, you know the Senate has—here it is right here, this appropriations bill. They are going to make you come up there. They are going to make you come up there.

Mr. President, look at this bill here. The Senate is going to make this man come before the Senate of the United States in the Appropriations Committee. The President will not be able to say, well, he is an adviser of mine; he cannot come. The President will not be able to put his feet in concrete and say, this man is on my staff and my staff people do not have to come.

Mr. President, it is in this bill. I do not care what you say. You can veto the bill, if you want to. Do you want to veto that appropriations bill? Do you want to veto that appropriations bill because it has that provision? Then you will have to explain to the American people why you will not let this man go before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and answer questions of interest to the American people, questions dealing with their money, the money they pay in taxes to pay your salary, Mr. President, and to pay your salary, Mr. Ridge.

Oh, you cannot hide behind that desk any longer. That part of the shadow government just will not work any longer because this legislation is going to require you to have that man of yours come up there.

And you know what happened? Then down in the subterranean caverns, in the ill-lighted recesses of the bowels of the White House, four solemn individuals met one day and there was hatched the egg to provide the homeland security proposal. There was the egg. I do not care how warm the egg is, it still takes it 3 weeks to hatch. Try it sometime—3 weeks. But it did not take 3 weeks for that egg to hatch, not in that White House.

The administration wanted to get out front on this provision that was in the appropriations bill, written in there by Senators BYRD and STEVENS and supported by every member of that Appropriations Committee and not questioned by any Member of the Senate.

It is on its way to conference, Mr. President. I tell you, we have to act quickly, and the President did act quickly. They came out and unveiled this great proposal that came to life like Minerva who sprang full grown and fully armed from the forehead of Jove. That is how it came about.

Then there was Aphrodite who sprang from the ocean foam and was carried by a seashell or a leaf to a nearby island and then went on to Mount Olympus and appeared before the gods, and the gods were overcome by the beauty of Aphrodite. All of that happened. And the same way with this egg that hatched, it just sprang into being all of a sudden and here it was, this massive proposal by the President. He unveiled it, and they were quite successful in taking the people's eyes away from some of the other things that were demanding attention in the newspapers of the time. They took those things off the front page.

Here was a new Department. Since then, the President and all the people in his administration, the King's men and women, have been out there saying: Pass this bill, pass this bill, which was hatched by four individuals. Let me see if I can remember their names. Mr. Ridge was one. Mr. Mitch Daniels was another. He is the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. Mr. Gonzalez, I believe he is the President's counsel, and Mr. Card, I believe. I hope I am right. I am. Someone nodded in the affirmative to me and so I am. There it was in the newspapers. Those four gentlemen, very reputable persons, people of high caliber and unblemished reputations, as far as I know, and this was their idea.

Now compare that group of four, working in the shadows, the dim light. The lights may have gone out, but I expect there might have been candles there, or perhaps oil lamps. I can just see the shadows, the figures of the shadows moving back and forth in those caverns, on the walls of those caverns, as the men remonstrated, and said this: We ought to have this, we ought to have that. Whatever they say. Anyhow, that was hatched down there.

Now that was a different committee. Four individuals, from the committee that wrote the Declaration of Independence. By the way, I carry that Declaration of Independence right here in my shirt pocket. Who was on the committee that wrote that Declaration of Independence? Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, and Livingston. So there were five. My, my, look at those giants, five giants who wrote the Declaration of Independence. Had they been arrested by the British for treason, they could have been sent to England and they could have been hanged. And so could the others who signed that Declaration of Independence. The signers are all listed in this little book I hold in my hand.

They were doing things that challenged. They were doing things for which they were willing to give their lives. They would have given their lives, had they been tried for treason. Those men committed treason against the government under which they then lived. The far reaches of the Parliament's hand, the King's hand, from Great Britain, from England, could have snatched them, taken their fortunes, taken them to England, tried them, taken their lives. So they pledged their lives, their fortunes, their sacred vows.

How about those four in the White House? Were they pledging their lives and fortune? Quite a different committee, I must say.

Anyhow, with all respect to the four men who are public servants, and who are doing their best, as they see it, for their President—quite a different matter.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield to the distinguished Senator for a question, retaining my right to the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I have listened carefully to your dissertation of the past and the responsibilities that all of us have to make sure we uphold the Constitution. And I also recognize that what the administration was doing in this regard, and agree with the Senator that what happened at that time, was most unfortunate.

Is the Senator aware the administration has compared the creation of the Department of Homeland Security to the reorganization of the Government set forth by the passage of the National Security Act of 1947?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, allusions to that act, the National Security Act, which was created in 1947 after a period of at least 3 or 4 years. This Senator is aware of the allusions that have been made to that act and the references that have been equated, the reorganization of the Government under the Bush Administration and how it is compared.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I have done some research on the creation of the Department of Defense that I would like to share with my friend. I found the research helpful in putting the current debate in context.

First, I agree this proposal is similar in scope to the 1947 debate, but there are also some notable differences between the 1947 debate and today's dialog.

Mr. BYRD. I would like to hear those.

Mr. JEFFORDS. The Bush administration proposal and the Lieberman substitute we are debating represent a dramatic reorganization of the Federal Government. The most obvious difference between the process in the 1940s and this summer is time. The creation of the Department of Defense was a collaborative process between the executive branch and Congress, measured not in days and weeks but years.

Proposals for combining the military services were first considered in Congress in 1944. President Harry Truman became keenly involved in the effort and sent a message to Congress at the end of 1945 proposing the creation of the Department of National Defense. Congressional hearings were held on the matter throughout the following year. In 1947, the President sent legislation to Congress that, after additional hearings and congressional input, was finally passed and signed into law in July of 1947.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is certainly laying down a very impressive premise for the question which he will ultimately ask. Please go ahead. The Senate needs to hear this.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Additionally, Congress made significant changes in the Department of Defense in 1949. Thus, the thoughtful and deliberate process to create an effective Department of Defense did not happen in a summer, a year, or even one session of Congress.

Mr. BYRD. How about that. Right.

Mr. JEFFORDS. It took 5 years and was founded upon discussion, debate, and compromise.

Mr. BYRD. Say that again.

Mr. JEFFORDS. It was founded upon discussion, debate, and compromise.

Let me be clear that I am not advocating we take 5 years to debate the proposal before us, only that we ought to be thoughtful and deliberative. This current reorganization will affect the lives of every American for years to come. Unfortunately, the current administration has made it clear it will veto any legislation that is not almost identical to its proposal.

Mr. BYRD. Say that again, please.

Mr. JEFFORDS. It is clear it will veto any legislation that is not almost identical to its proposal.

Recently, President George Bush, speaking about this legislation, said: The Senate had better get it right.

I agree with the President that we do have a solemn responsibility to consider, debate, amend, and strengthen this legislation. I am sure the President understands that the Senate's deliberate consideration of this bill is an integral part of the process of "getting it right."

As the President's father said, a time of historic change is no time for recklessness.

Mr. BYRD. Right again. What was that?

Mr. JEFFORDS. A time of historic change is no time for recklessness.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. JEFFORDS. As my friend from West Virginia knows, when Congress created the Department of Defense, the affected agencies had input into the process.

Here is another significant difference between the development of the Department of Defense and the current debate over homeland security.

In the 1940s, the executive branch agencies affected by the proposed reorganization were participants in the process. The Army, the Navy, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff proposed specific plans for reorganizations as early as 1945. And the Army and Navy were consulted prior to the President submitting draft legislation in 1947, 2 years later. This cooperative approach in developing a workable new Department contrasts starkly with the way the administration developed homeland security draft legislation.

A small group of advisers, which the Senator has explained well, working in secret in the White House, developed the present Bush proposal. Members of Congress and the Secretaries of the affected Cabinet agencies were reportedly not even informed about the proposal.

Mr. BYRD. How about that.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Amazing.

As I have said many times, I understand, in the wake of the horrific events of September 11, we would look for ways to strengthen our Nation's defense to prevent any further catastrophe. I fully support that goal, but we must be cautious, to make sure that we work to correct what went wrong and not interfere with what went right.

We know what went wrong, and I firmly hope we, as a nation, will develop a comprehensive plan to address the shortcomings of our intelligence gathering and communication efforts which, to me, were the core of the problem.

Mr. BYRD. Right on. Right on.

Let me hear that said again. I want to be sure I remember that.

Mr. JEFFORDS. We know what went wrong, and I firmly hope that we, as a nation, will develop comprehensive plans to address the shortcomings in our intelligence gathering and communication efforts.

Because of the similarity of the September 11 attacks and the attack on Pearl Harbor, over 60 years ago—which I am just barely old enough to remember, being 5 at that time, but I remember that day to this moment—we should remember the finding of the Joint Congressional Committee that investigated Pearl Harbor, that:

... the security of the nation can be ensured only through ... centralization of responsibility in those charged with handling intelligence.

That, to me, is the key that we have to look at for a resolution of this problem.

I hope we will learn a lesson after the tragic events that occurred on September 11. Correcting intelligence failures must be the hallmark of any new Department of Homeland Security.

I thank my colleague for yielding, and I look forward to continuing this debate and considering this important legislation.

In closing, I hope we will take our time in creating this new Department and that we will protect the role of the legislative branch throughout this process. I commend Senator LIEBERMAN for leading debate on this important topic, but I also thank my friend from Virginia. In the 200-year history of this body, there has never been a more vigilant defender—

Mr. BYRD. Would the Senator mind repeating that and addressing his remarks to the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator—

Mr. JEFFORDS. Yes, right. I also thank my friend, the Senator from West Virginia, Mr. BYRD. In the 200-year history of this body, there has never been a more vigilant defender of the legislative branch than the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator. I didn't want him to repeat what he said for that part. But I wanted him just—

Mr. JEFFORDS. I wanted to repeat it for that part.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator. He referred to this Senator as the Senator from Virginia. That was inadvertent and it was pretty much out of levity, in a way, that I wanted him to get the States right and recognize me as a Senator from West Virginia, which he knows. People do have that slip of the tongue. It happens many times.

But what the Senator said—putting that entirely aside—is what I have been saying. We need to take the time and not act in haste. That is what we are being pushed to do, and the press, the media has not paid enough attention, in my judgment, overall, to this bill and to the Lieberman substitute. Somebody hasn't been listening.

My colleagues, I do not believe, have been listening. That is why I said slow down a little bit here.

I am grateful to the divine hand that brought these Senators to the floor. At least this Senator from West Virginia is getting a little attention. It is not that I want attention, but this Senator from West Virginia is getting a little attention as to what he is saying, why this stubborn guy from West Virginia—I will call him a guy—this stubborn upstart from West Virginia is trying to stop the train, trying to stop our hurrying forth, acting in the least amount of time, acting almost immediately to give to the President this legislation creating a Department of Homeland Security.

At last, at last, at last two of my colleagues have asked questions today. I am sure there will be other Senators who will do the same, now that I am beginning to break through, get through the ice, get through the veil that this is a measure that is vitally important to every individual in this country today, every man, woman, boy, and girl. It goes beyond just creating a Department of Homeland Security.

That is what the distinguished Senator said. He is talking about intelligence. He is getting into the intelligence area of what is involved here. It is much more involved than just creating a Department of Homeland Security. I am for that. I have been for it. But I am glad, I am grateful to the distinguished Senator for what he has said here. He has capsuled this very large subject with respect to the National Security Act, how time passed, the steps that were taken, the pauses that occurred, the scrutiny that was given, and the fact that the heads of the military branches—the Navy and the Army and others—their thoughts were acquired, their recommendations were acquired, their advice was sought as to the creation of this new department of defense. So they had input into it.

It wasn't done overnight. It didn't grow up like the prophet's gourd, overnight. It took time and that was a wise move.

I thank the Senator for going into that particular aspect of this in depth. He has been thorough in what he has said with respect to the creation of the department of defense. I am grateful and the American people can be grateful to the Senator for what he has said, what he has contributed here today in just the few minutes he held the floor and he zeroed right in on one of the things that I eventually wanted to get to, and there are others.

I am not going to say anything further now, if the Senator wants to ask a further question.

Mr. JEFFORDS. No. I am very pleased to have been able to have this time with the Senator, and I look forward to working with him.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator. I am delighted. I am just delighted that he came to the floor and made this statement. I am delighted that he believes we should take our time. Not an exorbitant amount of time, not an inordinate amount of time, but take time, the necessary time to scrutinize this proposal and act. It is not so important that we act quickly; it is important that we do it right. That is all I have been saying. Let's do this right.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. I again thank the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DAYTON. I think the Senator from Vermont is very enlightening as to the timing of that crisis—also following right in the aftermath of World War II, certainly another time where this country faced a very grave threat, leading into the beginning of the Korean war where the country again faced another enormous threat.

I wonder if the Senator can comment on how that experience should be instructive to the Senator's amendment. It seems the Senator has foreseen the kind of timetable of bringing back from these various directorates their preliminary plans that would lead to a far more insightful and, I think, constructive reorganization than the one that is contemplated by the proposal of the administration.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I think I grasped the question that was asked. It was well put. I think I have a problem with the Senator's microphone and where he is standing. Would he shorten his question?

Mr. DAYTON. The Senator from West Virginia has an amendment which would seem to embody the intention of what occurred post-World War II, which was the sequential development of a department of such critical importance. I wonder if there is a parallel to be drawn there to instruct all of us that the approach being recommended by the learned Senator from West Virginia is the one that is going to likely produce the much more beneficial result to the country rather than the helter-skelter that would go forward without the Senator's direction.

Mr. BYRD. Absolutely. The Senator, by his question, has really answered his question. We saw that the country took more time in the 1940s to create a Department of Defense. It took time. It had the input of the heads of the military branches and their advice. Mr. Truman took time. It wasn't enacted during the heat of battle. The thought was there. The suggestion was there. Committees held hearings, and buildings were proposed during that time. But it was after the war that the Department of Defense was created. It wasn't all done in a hurry. There was need to do something along those lines. Many Members of Congress introduced legislation to carry out the results, to create and reorganize the Government in that respect. The military people who were directly involved, they had input.

We may be in a situation here where we can't wait 4 years, or 3 years, or 2 years, as was the case there. But there is a direct parallel. They took their time. In taking their time, it didn't mean they were just dragging their feet. They took time. During the time that was passing, they talked about this; they got the advice of the military. They were preparing all along their action—but do it right; not do it quickly but do it right.

The same is true here in many respects. The point is that we must not do it quickly. We are being urged in the Senate: Get on with it, pass it. The President, with his backdrop as he goes around the country and appears before the military organizations and others: Do it, do it, do it now.

There was a little ad I used to hear on television not too many months ago: Do it now; do it here. Do it now; do it here. Well, that is what I am hearing: Do it now, do it now, do it now, do it here, do it quickly. I am saying no, no. The object is, do it right—not do it by this weekend or not do it by next weekend, and not to do it in a hurry, do it right.

This is a far-reaching measure. If this act is passed as the administration wants it passed, believe you me, it is going to affect the civil liberties of Americans. That is what I am saying. Just hold on a minute.

In the bill by Mr. LIEBERMAN that came out of his committee—I will refer to that momentarily to just kind of jar the senses of Members of the Senate who have not been paying very much attention—many of them. They are busy people. They have their attentions drawn to other very important matters all the time. There is just not enough time allotted to us as Senators to do our work right in every case. There just isn't enough time.

I just want to read one provision from Mr. LIEBERMAN's bill. It is on page 186 of the bill. It is title III that sets up a national strategy for combating terrorism and the homeland security response.

Under title III of the committee bill, in section 301 designated "Strategy," under the first paragraph:

The Secretary and the Director—

That means the Director of the Department of Homeland Security, and the Secretary of Homeland Security—shall develop the National Strategy for Combating Terrorism and Homeland Security Response—

They shall do this. I will read it—for detection, prevention, protection, response and recovery to counterterrorism threats, including threats, vulnerability and risk assessment and analysis, and the plans, policies, training exercises, evaluation, and interagency cooperation addresses each such action relating to such threats.

Responsibilities Of The Secretary.

The Secretary shall have responsibility for portions of the Strategy—

Strategy with a capital S—addressing border security, critical infrastructure protection, emergency preparation and response, and integrating State and local efforts with activities of the Federal Government.

Next paragraph:

Responsibilities Of The Director.

The Director shall have overall responsibility for development of the Strategy—

Again, with a capital S—and particularly for those portions of the Strategy addressing intelligence, military assets, law enforcement and diplomacy.

Next paragraph:

Contents.

The contents of the Strategy—

Strategy with a capital S—shall include—

Get that: The contents of the Strategy which will be developed by the Secretary of the Department and the Director—shall include:

(1) a comprehensive statement of mission, goals, objectives, desired end-state priorities and responsibilities;

(2) policies and procedures to maximize the collection, translation, analysis, exploit-tation, and dissemination of information relating to combating terrorism and the homeland security response throughout the Federal Government and with State and local authorities;

(3) plans for countering chemical, biological radiological, nuclear and explosives and cyber threats.

Now get this. Paragraph 4 is one of the items that will make up the contents of the Strategy with a capital S—strategy that is developed by the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security and the Director of Homeland Security—the Director. Here is someone I want the Senate to be required to confirm—this Director. We will provide for the confirmation of the Secretary. But I want the Director confirmed, too.

Get this. This is paragraph 4 of the Strategy with a capital S. There is much more to be said about this Strategy set forth in title III. But listen to this. This is part of the plan, part of the Strategy.

(4) plans for integrating the capabilities—

My—

And assets of the United States military into all aspects of the Strategy. . . .

Now, does that get the attention of any Senator? We have something we call posse comitatus—some would say comitatus, which would be correct, too—both. But there are laws, there are statutes, that have to do with posse comitatus. And I shall have a speech to make on posse comitatus, or comitatus, at some point, hopefully, or likely, if we continue.

But forgetting the statute for a moment, listen to this. The Secretary and the Director are going to draw up a strategy for dealing with this homeland security. And what is part of something that this bill is requiring that they include in their plans, and that they have the authority to develop and include in its strategy? Let me read that again. It says:

The contents of the Strategy shall include—

And we jump down to (4): plans for integrating—

What does that mean?

integrating the capabilities—

My, "the capabilities." What are they talking about, "capabilities"?

. . . include . . . integrating the capabilities and assets—

What does that mean, "assets"?

of the United States military into all aspects of the Strategy.

Now, what do we have here? What are we dragging into this legislation? Why, that should cause every Senator in this body to raise an eyebrow. What are we talking about here? What are we voting for? I will have more to say on this.

I believe that at last I am getting a little attention to what I say about this homeland security.

Let me read that again so it will be in the RECORD for the weekend, and Senators can think about it a little bit.

And the media may have had their attention called to something here that is in this bill. Let me tell you something. I expect Senators would open their eyes even more as to what is in the administration's plan and what is in the House bill. But just in the Lieberman bill, which, as I say, is an improvement over these other approaches by the administration and the House, the House of Representatives—let me read that again:

“The contents of the Strategy”—this is in title III—“The contents of the Strategy shall” be developed by the Director of Homeland Security and by the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security—yes, my attention has been called to an error I made. The correct title of the Director is the Director of the new Office for Combating Terrorism. I referred to the Director of Homeland Security. This is the exact title of the director. And this, the Lieberman bill, and these two titles here, have to do with this new office. These two titles in the Lieberman bill have to do with the establishment of this new Office for Combating Terrorism, established in title II. So I will just refer to this as the director.

The Director and the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security will devise this strategy for securing the country. That is what we are all talking about. But this bill requires that among the responsibilities of the Director are these:

The Director shall have overall responsibility for development of the Strategy, and particularly for those portions of the Strategy addressing intelligence, military assets, law enforcement, and diplomacy.

And among the “Contents”: “The contents of the Strategy shall include”—(1), (2), (3,) and now (4)—there are nine items to be included in “The contents of the Strategy.” The fourth one is this:

plans for integrating the capabilities and assets of the United States military into all aspects of the Strategy. . . .

Now, what are we going to have? A police state? Are we going to have the Army and the Navy, the Marines—are they going to get involved? I don't think anybody wants to do that. I don't think anybody is thinking of that.

But look at this language, what it says. We have to contemplate the unintended consequences of what we do here. Even at best, if we have both eyes and both ears, and the full attention and focus of our collective brains, and we pass an item, we give it careful attention, there may still be unintended, unforeseen consequences that will flow from that act that we passed.

How much more so might that happen if we pass an act in a hurry and don't apply the full focus of our faculties in addressing that legislative matter? The question answers itself.

Finally, let me just read, once more, item No. (4) in “The contents of the Strategy”:

(4) plans for integrating—

“Integrating,” what does that mean? integrating the capabilities and assets of the United States military. . . .

We all know what that means when we talk about the military and the capabilities of the U.S. military—plans for integrating the capabilities and assets of the United States military into all—

Not just a few, all—aspects of the Strategy.

Well, I just wanted to read into the RECORD that excerpt from the committee bill.

Now, perhaps by the fact that these two distinguished Senators asked me questions today about it—a relative of the Senator from Minnesota was a signer of the Constitution of the United States, signing from the State of New Jersey on that occasion. So this fine Senator is here on the floor today and has asked me questions. And the equally fine and good and able Senator from Vermont has asked some questions.

So at last—at last—hallelujah, we are getting some questions. Somebody is beginning to pay attention to what is in this measure.

Perhaps the greatest and the gravest defect of the National Security Act to reorganize the Armed Forces, continuing in this vein, was the failure of Congress to provide oversight of the CIA. When the Central Intelligence Agency was established, there was no congressional oversight. It was responsible only to the National Security Council and the President, and what a mistake that turned out to be.

As a result, the late Clark Clifford wrote: “The CIA became a government within a government.”

Listen to that—became a government within a government. That is exactly what we have here. We have the makings of a government within a government. If the administration were to have its way, we would have a government within a government. We would have a government that is run out of the White House, and the Cabinet officers would be put to one side. The Secretaries of the various Departments, just put them aside. Put the Congress off limits, forget it. We will run things from this White House. That is what I am concerned about, as I see here.

As the late Clark Clifford wrote:

The CIA became a government within a government which could evade oversight of its activities by drawing the cloak of secrecy around it.

(Mr. WYDEN assumed the Chair.)

Mr. BYRD. There you have it in a nutshell. The CIA became a government within a government which could evade oversight of its activities by drawing the cloak of secrecy around it.

For years my immediate predecessor as majority leader was Senator Mike Mansfield. There has been presiding in the chair up until a moment ago the Senator from Montana, MAX BAUCUS, but now we have another Senator in the chair. That majority leader from the State of Montana—at the time, Senator Mike Mansfield—argued for the CIA to be brought under congressional supervision. There was Mike Mansfield. There was my predecessor as majority leader of the Senate. He was majority leader many years. I was his successor.

The late Mike Mansfield said:

What I am concerned with is the CIA's position of responsibility to no one but the National Security Council.

He continued:

The CIA is free from practically every form of congressional check.

That was his caution. He said:

There is no regular methodical review of this agency.

Now hear the voice of the late Mike Mansfield coming down through the years. Listen to him. Listen to the late Mike Mansfield:

What I am concerned with is the CIA's position of responsibility to no one but the National Security Council. The CIA is free from practically every form of congressional check.

The late Senator Mike Mansfield cautioned:

The CIA is free from practically every form of congressional check. There is no regular methodical review of this agency.

Senator Mansfield pointed out:

Our form of government is based on a system of checks and balances.

Hear that. Hear the voice of Mike Mansfield, his words coming down through the years, reverberating in this Chamber. I hope they will be reverberating in the hearts and minds of the men and women who sit today in this great body, the august 100, the special 100 who have been elected by 280 million people in phases; according to our illustrious Framers, three classes—so that there would be a staged rotation of this body, with the Senate in transition all the time, so there would never be a completely new Senate, so there would never be a new complete turnover of the Senators. Today they number 100.

The House, theoretically, can turn over in 2 years. We could have a completely new House, theoretically, in 2 years under the Constitution. But not here. One-third of the Senate only every 2 years, one-third of the Senate only; and then another third for 2 years; and then the third third for 2 years. That was the genius of the Framers.

Here we have a continuing body, and we have checks and balances written into this Constitution. And there was Senator Mansfield pointing it out:

Our form of government is based on a system of checks and balances.

They are written into this Constitution which I hold in my hand.

I saw some of the greatest of the figures in our Government last Sunday on television. There was the Secretary of State. There was the Vice President of the United States, who is the President of the Senate but who cannot address the Senate except by unanimous consent. There was Dr. Condoleezza Rice, a very able person who is not confirmed by the Senate. She was on television. And there was the Secretary of Defense, Donald Rumsfeld, on television. There were others. I listened to all of them.

I don't often listen to television, even on Sundays, when more of the people who are most often seen and heard and read about in the media are on the Sunday shows. But I listened to them all last week because I expected them to say something about this subject of the war, the subject of an attack, an attack on a sovereign state.

Mrs. CLINTON. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Let me finish this thought, and I will be happy to yield.

I saw all those on television. They were talking about the President launching an attack on Iraq.

I have no brief for the Government of Iraq. I have never met Mr. Ritter. I know nothing about Mr. Ritter. I think Iraq under the current regime is a threat. But not one of those individuals who are high in the Government of this country—not one—mentioned the Constitution of the United States. Every one of them had to swear an oath to protect the Constitution, but not one mentioned this Constitution. And to hear them talk, we were ready to go to war. We were prepared to go to war. The President had the authority—I am putting that in my words—the President had the authority to go to war, to launch an unprovoked military attack on a sovereign state. He has just assumed that he has that power under the Constitution. No, not under the Constitution. It is assumed that the President of the United States has that power. There are smart lawyers around and they can take either side of the case and come up with a good argument. They can win either side—most good lawyers, who can take either side. But not Senators who have sworn to support and defend this Constitution and who are here in this august, 100-Member body. And I have seen this whole body change, except for one person. I have seen the whole body—300 Members of the whole body—change three times in my 44 years in the Senate. But not one mentioned the Constitution.

I know what the Constitution says. The Constitution says that Congress shall have power to declare war. We can split hairs all we want, but there are the words. I know there are traditionalists who believe every word of that Constitution, and that was the position that was generally held in this country up until the Korean war. But there are revisionists today who want to change that. They want to give the President power; they think he should have it. So that is what we hear from those who want the Commander in Chief to have that power.

The Commander in Chief was a title to be given to the civil authority at war—not to the military—and to make sure of that we don't have a four-star general sitting as Commander in Chief; we don't have a three-star general, or a two-star general, or a one-star general. We don't have a military officer sitting in that Oval Office. No, we have a man of the people, who is a civil authority. He is the President of the United States. He is the Commander in Chief.

You fellows with the stars on your shoulders, don't get too heady here. This Constitution says, in essence, a civilian, a civil officer, a civil authority shall sit at the top.

Those revisionists ought to read the "Federalist Papers," also. What do we have here? Our constitutional government that the Framers gave us in 1787—once the States, in their conventions, had ratified that Constitution—nine of them—said, in essence, the power to declare war and the power to make war shall not be reposed in the same hands.

So that person, who is Commander in Chief, is the civil authority down there. He is Commander in Chief, but he cannot declare war, except in a circumstance where this Nation is being subjugated to a sudden attack. The President has inherent power under the Constitution. I don't think anybody disagrees with that. The President has inherent power to use the military forces at his command in order to repel a sudden attack—sudden, unforeseen, where maybe Congress is at home, Congress is out on recess, Congress has gone home for the Christmas holidays, or the Thanksgiving holidays, or the Jewish holidays, or Congress may have recessed for a month in August and they are not here. But the President has inherent power in this Constitution to use the military to repel a sudden attack against this country or its military forces. Nobody argues with that.

What is being debated here is the President launching, through some figment of the imagination, or some resolution which has run its course, and under the term "Commander in Chief," an unprovoked attack against a sovereign state—to use a military offensive. We are not talking about a defensive situation. We are talking about an offensive situation in which the President of the United States would attack a sovereign state—in this case, Iraq.

I think Iraq poses a threat under the present regime. I don't argue with that. I don't have any argument with the fact that Saddam Hussein is an evil man. Of course, we are all evil; every man is. The Bible says no man is good. If we look at the programming that appears on our television stations, we will probably conclude that this country is not exactly a nation that is not evil. It is an evil nation in some respects. So let's be careful. I would be careful throwing that word around—"evil"—and saying that this is a war between good and evil. It may be a war against evil, but it is not necessarily between a good nation and an evil nation. But that is off on another track.

The power to declare war and the power to make war are under different hands. Those powers are reposed in different entities. Our Constitution reposes the power to declare war in Congress, the duly elected, directly elected Representatives of the American people. Of course, the Members of the Senate were not directly elected by the people back in those days, but there was a requirement that the power to declare war was in Congress. Congress is made up of two bodies. At one time it was elected by the respective State legislatures, but no more. That has been changed by constitutional amendment, as we all know.

Today, the points are still there. The basis is still there. Declaring war and making war are two different things, and the Framers saw to it that the Commander in Chief would be not a person who would declare war. That is the person who will make war. That was discussed in the Constitutional Convention and that is the way we have it today.

Now, I, therefore, say that this President is not authorized to declare war. Why? Because there has not been a sudden, unforeseen attack on the United States.

Iraq is not attacking the United States at the moment. If the President were to launch a sudden offensive on Iraq, where is his authority to do so? He is not doing it to repel a sudden attack against the United States. No, he is doing it because he knows, as I know, that Saddam Hussein is a threat to us all, to the safety of the people in this area, his own people, and the people in the region, and a threat, if you carry it far enough, to us. It is not all that sudden, and who should declare war in that event? Congress, not the U.N.

I applaud the President for going to the U.N. and laying out his case as to why the U.N. had its chances, had failed, had not lived up to its responsibilities, and he made that case well. But the case has not been made. It will be talked about eventually; it is being talked about a great deal now. I read all about it in the newspapers, I see it on television and hear it on the radio. The case is now being made for an attack unilaterally by this country against a sovereign state when this country has not been attacked.

The purpose is not to repel a sudden invasion of the United States or a sudden attack. If the President were to do this, it would be unprovoked at this moment. Where is the President's authority? They say it is in the resolution adopted by Congress in 1991. It is not there. The authority is not there for the President today to launch an unprovoked attack against Iraq. They said it was in the resolution last year. I say the authorization is not there. It is not there. We can argue and talk all night about that, but it is not there. Show me; anyone, show me. It is not there.

They say he is the Commander in Chief. Well, so what; he is the Commander in Chief. Once war is declared or authorized by the Congress, then the Commander in Chief will make the war. We will have one head at the military and that was the right thing to do. Then an attack, if it is authorized by Congress, can go forward.

Let's don't meddle with this Constitution. There will always be defenders of this Constitution, and there are some who will remind the country of the Constitution when they are on television. So do not assume or take for granted that the President has that power. It is this Constitution, the Constitution of the United States, with 39 names attached to it.

Not one word do I hear by those who appear on television, not one word about the Constitution. I said that yesterday. I am going to say it again today. Not one word did I hear. Perhaps I missed something, but I do not think I did. Not one word. They all just assume that the President is going to do it, he has a right to do it, he has an authority to do it. If our administration has its way, we will take this fellow out, and we will take him out unilaterally; we are not going to wait on anything.

Wait a minute, there came a second thought. Some people began to ask questions. Other nations began to ask questions. Our friends began to ask questions. Our friends in the region began to ask questions, and so a decision came. And so, we will hold up a little bit here. We will go to the U.N. That is right. That is good. Go to the U.N.

The U.N. should face up to its responsibilities and should lay down the precepts as to why this regime must go. The U.N. should express a world view to get the other nations of the world to see it is in their interest that there be a regime change or that there be inspections—bona fide inspections, not like the inspections that were going on up until a few years back, in 1998, I believe.

The President has done that. I say let's don't close our eyes to the fact that this Constitution still lives.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senator from New York. I did not really intend to talk that long. I intended to yield the floor for a question from her, and I intended to do it earlier. I am very happy, with my apologies, to yield to the distinguished Senator. She is a very distinguished Senator from the State of New York; she is a former First Lady of this Nation. I yield to her.

I am grateful that she has a question, that she has perhaps some questions. I am glad somebody is beginning to listen. So I yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. BYRD. The Chair does not recognize the Senator from New York. The Senator from West Virginia has the floor. I yield to the Senator from New York, Mrs. CLINTON, for a question on the condition that I retain my recognition from the Chair as holding the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair acknowledges the Senator from New York to ask a question.

Mr. BYRD. This Senator has yielded. The Chair can't yield to the Senator from New York for a question. I may not have yielded. Now, Mr. President, I only yield to the Senator from New York, Mrs. CLINTON, for a question. Under the rules, I can do that, and I do that with the understanding that I do not yield the floor. So if I yield the floor, how can the Senator from New York be recognized? The Senator from New York is recognized by virtue, under the rules, of my yielding for a question.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia. I thank him for the courtesy of yielding to me for a question, but I thank him even more for his stalwart defense of our Constitution and his constant reminder of our founding document and the principles that it contains.

I ask the Senator from West Virginia, is it not also the case that under the Constitution, this issue about congressional power was very well debated, thought through, written about by our Founders, and that among the powers that were granted to the Congress was the power of the purse, the power to make the decisions about how the people's money would be used? Is that a correct reading of the Constitution that we cherish so greatly?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from New York, Mrs. CLINTON, is preeminently correct. That authorization for power of the purse is found in section 9 of article I of the Constitution.

Tie that together with the first section of article 1 and we find where laws are made and the fact that appropriations may be withdrawn from the Treasury in consequence only of an appropriation by law. Congress has to pay and pass the laws. The Senator is preeminently correct.

Mrs. CLINTON. Is it not the case that in the Senator's capacity as the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee that the committee, under the Senator's leadership, has held a number of hearings about the various needs that our country faces with respect to both military and homeland security?

Mr. BYRD. Again, the Senator is correct.

Mrs. CLINTON. Is it further the case that in taking testimony and receiving evidence, the Senator has helped to create a better understanding of what the needs are that we should be meeting as we attempt to prepare our country for the unfortunate but realistic possibilities of terrorism?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in response to the question, that has certainly been the intention of the Senator from West Virginia who currently is the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in the Senate. That is the intention, and I believe I am beginning to be successful in getting some ears attuned. The Senator is correct.

Mrs. CLINTON. Further to that point, I believe it is the fact, is it not, that in the course of examining the many needs which our country has, in order to deal with the vulnerabilities we currently experience, the Senator has come up with a number of items that the Appropriations Committee has determined would further our security, fulfilling the responsibility that the Congress is given under our Constitution?

Mr. BYRD. In response to the question from the distinguished Senator from New York, Mrs. CLINTON, that is absolutely correct. Senator STEVENS, as the ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, and I—and the full committee of 29 members made up of 15 Democrats and 14 Republicans—have responded in that spirit, and we have provided for the consideration of the Senate and ultimately the entire Congress our views as to the appropriations that are needed.

Mrs. CLINTON. Is it further correct that among those items the Senator has reviewed, studied, and analyzed for the validity of their claims and the importance of their priorities, was a recognition we had some additional work to do because of the terrible attacks of September 11? And as a Senator from New York, I want to pause for a moment and acknowledge with great gratitude the leadership of the Senator from West Virginia in this body and the response of this Nation. We had some unfinished business that we learned about because of those horrific attacks on September 11, which the Senator from West Virginia is attempting to address.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in response to the question from the very able Senator from New York, Mrs. CLINTON, I respond in the affirmative with a resounding "yes."

The Senator from New York has written me on two occasions about the needs of her constituents. And without losing my right to the floor, I ask unanimous consent that—I believe the Senator has sent me one or two letters. She has spoken to me a number of times off the floor and on the floor in this regard. My memory is not infallible, but she sent me one or two letters. I do not have them right now, but I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, at the conclusion of our remarks that are taking place in this colloquy, those two letters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. CLINTON. I thank the Senator from West Virginia because these are matters of grave importance to my constituents. Beyond that, they are of great importance to all Americans. I very much appreciate the Senator's attention because he has studied these issues, he understands how we have to demonstrate clearly our resolve and our preparedness.

I ask the Senator from West Virginia, as he has moved forward with his work on behalf of the Appropriations Committee, and very importantly the work of homeland security, if he has determined there is a need for additional money to be sent to our front-line responders, our frontline soldiers, our firefighters, our police officers, our emergency workers, so they may do the important job of protecting us as we expect them to do?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for stating so lucidly and so articulately a reference to the needs of the people of her State, in reference to the needs of the people who are on the ground, in reference to the needs of the first responders, in reference to the needs of the firefighters. She is preeminently correct in her summation of what has happened in that Mr. STEVENS and I—and again the full Appropriations Committee, Republican and Democratic—acted in a very bipartisan way, have time and again responded affirmatively and effectively to the needs of the people of New York and the people of the Nation.

New York was attacked, and within 3 days my committee, the committee of Mr. STEVENS, the Appropriations Committee, appropriated $40 billion.

Time and again, we have responded, and time and again the distinguished Senator—both Senators from New York, the Senator who is now at her desk and the senior Senator from New York who talked with me before having to catch an airplane today and had to leave. He could not be on the floor today because he had something else he was required to do and was expected to do. So he is not present now, but he talked with me today on the floor when the Senate returned to the homeland security bill. And while the Senate was on the Department of Interior appropriations bill, he talked with me again about the needs of his State, the State which he so ably represents. And just a few days ago, within this last week it was, the Senator from New York came to see me in my office. It was not the first time she had come to me to talk about the needs of that great city, the city of New York, and its great people. Many times, she and the senior Senator, Mr. SCHUMER, have come to my office.

Last week, she came to my office in the early evening hours of the day and expressed to me the need for three items especially. She wanted those items in the appropriations bill. We are debating an appropriations bill and it is taking a long time. It should not take this long. We ought to have had this bill passed and sent to the President.

In this Appropriations Committee which I chair and which Mr. TED STEVENS, I will say, cochairs realistically, that committee has reported all 13 appropriations bills several weeks ago which have to be passed this year. They have been reported from my committee. They have been sent to the Senate and they appear on the Senate calendar.

Those 13 appropriations bills are very slow in getting to the President. Not one has gone to the President. The House Appropriations Committee—and I do not speak with disrespect there; they have a wonderful chairman over there in Congressman YOUNG and a wonderful ranking member over there in DAVE OBEY. They speak their minds. They speak their hearts. But that chairman over there has some people, other high offices he has to deal with in that body. He cannot always do what he may wish to do. The House is a little different from the Senate. In the Senate, of course, we can talk and kind of speak our minds, and we can take independent actions here.

That Senator from New York who holds the floor over there at this moment, she is standing right by her desk. She came to my office last week and importuned me to find a way at some point that she would like to introduce an amendment or she wanted an amendment introduced or wanted to amend one of those bills, take care of those three items in particular that she addressed to me. And then, lo and behold, earlier this week I held up a letter brought to me, delivered to me, not by the U.S. Mail but by someone from the Senator's office. I believe she came by my office and did not find me in the office at that time, so she left a letter, which I have already gotten consent to have printed in the RECORD. She wrote me a letter. She was not just saying, I want mine. She was saying, these are needed, also by the people in the other States of this Union.

So yesterday Senator STEVENS and I joined in an amendment to the Interior appropriations bill which comes out of the Appropriations subcommittee that I chair, the subcommittee on the Department of the Interior. In that amendment, Senator STEVENS and I have entered and offered, we have attempted to address the needs of the firemen, of the security of our nuclear plants, and other pressing homeland security needs among which are the three items in which the Senator expressed interest.

So, time and again we have done this. Time and again, the Republicans and Democrats on that subcommittee have joined to deal with the home security needs.

So the answer is, yes, those needs have been expressed by the Senator, those needs have been addressed by the Appropriations Committee, and even now, or when the Senate gets back on the Interior appropriations bill, there is the amendment by Senator STEVENS and myself which will address some remaining needs in the amount of over $900 million in that amendment.

So it is national in scope, but within that national-in-scope measure is the State of New York.

Mrs. CLINTON. I thank the Senator for his understanding and compassion and his leadership.

As I yield back the floor because of a courtesy that was extended to me by the Senator to be part of this colloquy, I point out that dealing with homeland security is a very heavy responsibility.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield for the purpose without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. CLINTON. I thank the Senator because he has shouldered this heavy responsibility.

We have a process that we have had for many decades about the money we appropriate for our military, and the needs are discussed within the civilian and military leadership of the Department of Defense. It comes to the Congress, and there is a process.

But we are faced with new challenges. It is my observation and opinion that the Senator from West Virginia and his very worthy colleague, the Senator from Alaska, have taken it upon their shoulders to create a process where none was before so we could begin to address these very serious issues—not wait for a Department to get set up, not wait for it to get organized or get its first budget.

But right now, in the face of the ongoing threats, of having an orange-level threat just a few days ago, it brings home how important the work is the Senator is doing. I express my gratitude to him. I thank him for the courtesy of yielding to me for these questions.

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, September 3, 2002.

Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Appropriations,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I want to thank and commend you again for all your hard and important work to help New York recover from the terrorist attacks and on the issue of homeland security more generally. We are all greatly indebted to you.

As the FY 2003 Interior Appropriations bill comes to the floor tomorrow, I understand there may be some effort to offer an amendment to provide the emergency funding requested by the Administration to battle the wildfires in the western part of the country. As a part of this effort, I thought I would raise a couple relevant items of particular importance to me that were left short-changed by President Bush's decision to not make the emergency designation on the $5.1 billion you included in the FY 2002 Supplemental Appropriations bill. The following emergency items are especially relevant to address the urgent needs of firefighters and emergency responders in New York and across the country:

$90 million to HHS/CDC for clinical examinations and the monitoring of long-term health consequences for police, fire and other first responders at Ground Zero. Each day there are new reports of emergency rescue personnel who worked at the World Trade Center site suffering from respiratory and other ailments. The $12 million appropriated last year provided sufficient funding to begin baseline screenings for approximately one-third of the workers at the site. This additional funding is necessary to continue the screenings for the remaining first responders, as well to monitor their health for the coming years.

$150 million in firefighting grants as authorized under the FIRE Act. As you know, fire departments from New York and across the country have filed applications that exceed $3 billion in need for $360 million in available resources. These resources will help our fire departments meet the demands and safety needs of our communities.

$100 million in grants to make fire and police equipment interoperable—these resources are split evenly between FEMA and DOJ's Office of Domestic Preparedness. One of the primary causes of the death of most firefighters on September 11th was their inability to communicate with each other and with the Police Department. These resources are critically needed to protect the health and lives of our bravest domestic soldiers.

As you can see, these are all emergency items and ones that you had the foresight to include in the Supplemental Appropriations bill Congress passed earlier this year. I very much appreciate all your hard work and support in making sure these important items get the funding they so critically need.

Sincerely yours,

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON.

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, September 10, 2002.

Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing to follow up on my letter of September 3 with some recent findings on the health of emergency response workers at the World Trade Center site.

New information on the health impacts of working at Ground Zero was released yesterday in the New England Journal of Medicine and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (attached). This new data confirms, what many of us have known for some time, that there will be continuing health consequences for the workers and volunteers who responded at the World Trade Center site. Specifically, Dr. David Prezant and colleagues presented new data showing that both a "World Trade Center cough" and permanent, asthma-like symptoms are directly correlated with intensity of exposure to the collapse of the towers. In fact, in just six months since the attacks, eight percent of those highly exposed displayed the cough, and twenty-three percent of those highly exposed showed asthma-like symptoms. Of those identified with the cough, 87 percent also had gastrointestinal reflux disease.

In addition, during the 11 months after the attacks, the number of respiratory medical leave incidents increased five-fold and the number of stress-related incidents increased seventeen-fold among FDNY workers. As of the end of August, more than 360 firefighters and EMS workers remained on medical leave or light duty assignment because of respiratory illness that occurred after WTC exposure, and 250 FDNY rescue workers remained on leave with service-connected, stress-related problems. It is estimated that 500 FDNY workers will have to retire on the basis of their injuries in the aftermath of the WTC attacks.

With this new evidence, which was also reported this morning on the front page of The New York Times, I feel more strongly that we must immediately provide the emergency funding you included in the FY 2002 Supplemental Appropriations bill earlier this year. As we have discussed, the three key pieces are:

$90 million to HHS/CDC for clinical examinations and the monitoring of long-term health consequences for police, fire and other first responders at Ground Zero.

$150 million in firefighting grants as authorized under the FIRE Act.

$100 million in grants to make fire and police equipment interoperable. These resources are split evenly between FEMA and DOJ's Office of Domestic Preparedness.

I look forward to working with you on this as we proceed on the FY 2003 Interior Appropriations bill.

Sincerely yours,

HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from New York for her questions and her comments.

Mr. President, I have been informed that the distinguished occupant of the chair, Mr. WYDEN, has to leave soon, has to depart the chair; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is correct, but given the importance of the matters of the Senator from West Virginia, I want to make sure the Senator from West Virginia gets all the time he needs to complete his remarks, and I will stay for this.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I have been a Member of this body 44 years. I don't think I have ever seen a time when I was pressed to complete my statement on the premise that there were no other Senators available to preside over this body and that the occupant of the chair would have to leave soon, thus forcing me to complete my statement before I intended to complete it.

This comes down to a pretty serious juncture. I will not go any further than to say that in this body no Senator should be required to end his statement on the basis that after a certain hour there will be no further Senators available to preside. Now, Mr. President, that is pretty serious.

I have been a Senator a long time, 44 years come next January 3. I have been a Member of the Congress for 50 years come next January 3. Never have I had it put to me that at a certain hour we will have no more Senators available to preside. Now, something is wrong with the Senate if it has come to that. Suppose I want to speak until 6 o'clock this evening. Suppose I want to deliver a speech that I consider very, very important.

I am not here addressing a Mother's Day speech, making one of my holiday speeches. I am not here talking about Mother's Day or Christmas Day or Thanksgiving or Independence Day. I am addressing what I consider to be one of the most important questions to come before this Senate in my 44 years in this Senate. I am very well aware of the fact there needs to be a Senator in the chair as I speak. As President pro tempore of this body, I should know that. The office of President pro tempore is a constitutional office, unlike the office of, say, the majority leader, minority leader, majority whip, or minority whip. These are offices and officers who are voted on by this body and elected by this body. But I am President pro tempore of the U.S. Senate. I am the 86th President pro tempore of the U.S. Senate. The President pro tempore is the President of the Senate for a time being, temporarily, while the Vice President, who is the President of the Senate, is away, is not presiding, or is assuming the responsibilities of the Presidency in the event, very unfortunate event that that should happen. The President pro tempore, he is the first constitutional officer elected by the Senate in March 1789. He is a constitutional officer. You don't find words in the Constitution about the majority leader or minority leader or majority whip or minority whip. I have been in at least three of those positions, majority leader, majority whip—at least two of them. And minority leader, so I have been three of them. But the President pro tempore is a constitutional officer.

I happen to be a Senator from West Virginia. And I happen to have on my heart, which is heavily burdened, a speech. And I want to unburden my heart.

I don't intend to take undue advantage of the person who is presiding now. Perhaps he is caught in the unfortunate circumstance that there is no other Senator available to take the chair, in which case nobody will hear me; I cannot speak.

This Senator wants to raise a concern, wants to express a concern about the situation, if we have come to that in the U.S. Senate. Senators ought to ponder that. And there ought to be some Senators at least who would be willing—and I am sure there are Senators in town—not every one of the Senators who happen to not be on the floor today, not every one of them is absent from the city. They know what their duties are as Senators. I know what my duty is. It is my duty to get out of my bed and come here and preside, if no other Senators can be found and if it is important that the Senate stand in—I get out of my bed if that happens. I know what my responsibilities are, and it kind of offends me that we seem to have come to a situation this afternoon when no other Senators “are available to take the chair,” and the Senator in the chair has to leave shortly.

I am very thankful to the Senator in the chair. I asked him a question and he, I am sure, needs to go soon. But he has expressed the viewpoint and the willingness to stay here as long as I want to speak.

I am not going to take advantage of him and pretty soon I will yield the floor. But I would put it in these words: It is a dreadful thought to me, when I am told that there are no other Senators available. I don't say this critically of the individual who carried this message to me. It is not the making of that individual, that person who is carrying out the duties of that person in doing that. I am sure there must be difficulty in finding Senators.

But what is wrong? What has become of the Senate and its place in the Constitution? What has become of the Senate? It has been here, now, for 215 years. What has become of the Senate? What has become of the Senate, the greatest deliberative body, we hear so often, a body in which a Senator can stand on his or her feet and speak as long as those feet can carry that Senator?

The floor cannot be taken from a Senator unless he has offended the Senate and a point of order is made that the Senator take his seat and he is required to take his seat. If he speaks in terms that are offensive to another Senator, that person's character, he might be asked to take his seat. Or if he speaks offensively concerning a State of this Union, he might be required to take his seat.

But now I am going to be required to take my seat because there is no other Senator available, I understand, to take the duties of the chair.

Mr. President, we ought not in this Senate to have that situation arise again, and I am sorry it arose because it kind of takes away from the theme that I was trying to say here. But it is worth bringing out. Certainly, I think it is worth surfacing because, if that is going to be the situation, then we are in bad shape.

The distinguished Democratic whip earlier today told me that he had an engagement. He had an appointment, I believe, back in his home State. He had to leave at around 3 today and I understood that. That is fine. He told me in plenty of time. He told me this probably before noon today that if I was going to make a lengthy speech, he would have to leave. So I understand that. But there should be some other Senator willing to take the chair, and I have a feeling there are other Senators in town who would come and preside if need be.

All that aside, now, let me close my remarks. In closing I want to thank the officers of the Senate, the staff members of the Senate who have to remain here. They are here in front of us—the Parliamentarian, the journal clerk, the reading clerk and counting clerk and the pages and the people at the desk. They are here. I want to thank them and apologize for my taking the time this afternoon, but we all know what the responsibilities are of officers of the Senate. We know what the responsibilities of clerks and employees of the Senate are when we sign on, and we know what the responsibilities of Senators are when we sign on.

Having said that, I offer my apologies to everyone if I imposed on their time. I offer my apologies, most appropriately and more precisely, to the Senator from Oregon, Mr. WYDEN, who is presiding at this moment and who has very graciously indicated his willingness to sit in that chair until I close.

The whip asked me to close the Senate. So if the whip or the majority leader had any special requests or any Senator had any special request to make before I close the Senate, I will be very happy if someone would present me with those requests.

In the meantime, let me close my printed remarks. It is only a page and a half, and they will go very fast.

Our form of government—

Senator Mansfield pointed out—

is based on a system of checks and balances. If this system becomes seriously out of balance at any point, the whole system is jeopardized.

Senator Mansfield noted:

There is a profound difference between an essential degree of secrecy to achieve a specific purpose and secrecy for the mere sake of secrecy. Once secrecy becomes sacrosanct, it invites abuse.

Senator Mansfield recognized, as I do, that the CIA is by nature and necessity a secretive organization, but it is not an organization that should operate outside our constitutional system, not outside our system of government.

With the Senate select committee to study government operations with respect to intelligence agencies—in other words, the Church Committee, named after the chairman of that committee, the late chairman, Frank Church, the Church Committee—we embarrassingly and tragically learned just how “seriously out of balance” that agency was.

The Senate committee discovered that the CIA had been involved in illegal, improper, and unethical activities, including the overthrow of democratically elected governments, attempted assassinations of foreign leaders, and in violation of foreign countries.

In testimony before the Church Committee, the late Clark Clifford acknowledged:

The lack of proper controls has resulted in a free-wheeling course of conduct on the part of operations within the intelligence community that has led to spectacular failures and much unfortunate publicity.

That was one of the architects of the National Security Act of 1947 speaking.

Three decades after its enactment, Mr. Clifford was complaining about continuing imperfections and the damage that had been done to our country.

I am very concerned that 30 years from now Congress will be struggling to rectify the problems we will be creating with the hastily considered enactment of this legislation as it is written, creating the Department of Homeland Security, according to the legislation that is written and before the Senate.

How much harm could be done in the meantime cannot be imagined. I am referring to damage to the rights and the liberties that we hold most dear: civil rights, labor rights, labor protections, civil liberties of all Americans.

I will go into those further. I intended to get into some of them this afternoon. I will not do so. I am talking about damage to our constitutional process.

I see one other Senator, the distinguished Senator on the Republican side of the aisle. I assume he would like to take the floor, if I give it up. I didn't intend to give it up until we adjourned. But if the distinguished Senator wishes me to yield to him 5 minutes before I adjourn the Senate, I will adjourn in the absence of the majority whip and the majority leader. But I will do so by their request.

Does the Senator wish me to yield for a question?

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Does he wish me to yield for a statement?

Mr. SESSIONS. I would like to make a statement. I had hoped to speak for 10 or 15 minutes. I understand we have a problem. I have been here since before noon. I know the Senator had his time reserved, as he has every right to do. I was hoping I would have a few moments to talk about the important developments with regard to the President's position on the United Nations and Iraq. I believe it is important to make some remarks today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The Chair is here for the duration, as long as it may take to complete his remarks.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is the Senator to whom the Senator from Alabama is addressing his remarks. This Senator will answer the Senator.

Mr. President, since there is another Presiding Officer at the moment, the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, who has been in his individual chair in the Chamber—he sits over here to my left—all afternoon during all of the time that this Senator has been talking about the homeland security matter. He is still here. I thank him. He has taken the chair to relieve Senator WYDEN. I am glad of that. I am still not going to impose on the Senate. But I am going to hold the floor until the Senator from Alabama gets through with his statement.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that I may yield to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, Mr. SESSIONS, for not to exceed 15 minutes.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may proceed on the statement only, that I may retain my rights to the floor, and that he may proceed for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia. I appreciate his leadership in the Senate, his concern for our constitutional order, and his serious historical understanding of the separation of powers. We might not always agree on where those separations are, but I certainly respect his dedication to preserving those separations.

PRESIDENT BUSH'S ADDRESS TO THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I believe it is important today to talk about the remarks President Bush made at the United Nations. I believe he has made a courageous call on the United Nations to defend its credibility in its dealings with Iraq by ensuring that Iraq does not continue to update its weapons of mass destruction and does not continue to violate with impunity the 16 U.N. resolutions of which he is in violation. I think those remarks were a true example of world leadership.

President Bush spoke as one who knows right from wrong, who has honest convictions, and he has the courage to express and to act on them. In direct words, he detailed the incontrovertible case that Saddam Hussein deliberately used his promises at the time of his defeat in the Gulf War as a considered strategy to cause the allies to stop their hostilities before removing him from power, which has proven to be a trick. Since then, his actions have clearly confirmed his deception and have shown his insincerity, his duplicity, and his complete rejection of the U.N. resolutions—his rejections, indeed, of the United Nations itself and of the United States and the nations that joined together to defeat him in 1991. He rejects them. He does not respect them and his promises made to them.

Those agreements, he has said he will follow, but he has never intended to follow them because he doesn't give them respect or credibility.

The "Economist" magazine of London said it is well and good to talk about multilateralism, but it asked, "what happens when people agree to things and do not do them?" That brings up a problem, particularly when their failure to do so deals with matters that threaten the peace of the world.

I don't think anyone can deny that Saddam Hussein's consistent policy has been to defeat, obstruct, and get around the agreements he has made.

Some tell us that the world—the international community—is all against us. They say we are acting unilaterally. Some leaders around the world have indeed said that. But the truth is that President Bush is consulting regularly with world leaders. His speech to the U.N. struck the right balance. And progress is being made in obtaining support around the world—with not enough help, I am afraid, from this Congress.

But who would ever deny that Saddam Hussein is a unilateralist? With whom did he consult before he invaded Kuwait in 1991? With whom did he consult before he utilized poison gas to kill thousands of his own citizens, the Kurds, in the 1990s?

Who did he consult with, what other nation did he consult with, when he plotted to assassinate the former President of the United States of America? Who has he consulted with, as he deals to construct, develop, and produce weapons of mass destruction?

So I would like, Mr. President, to just make a few comments here to bring us some perspective that I think is very important at this time on the kind of support we have around the world.

First of all, I think one of the clearest-headed nations—a nation that consistently gets it right around the world on matters of foreign policy—the United Kingdom, is in total support of the United States. Indeed, it was reported in the paper today that they were moving troops into the Middle East, and prepared to use them, if necessary, with us.

So the Foreign Minister of the U.K., commenting on President Bush's speech to the U.N. said it was "tough and effective", and the speech received quite good remarks from the British leadership.

The Belgian Foreign Minister, heretofore a critic of the United States action, Louis Michel, said, after the speech: "Now we have to press Iraq." He added, if the U.N. "doesn't deliver, it will be uncomfortable for some European countries not to support the United States." That was in today's Washington Times.

Kofi Annan, the Secretary General of the U.N., who has criticized the United States recently, also "urged Council members yesterday to take action or lose legitimacy."

Even France, which has been pretty outspoken against the United States actions, accusing the United States of unilateral activities, has said: "We don't have sympathy for the Iraq regime." And their Foreign Minister further added that "he defies the authority of the Security Council, raises the threat of proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and, therefore, jeopardize the stability of the region."

The Danish Prime Minister's views were remarkable. A few days ago, on September 11, in an op-ed piece here in the Washington Times, Anders Fogh Rasmussen, the Danish Prime Minister, said, in a strong statement of affection and support for the United States wrote:

Our common values, shared destiny and visions have been further fortified by the horrors of September 11.

On the first anniversary of that somber date, Danes will think back with sympathy and sorrow on the victims of the terrorist attacks against the United States and their bereaved families. One year later, our solidarity with America is undiminished.

September 11 was a defining moment calling for determined action in defense of humanity and fundamental freedoms. Acting can entail dangers but the dangers of inaction are far, far greater. In the face of today's new threat, the only way to pursue peace is to pursue those who threaten it.

He goes on to add:

America and Denmark see eye-to-eye on the real challenges facing us today. In the fight against terrorism, Denmark was, is and will be fully behind the United States. Our best soldiers have been in Afghanistan on the ground and in the mountains, fighting alongside U.S. special operations forces. The danger is far from over and the international community must not waver now.

So said the Prime Minister of Denmark.

Representatives of the Romanian Government have been in town recently, and they have expressed strong support for the United States position in Iraq.

Norway, the Norwegian Foreign Minister, after the speech by President Bush, made these comments: "We are challenged to live up to our responsibilities." And then he said something that I think is true for most of the world leaders: "I guess we'll have to choose among a lot of bad options, really."

Nobody wants to choose. Nobody wants to have a war. We wish it were not so. But we have bad options here. And the President is confronting us with the truth, the history of violations by Saddam Hussein. He is forcing world leaders. He is forcing the U.S. Congress. And, frankly, as I have gone back and studied the history of Saddam Hussein, and the violations are more explicit, more repeated, more deliberate than I had remembered actually.

So I think that is where we are today. And one reason it is appropriate for the United States to be most aggressive in leading this effort is that we are the ones—the United States military—that is overwhelmingly enforcing, as best we can, the resolutions of the United Nations in Iraq today.

Many people do not realize that our planes are enforcing a no-fly zone over Iraq today. They fly every day. They are attacked on a regular basis. And we respond and retaliate on a regular basis, attacking Iraq. And they have surface-to-air missiles that they utilize against our aircraft. So far they have not been able to knock down one of our aircraft.

I say to the Presiding Officer, I know that is a matter of concern to you as a member of the Armed Services Committee. But it is a real matter of significance that we are carrying this burden. How long do they want us to carry it?

The Economist magazine, in an article on this entire matter, voting in their editorial for war, said that the “box is leaking,” our ability to contain him cannot continue. And who did they suggest are suffering most? The people of Iraq, the children of Iraq, because of this diabolical leader that they have.

So, yes, we have to take action. We cannot continue to delay. We have troops there in the region that are specifically there to make sure he does not expand again as he did when he attacked Iran. And that war cost 1 million lives in Saddam's failed attempt to defeat Iran and take that territory from Iran; in addition to the gulf war.

He moved, after the gulf war, 80,000 troops down on the Kuwait border, causing us to have to respond out of fear he might once again attack Kuwait.

We have Patriot batteries in Saudi Arabia designed to shoot down Saddam's Scud missiles. I visited a Patriot battery with my legislative assistant, LTC Archie Galloway. And we visited the Alabama National Guard unit that mans a Patriot battery on duty to shoot down Iraqi Scud missiles, if need be at our expense, this very day.

So that is not a problem that has been on the front burner of most of the nations of the world. They are not deeply involved in these matters. They are not paying that cost every day, as we are. They are not confronting the reality of Saddam Hussein's duplicity.

But the President is leading us to understand. So I think it is now important for this Congress to speak. Are we with the President or are we against him? We don't need to be rushed, but we need to get busy in discussing this issue. It is not a new issue.

Most of the evidence is there for the world to see, and has been there for many, many years. So we need to make clear whether we will support the President or not. And if we do not, what are we saying? Are we undermining Secretary of State Colin Powell's ability to negotiate with foreign nations? Are we encouraging the Socialist left in Europe to believe that if they object and fight and complain that they can ultimately prevail, and the United States will fail to act? Are we encouraging radical groups in moderate Arab nations to put more and more pressure on the Arab leaders of those countries who might at least privately be sympathetic to our efforts, by failing to support clearly the President of the United States?

I believe we will act to support the President. I believe this Congress will move. We need to do it before we recess. If we do not, it will be unhealthy for our country. Am I confident we will vote in support of the President and his proposals and give him authority to take the action necessary to preserve and protect our security interests? Yes, I am. Let me tell you why.

There are several important factors. In 1998, this Senate detailed, as I indicated on the floor of the Senate earlier in the week, a list of direct violations of United Nations resolutions by Saddam Hussein. On August 14, 1998, the President of the United States, President Clinton, signed Public Law 105-235 which declared that:

The Government of Iraq is in material and unacceptable breach of its international obligations.

It urged the President to “take appropriate action in accordance with the Constitution and relevant laws of the United States to bring Iraq into compliance with its international obligations.”

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 15 minutes have expired.

Mr. SESSIONS. I ask unanimous consent for 1 more minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I still have the floor, do I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, inasmuch as I still have the floor and the distinguished Democratic whip has asked me to adjourn the Senate in his absence, I will yield to the Senator 1 additional minute. I have a few brief comments with regard to what the Senator has said. I will be glad to yield, if there is no other objection, to the Senator for an additional minute without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator from West Virginia for his courtesy.

It is time for this Congress to relook at our record of involvement with Iraq and study it, to take new testimony, have new hearings, and to stand up, and put up or shut up. We need to be with the President or not with the President. I am convinced this Congress will be with the President. We do not need to undermine his ability to be effective in policies that we support by delaying our support for them.

I urge this Senate to move expeditiously, to not wait on the U.N., which is not elected by the people of the United States to decide this issue but to decide ourselves that we support the President's policies; make that clear, give him the authority he needs to be effective in protecting the United States and this world from a savage and dangerous criminal, Saddam Hussein.

I thank the Senator from West Virginia and yield the floor.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama. I have long had as my friends Senators from Alabama. When I came to the Senate, there were Senators Sparkman and Lister Hill. There have been a succession of Senators from Alabama. Especially, I want to mention the late Senator James Allen from Alabama. I have had very good relations with the Senators from Alabama.

I consider myself as being on the same footing, same level of good relations with the distinguished Senator from Alabama who has just addressed the Senate.

I do want to comment briefly on two or three things that he said.

He first indicated, when I yielded to him, that he and I had often agreed on matters and that there were times when we might disagree as to our interpretations of the Constitution. That can be very true.

Today, I have been talking about a phrase which, when joined with the preceding language, amounts to a sentence, a clause: The Congress shall have power to declare war.

There is no reason for anybody to misinterpret that. I hope the Senator from Alabama wouldn't misinterpret what is in plain view, written in plain English, and has been in that Constitution now for over 200 years. I hope there is no matter of misinterpreting that plainly spoken clause in the United States Constitution: The Congress shall have power to declare war.

I hope we don't have to argue about how to interpret those plainly written, well-understood words from the English language that Congress shall have the power to declare war. That is what I have been talking about.

The distinguished Senator went on to say, we need to be with the President of the United States; we need to support the President of the United States.

I like to be with the President of the United States on most matters. And in the final analysis, I may be with the President on this one. But it is not a matter of being with the President or supporting the President. I maintain that we need to be with the Constitution of the United States. We need to support the Constitution of the United States. It is not damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead; it is not damn the Constitution, full speed ahead.

I want to be with the Constitution. Count me on the side of the Constitution. I want to support the Constitution first, last, and all the time, I say to the Senator. And maybe I will be with the President in due time. But I am not one who says this is a matter that has to be hurried before the election. What is this? Is this the October surprise in August or in September? This is a matter of great moment. And hinging on the decisions of this Senate may be the lives of many citizens.

In the second book of Samuel, I remember the story there which is told of a rich man and a poor man who lived in the same city. The rich man had huge herds of sheep, cattle, and lambs. The poor man had one little lamb. The poor man had one little ewe lamb. Everywhere that poor man went, that little lamb went. That little lamb was the sole possession the poor man had. When he ate, he fed that little lamb from his bowl, from his pot, or whatever it might have been. The poor man cared for that little lamb and he loved him. He shared his food and he shared his shelter with that little lamb.

Presently, a traveler visited the rich man, and the rich man wanted to present a feast to the traveler. He wanted to show courtesy and all of the niceties of being a man of hospitable nature. He wanted to spread food before the stranger. Did he take from his lambs, his herds? He had huge herds. He had vast possessions. He had barns in which he stored the product of the fields. He had vast lands. He had servants. He was well off. He had many, many lambs.

Did he take one of the lambs from his own herd? No. He took the one little lamb that the poor man had and served it up, may I say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama. He served that little lamb, the only lamb that the poor man had. He didn't ask for it. He just took it. He took that little lamb from the poor man and served it up to his guest.

Now, why do I say this? Why do I refer to second Samuel today? There are many mothers in this land who won't get to vote on this matter. There are many mothers in this land who have but one little lamb. I know we have a volunteer military now, and those who volunteer understand what their responsibilities are. They know they may have to sacrifice their lives, and they volunteered to do it. Nevertheless, there are those in the service who are the little lambs of mothers who are at home at night thinking about their little lambs and praying for their little lambs.

Now, here we are about to be faced with a proposition in which these representatives—these mothers of the sons and daughters who are in the services—will not be asked for their vote. There are those who apparently are under the impression that the Congress doesn't need to be asked for its vote—the Congress, the elected Representatives under this Constitution.

Yet some have suggested that the President has the authority. He can go. Some say he is right and he should attack unilaterally. That is what we have been talking about in the last few weeks. People were under the impression that this might be a unilateral attack by the United States against a sovereign state that was not attacking the United States. Of course, we all agree about this imp who is head of that government. But that is a sovereign state. That state is not attacking us.

I am not arguing that Iraq it is not a threat, but is it such a threat, is it so impending, is it so immediate that the Commander in Chief, who is the civil authority over the military in our system of government, can send men and women in the military to war, send them to give their lives, to shed their blood, without asking the Congress? Is he the alpha and the omega, the beginning and the end, of this decision?

The President is the Commander in Chief. He is not a four-star general. Under our system, it is meant to be that way. He is not a four-star general. This is a republic, a constitutional republic, and we have a legislative branch and a judicial branch. These are separate branches. Are we, the Congress, going to stand by and say I am with my President, right or wrong?

No, I don't subscribe to that. Every Senator in this body knows I have spoken out in opposition to Democratic Presidents—President Clinton being one. I am not speaking from the standpoint of a Democrat. I am speaking from the standpoint of a duly elected Representative of the American people who have sent me here to this body under a constitutional system that observes a separation of power. No, don't tell me you are either with the President or against the President. That is what I have just heard.

I am with the Constitution. Mark me down for the Constitution.

Now, I will have both ears open and hear the arguments that are made. I have already applauded the President for going to the United Nations. I think the U.N. has been derelict in its duty. It has stood by supinely while 16 of its resolutions have been ignored. I don't disagree with that; the President did the right thing in doing that. There should not have been all this talk in the newspaper, on the television, and on the radio, and through the media—the many men and women of the Government taking the attitude, apparently, that the President has the authority to go to war if he wants to; he has the authority. That is not so.

We are not talking about a mere skirmish. We are not talking about a situation in which another country has attacked our country or launched an attack on our military forces. This is not a skirmish that we have looming out here. This is war. The weapons that may be unleashed in this war will not have been unleashed, perhaps, in previous wars. But we still have a Constitution. I don't care how many, or how loud they may talk or speak. I am going to be at least a single voice saying that we live, we work, we act by the Constitution of the United States when it comes to declaring war and making war. You can have a thousand voices, but they will not drown out mine.

I am going to be heard, if God gives me the privilege of standing on this floor and speaking. I don't know how long God may give me that privilege. But as long as I can speak, I will. I am not the greatest defender of the Constitution that ever lived. I know a lot about American history, and I know a lot about the Daniel Websters who spoke in support of the Union that was created by this Constitution, which I hold in my hand.

This is no Johnny-come-lately to this Senate. I have seen 300 Senators come and go except for one Senator. There have been others in this body who have defended this Constitution as valiantly as any could defend it.

Don't say to me you are either with the President or you are not with the President. That is not the case. I am with the Constitution of the United States, and I am with the Commander in Chief of the United States when Congress declares war.

I know there have only been five declarations of war. I know there have been seven other wars that have been carried on, not by declaration but by congressional statute. Congress authorized them. There have been many smaller wars, conflicts, military skirmishes, and so on. But this is a major question facing this country. It will not be a military skirmish if it happens, and many a mother will cry on her pillow because her lamb, perhaps her only lamb, will have his life taken.

Mr. President, I say let's hear what the ordinary people—I want to use the word "ordinary" because that fits me exactly. I came from the other side of the tracks. I did not grow up in the boardrooms of this country. I was never on any corporate board. The only business I ever had was a small grocery store. My wife did most of the work in that little grocery store. She put me through college. So I am from the other side of the tracks.

I have known times when I did not know what my next job would be. I had a family early. My wife and I have been married 65 years, 3 months and 15 days today. We were poor. When I was married I was making $70 a month, working 6 days a week, long hours a day, and for a while in that period walking 4 miles to work and 4 miles from work if I could not catch a ride on a milk truck or bread truck.

I am from the other side of the street. I am not a pampered brat who never knew the need for a nickel, never knew the need for anything, had everything given to me. I do not find any fault with people who are born lucky. What I am saying is there are many more people like this man from the other side of the tracks in this country, and there are many more mothers from that side of the tracks than there are those who never knew what it was to have to wipe the sweat from their brow for their daily bread; never had to get their fingernails dirty; never had to wear tennis shoes in the snow. Those are the people who fight in wars. They are the people whose sons and daughters die in wars, but they are not the people who are at the high echelons of Government who do the voting.

In this instance, yes, we are going to have a vote. You can bet on that. We will have one. I said all along we ought to vote. That is what I am saying today. Congress should vote. But I am not for an "October surprise" in August, and I am not for voting on this matter before the election.

Look behind that drapery. Draw aside that veil. What do you see? It has to be voted on before the election? Forget it. If circumstances develop that truly can convince, can be persuasive beyond a semblance of doubt that Congress ought to act tomorrow or the day after tomorrow or next week, yes, but that convincing case has not been made.

A convincing case was made to the United Nations yesterday with respect to the failures of the United Nations, the fact that that body has been recalcitrant in carrying out their responsibilities, a very convincing case made by the President of the United States. But no convincing case has been made in the press or in this body that we must act to give the President authority to invade a sovereign nation now or before the election. That case has not been made.

Make the case and make it here. And believe me, there will be plenty said on both sides. If our Nation is at war with another country, I will do everything I can to support that war.

I helped to build the liberty ships and the victory ships in the shipyards of Baltimore and the shipyards of Tampa, FL during World War II. I was a first-class welder who helped to build ships to carry the food and commerce for the engine of war in World War II. I helped to build the ships to convey to the military in Europe, in northern Africa, in the Pacific. These ships carried the munitions of war. We helped to keep the food lines and the blood lines open with those ships. So there are many ways to serve. But believe you me, this Senator is not now or ever going to be stampeded into voting for or against this subject just to be with or without the President. I am with the Constitution. If that is the argument we are going to hear, it is not going to be a very persuasive argument. You are either going to be with this President or not with him.

Who made this President? He is a very respectable individual who comes from a fine family. I served here with his father who became President. Who made him? How did he become President? Somebody had to cast votes to elect him President. How long will he be President?

The Constitution made this President. The Constitution was here before this President or any other President. Who made the President? Who is going to be with the President? I will first be with the Constitution. I may be with the President later, but first is the Constitution.

Don't come here saying we are either with or without the President. That is not the question. The question is: Are we with the Constitution? Are the people's representatives going to make a decision? When that time comes, then there might be some good arguments to go to war with Iraq, even to stand alone and go to war. Maybe arguments can be presented. There may be evidence by then. Who knows? I do not know, but we have to see it. The evidence is not there yet that we have to act so hastily, that we have to act before the election.

What does the election have to do with it? What does the election have within itself to do with it? The election will go forward. What is to keep Congress from voting on this matter after the election? Why does it have to be before the election? Is that the "October surprise" in September or October, before November? Let's not be too hasty. That is what I have been saying about this legislation with reference to homeland security. Let's don't be too hasty. Let's do it right. Remember that mother's lamb.

The distinguished Senator asked: With whom did Hussein talk? With whom did he consult? He may not have consulted anybody; that is too bad. Hussein should have had a free and independent Senate. Hussein should have had a Senate where voices could be heard, voices in opposition to Hussein, voices of caution, openly and freely where all the public could hear. Yes, Hussein should have had that. There was no Senate like this Senate in Hussein's government. I am talking about a free, separate branch, that is independent, where there is free, unlimited speech—except for unanimous consent or cloture—where there is a Senate that controls the purse strings. Yes, I say Hussein should have had that. He should have had a Senate like this Senate. It is not led around by any President's chain. No President chains this Senate.

There are no chains on this Senate. It is a free and independent Senate. Yes, Hussein should have had a Senate such as this one, where debate would have been heard. But he does not have that. With whom did he consult? Certainly not an Iraqi Senate, like this one.

The same could be said of Emperor Justinian who ruled in Constantinople, on the great golden horn. Justinian sent thousands of people to their deaths in the Nika rebellion. Justinian did not have a Senate.

What about Ivan the Terrible, who had tens of thousands massacred? Ivan the Terrible did not have a Senate. There was no Senate in Muscovy.

Peter the Great sent thousands of men to labor and to die in the swamps to build the city of Petrograd, Lenin-grad. But Peter the Great had no Senate to caution him, no Senate that controlled the purse strings.

Yes, with whom did Hussein consult? That is a good question. But we know that Hussein had no Senate.

Mr. SESSIONS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. No, not yet. I will yield maybe later. I will be glad to yield—does the Senator have to leave the floor? I will yield right now. He is about to leave the floor in a huff, I believe. I hope he is not. Maybe I am misinterpreting him.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the distinguished Senator from Alabama for a question without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia. The Senator is so eloquent in defending the prerogatives of this Senate, and I thank him for that.

We do not need to rush into this. I am of the belief—and I ask the Senator if he would consider the possibility that he would be willing to support the commencement of debate and a vote, if we could do so, before we recess because we may be into January before we return, and I think it could complicate matters.

If I was inarticulate, I apologize, but my request would be that we consider the policies, not the President. It is not a personal thing; the Senator from West Virginia is correct. Let us consider those policies so the world would know whether we are going to support that or not. I know the former Vice Presidential nominee for the Democratic Party, Senator LIEBERMAN, is supporting these policies, and I think there is a majority here. I think the Senator from West Virginia may well agree at some point, after he has had full time to digest and consider it, but I do believe and hope that the Senator would consider allowing us to have a vigorous debate and a vote as soon as we possibly could.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will respond to the question that has been addressed to me, and it is a good question, a thoughtful question. May I just say I hope the Senator will join me in insisting that this Senate debate the homeland security legislation and not rush that legislation. That is a part of national defense as much as anything. It is the defense of our homeland. So I hope the Senator will be one of those who will join me in taking our time to thoughtfully debate a very serious matter, namely, the creation of the Department of Homeland Security.

Now, more to the question as it was addressed to me, the answer is I support debate on the question as to whether or not the Congress should authorize the Commander in Chief to make war. I have asked my staff to consider language for such a question to be presented to the Senate. My staff has been working on such a matter. I hear that Mr. LEVIN is going to hold hearings in the Armed Services Committee, on which the distinguished Senator from Alabama serves so well.

It is good that Senator LEVIN is going to do that. It is good that the distinguished Senator from Delaware, Mr. BIDEN, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, will hold hearings. The chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senator GRAHAM, may hold hearings. So all these things are well and good. They are all necessary under the circumstances. We should understand what the witnesses say in those hearings.

Our three chairmen should not just invite administration witnesses. Apparently they already have their minds made up. Invite them, but don't just stop at that. Apparently they have their minds made up. I heard three or four of them on Sunday talk shows last Sunday. I already mentioned that. They are all from the same viewpoint, and not one mentioned the Constitution of the United States. Yes, I favor that the Congress vote, up or down. I have said that before today. I have said that many days. I think the Congress should vote up or down on the question.

This is the question as to whether or not Congress will authorize and declare war, if it comes to that. This will be no minor skirmish. This will not be a little group out on a party and they happened to run into some other people, they got mixed up and got to fighting, and two or three were killed. This is not a minor skirmish. I said, yes, this is a solemn question because it does involve a dictator such as Saddam Hussein, one who has killed his own people, gassed his own people, one who has shown no compunction about using biological or chemical weapons. We know he has done that. We know he can do that.

But the question is, what is it that makes it so urgent that all of a sudden here comes something like a cloud over the western hills and blows into the Capital City, here is a looming storm that just came up. Lord, this may be a torrent. It may flood ourselves. It may kill people. We have to do something about it right now. What can we do as mere mortals? It is not quite like that.

I have already said the President has inherent power without asking anybody. If Congress is out of town, he does not have to ask Congress. If this country is attacked, he has the inherent power to repel the attacker. I don't argue about that. But that is not the situation. What is so new? We have known these things now for months or years.

May I say to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, would the Senator show me the courtesy of just finishing? I know there may be some who think I am long winded.

Mr. SESSIONS. I had something I had to take care of, and I thank the Senator, but I will be glad to stay a few more minutes.

Mr. BYRD. Cicero was asked what speech by Demosthenes he liked best; and he said, the longest.

So it is all right. One can be long winded if he has something to say. And he may have to say it over and over and over in this situation.

I say, yes, yes, in answer to the Senator, I am for a vote. But I have to see evidence that requires us to vote now or tomorrow. We have had this evidence all this while, at least a long while, 3 months or 4 months or 3 years. So why the sudden rush that we have to vote before the election? I think we should vote after the election so Senators will not be persuaded or moved one way or the other, because of an election, as to how they vote. They are voting to send that little lamb to the slaughter. Should we do that in a hurry? No. I say let's delay.

I have said all I will say in answer to the distinguished Senator, unless he has another question.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from West Virginia for his courtesy and his thoughtfulness. I just ask that he consider, in evaluating his decision, the difficulties it provides for the United States if we cannot get a vote of support. If we are not for it, let's say so. If we do not believe and we are not going to fund—which is our ultimate power, to cut off funds—let's say so, and we get on with something else.

I strongly believe we should proceed. Senator WARNER, who was chairman of the Armed Services Committee or ranking member on the Armed Services Committee, said there were nine hearings last time before the gulf war, with a period of intense debate. The Senator is correct, we ought to have hearings and we ought to have debate. It is just a question of, as soon as we get that and people feel ready, the sooner we get started and the sooner we complete it, I think the Nation will be better off.

I respect the views of the Senator and the concerns. As the Senator knows, under our Constitution we have elections all the time, one following the other. There is never a time that someone does not have an election in mind, unfortunately.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator avoids the question he put to me. He is talking about an election that will come upon us in November—this coming November. I understand what he is saying. He is saying we ought to take action before the election. Then he says we ought to hear what the U.N. says. And I say, let's not be in all the hurry. We ought to hear what the U.N. says. Let's see what world opinion is. We ought not go into this alone.

If this man is a threat to world peace, the United States should not have to go it alone. Perhaps he will have to be removed. But we have a little bit of time, surely.

I say to the Senator, let's take the time. Let's debate the question. Let's debate it and reach a decision on the basis of what the Constitution tells us.

Let me just continue. I didn't want the Senator to leave. I thought he was about to leave.

Let me continue. He said, with whom does he consult? That is a good question. I have already responded. I also talked about Justinian. I talked about Ivan the Terrible. I talked about Peter the Great. Now, let's go to Stalin. With whom did he consult? With whom did Adolph Hitler talk? With whom did he consult?

It was not a free and independent Senate. If they had a free and independent Senate that had control of the power and control of the purse strings, history might have been different. Hundreds of thousands of lives might have been saved.

Mr. President, let us not act in haste. Let us forget about our politics. Let us not be for or against a resolution on the question of war or peace on the basis of what party we belong to. Let us put that question in a way that we will be with and in support of the Constitution.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into a period for the transaction of routine morning business and that Senators may speak therein for not to exceed 3 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FOOD FOR GUNS PROGRAM

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this Saturday the Detroit Police Department will begin a new gun buyback program offering a $25 gift certificate for gas and a $25 gift certificate for food to anyone who brings in an unloaded gun. Last year, a very successful similar effort took more than 600 guns off the streets of Detroit.

During the past week, volunteers from the Youth Initiative Project, an organization dedicated to drug prevention and stopping youth violence, have gone door-to-door informing people throughout the community of the program. In addition, the Youth Initiative Project is planning a Family Safety Fun Day to coincide with the gun buyback program that will distribute trigger locks and information on gun safety.

There have been 14 young people killed by guns this year in metro Detroit. In response to these tragic shootings, the Youth Initiative Project held a town hall meeting at the Redford Branch of the Detroit Public Library on how to prevent gun violence. Some of the organizers were trained this summer at the Youth Action Institute, a three day convention in Washington, D.C. sponsored by the Alliance for Justice. These same volunteers are planning three more town hall meetings in Detroit and then will move their program into local schools.

I hope my colleagues will join me in commending the Detroit Police Department for this positive approach to getting guns off the streets and the Youth Initiative Project for their efforts to make the day a success and their commitment to educating their peers on gun safety.

NEEDED: REGIME CHANGES IN BURMA AND CAMBODIA

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, on August 1, 2002 the United States and the Association for Southeast Asian Nations, ASEAN, signed a "Joint Declaration for Cooperation To Combat International Terrorism."

Through this Declaration, both Burma and Cambodia affirmed commitments "to counter, prevent, and suppress all forms of terrorist acts . . ."

and pledged to view "acts of terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, committed wherever, whenever, and by whomsoever, as a profound threat to international peace and security. . . ."

Lest the irony of these commitments be lost on my colleagues, let me say a word or two about each country.

For over a decade, the people of Burma have been under the repressive misrule of military thugs who have systematically ruined the economy, while profiting from illicit activities, imprisoned political opponents, (including those legitimately elected by the people of Burma), raped ethnic girls and women, forced into labor children and villagers, and squandered scarce financial resources on military weapons and nuclear technology, at the expense of the welfare of their compatriots.

Just last week, two members of the youth wing of the National League for Democracy—the legitimately elected representatives of the people of Burma—were arrested and sentenced to three years in prison for possessing a journal published by exiled dissidents. By any definition, the State Peace and Development Council's rule in Burma has been a reign of terror.

In neighboring Cambodia, the ruling party is led by a former Khmer Rouge guerilla whose penchant for violence is well known, and documented, throughout the region. In July 1997, Prime Minister Hun Sen staged a bloody coup d'etat to oust his royalist rivals, and he is the prime suspect in a brutal assassination attempt on the country's sole opposition leader, Sam Rainsy.

That attempt, which occurred during a political rally on Easter Sunday in 1997, failed, but killed and injured scores of Cambodians. American democracy worker Ron Abney was injured in the terrorist attack, and has long suspected that Hun Sen was the devious mastermind. To this day, Ron and all victims of Hun Sen's terror are awaiting justice.

I am also troubled by news reports that Heng Sean, an opposition activist, was murdered in Kampong Cham over the weekend. It appears that Mr. Heng's only crime was to support Sam Rainsy and his agenda for reform.

For my colleagues less familiar with Cambodian affairs, I recommend reading "The Cambodian Conundrum" by veteran journalist Nate Thayer, Foreign Service Journal, March 2002, which provides keen insights into the previous Administration's "blind eye" foreign policy in Cambodia.

Given the actions of Southeast Asian hardliners in Rangoon and Phnom Penh, last month's pledges to combat terrorism ring hollow. It would serve American interests in the war on terrorism—as well as benefit the welfare of the people of Burma and Cambodia—for regime changes to occur in those countries.

UNITED STATES POLICY ON SUDAN

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise today to comment on the situation in Sudan, a country characterized by brutal fighting and tremendous suffering, a country in which an estimated two million people have died in just the past decade from war-related causes, and where millions more have been displaced.

In July, I held a hearing on U.S. Policy in Sudan in my capacity as chairman of the African Affairs Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. At that time, I praised the administration for devoting high-level attention to the plight of the Sudanese people. As I noted then, the President and the Secretary of State have spoken out about Sudan. The President appointed Senator John Danforth to be his Special Envoy for Peace in Sudan. USAID Administrator Andrew Natsios was named Special Humanitarian Coordinator for Sudan. As a result of Senator Danforth's efforts, the International Eminent Persons Group has investigated means for preventing abductions and slavery and has reported on its findings. And in July, negotiations between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan People's Liberation Army, or SPLA, in Machakos, Kenya produced a broad framework for ending the civil war and providing the people of the south with the means to exercise their right to self-determination. All of this deserves praise.

But currently, the negotiations are troubled. The Government of Sudan pulled its negotiators out of Machakos in response to the SPLA's capturing the strategic garrison town of Torit on September 1. Many observers, including key American officials, believe that the process is not permanently derailed but merely disrupted. Still, this disruption calls the world's attention to a rather telling point. There is no ceasefire on the ground in Sudan, and not only do military engagements continue, so too do attacks on civilians and the manipulation of humanitarian assistance. The situation of the Sudanese people has not improved despite the developments at the negotiating table.

I continue to support the administration's efforts to work with Inter-governmental Authority on Development, IGAD, to facilitate the peace process. But given this disconnect between reality on the ground and rhetoric in negotiations, given the troubled recent history of United States-Sudanese relations, given the scale and scope of the abuses committed against civilians regularly in that troubled country, this effort requires something of a leap of faith. I do not criticize the administration for taking the leap, I believe that it was a correct and courageous decision to work with the Government in Khartoum and with the SPLA to try to find a path to peace in Sudan. But I do criticize the administration for not taking the confidence-building measures, including those identified by Senator Danforth, seriously enough, leaving us with little in the way of concrete reassurances that our leap was a wise one.

Specifically, I am referring to issue of the civilian bombing monitoring team. In the July hearing, I asked Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs Walter Kansteiner about the bombing of civilian targets. Senator Danforth succeeded in getting both the Government of Sudan and the Sudanese People's Liberation Army to agree to allow a monitoring team to verify their stated commitment not to intentionally attack civilian targets. That happened in spring. But at the time of the hearing, we still had no monitors on the ground. Meanwhile, reports of attacks on civilians persist. What are we waiting for, I asked. When will the team be functioning on the ground?

I was told that this effort was taking shape, and that the team would be functioning by the end of August. But today, the team is still not in place, still not functioning. We cannot even move to the very important work of trying to link documented incidents of attacks on civilians to clear consequences, because we remain, apparently, incapable of deploying a qualified and appropriately equipped team of people with experience in Sudan and in human rights monitoring.

I spend a great deal of time trying to call the administration's attention to very serious issues in sub-Saharan Africa that are deserving of more American time and interest. I do not have to do that when it comes to Sudan. Bringing peace to Sudan appears to me to be this administration's most significant policy initiative in the region, and I commend the administration for its efforts. That said, this element of the effort, following up on the commitments obtained by Senator Danforth relating to the bombing of civilian targets, this element of the effort is quite plainly falling short.

If the administration needs additional resources, personnel, or logistical capacity to make this happen efficiently and effectively, I know that many in Congress stand ready to help. Many of my colleagues have long history of working to address the crisis in Sudan, notably my partner in on the African Affairs Subcommittee, Senator FRIST, and I admire their commitment and their work. In calling attention to this issue, and in criticizing the administration for its failure to move forward on the civilian bombing monitoring issue, I do not seek to inject partisanship into the Sudan policy debate. But I do want to make it clear that this is not a small thing and not a secondary priority. The administration's capacity to help bring peace to Sudan is strongest when the diverse community of Sudan advocates and the entire Congress is united in support for that effort. We need to sustain our faith in this endeavor with concrete steps even as our country continues to facilitate big-picture negotiations. And so I encourage the administration to make deploying a qualified and well-organized monitoring team at the earliest possible date a real priority.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

IN RECOGNITION OF BISHOP WILLIAM T. CAHOON

• Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the work of Bishop William T. Cahoon on the recent Holy Convocation in New Jersey.

For more than a quarter century, Bishop Cahoon has dedicated himself to bringing together the ministry and local communities. He currently serves as the Jurisdictional Prelate for the Garden State Jurisdiction, Church of God in Christ, and in 1984 was elected and served as Secretary of the National Board of Trustees. During this time, he has championed issues which empower the family, church and community, and is the founder of the Community Development Corporation, known as the New Garden State Caring Families and Neighborhoods, Inc. In 1997, he was recognized as one of the 100 Most Influential Persons in the State of New Jersey and was given the Man of Distinction Award of his Jurisdictional efforts in 1998.

Bishop Cahoon has always believed that "We must minister to the realities of our unique communities through whatever social, economic, political and spiritual means necessary." It is this openness to new ideas of ministering to the people of New Jersey that inspired the recent Holy Convocation, the goal of which was to the paradigm shift to ministering in the 21st century.

It was an honor to see Bishop Cahoon at work during the recent Holy Convocation and I wish him the best in his mission.●

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE JEWISH NATIONAL FUND

• Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, I rise to congratulate the Jewish National Fund as the group celebrates its 100th anniversary on October 6, 2002. Without the efforts of the Jewish National Fund, the nation of Israel might very well not exist. Today, through the efforts of the JNF, Israel not only exists as a Jewish State, but flourishes despite numerous geographic and political changes.

The Jewish National Fund was established at the Fifth Zionist Congress in 1901 with the express purpose of allowing Jews from around the world to join together and make the Zionist dream a reality. Jewish communities from around the world participated by collecting donations in signature "Blue Boxes." These donations were used to purchase the land that would one day become the state of Israel. Jews dis-united could not achieve their nationalist dream and create a Jewish state in the land of Israel, but together, through the work of the Jewish National Fund, they began to build a nation. JNF purchased the land, developed and built the infrastructure, and planted the forests that made the country green. I am confident that through the dedication and hard work of the Jewish National Fund, Israel will continue to thrive for the next 100 years and beyond.

Since 1901, the Jewish National Fund has planted over 220 million trees, built over 120 dams and reservoirs, developed over 250,000 acres of land, created more than 400 parks throughout Israel and educated students around the world about Israel and the environment. The Jewish National Fund is also active in funding arid land research and has partnered with the USDA Forest Service and the Arizona-based International Arid Lands Consortium.

This past year marked a great milestone for the Jewish National Fund. The group celebrated a great century and witnessed the birth of their dream: a thriving Jewish homeland. I wish the Jewish National Fund the best of luck as they embark on their second century of service.●

TRIBUTE TO ALBERT GREENE CLAY

• Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I wish to pay tribute to the late Albert Greene Clay, a man whose contributions were instrumental to the tobacco and horse industries, and whose presence was well-known at the University of Kentucky.

A native of Mount Sterling, KY, Albert received a bachelor's degree from Duke University in 1938, and attended Harvard Business School in 1939. On October 26, 1939, Albert married his college sweetheart, Lorraine Case Newlin. I would like to take this opportunity to express my sincerest condolences to his family, especially his wife Lorraine, his sons Robert and John, his daughter Charlotte Clay Buxton, and seven grandchildren.

Albert left behind a legacy as an individual whose contributions to the tobacco industry are far-reaching and long-lasting. He played a key role in the establishment of the Burley Auction Warehouse Association in the 1940s, and continued his involvement by serving as chairman and president of the organization's board for 25 years.

Albert's leadership extended to the national level, where he served as director of the National Tobacco Tax Council, Burley and Dark Leaf Tobacco Export Association and Tobacco Growers Information Committee. In 1977, he was appointed by the Carter administration to serve on the Agriculture Policy Advisory Committee for Trade Negotiations.

Not only did Albert's accomplishments encompass the tobacco industry, but they also extended into another important facet of his native State—the horse industry. Albert helped found the American Horse Council in 1969, and continued to serve as secretary of the organization for many years. His passion for horses benefited students at the University of Kentucky, where Albert played a vital role in the creation of the institution's Equine Research Foundation. He served as chairman there from 1988 to 1998 and was also instrumental in the formation of UK's Maxwell Gluck Equine Research Center. Albert maintained his involvement in the university, serving on the UK board of trustees, and as chairman of the board for several years.

I would like to express my appreciation for Albert Greene Clay's outstanding contributions to both the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and the entire United States.●

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

● Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred July 20, 2001, in Cullman, AL. Two black men were attacked inside their car after arriving at a party. The assailants, three white men, smashed the car with baseball bats and cut a racial slur into the side of the car. Authorities investigated the incident as a possible hate crime.

I believe that Government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.●

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF BIG BASIN REDWOODS STATE PARK

● Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate the Big Basin Redwoods State Park of Santa Cruz County in California on their 100th anniversary.

Established in 1902, Big Basin Redwoods State Park is California's oldest State park. Big Basin Redwoods is the birthplace of the original coastal redwood conservation movement. Today the results of the conservation movement can be seen in the 18,000-plus acres of California redwood forest.

The park has the largest continuous stand of Ancient Coast Redwoods south of San Francisco. Additionally, Big Basin Redwoods State Park is considered by many to be the birthplace of both the park and environmental movement in California.

At the turn of the 20th century, the remaining redwood forests were disappearing at rate that threatened massive destruction of the ancient trees. The only redwood forests left in America ranged from Oregon to Big Sur. Concerned citizens and organizations such as the Sempervirens Club, persuaded then-Governor Henry T. Gage to sign legislation that would set aside land for a redwood park.

Today, the ensuing generations of those environmentally concerned citizens are celebrating the 100th anniversary of the preservation of the California redwood lands. The perseverance and dedication to protecting primeval forest places that the founders of the Big Basin Redwoods State Park exemplified are recognized and celebrated today. Without such dedication to the environmental movement hundreds of forests across the country would have been destroyed.

The Big Basin Redwoods State Park contains both cultural and historical sites of national importance, wildlife habitats, natural ecological preserves, and recreational opportunities for the public. The Big Basin Redwoods State Park is a unique and uncommon place of historical and primeval environmental importance. Therefore, special recognition is deserved on September 13, 2002, the 100th anniversary of its founding.●

HONORING WALTER J. SCHRAMM THE OUTSTANDING OLDER WORKER OF SOUTH DAKOTA FOR 2001

The Outstanding Older Worker award is sponsored by Experience Works a national, nonprofit organization that provides training and employment services for mature workers. Walter will be honored in Washington, D.C., September 17–21, at the annual Experience Works Prime Time Awards Program. He will join 51 other outstanding older workers representing each State, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Due to the tragic incidents of September 11, 2001, and the subsequent cancellation of the Experience Works Prime Time Awards Program, Walter will be recognized at this year's event.

After serving in the Pacific theater in World War II as a Marine Air Corps pilot, Walter returned to the United States to complete his military service and start a career. With little money, and no retail experience, he opened the Schramm Furniture store in Winner. His lack of business knowledge and experience was overcome by his tremendous work ethic and strong sense of community. Walter's hard work and dedication over the years have helped him succeed and grow as a small business owner, and today, his two sons, Jeff and Tom, share the business with their father.

For the past 56 years Walter has been the owner/president of Schramm Furniture, Inc. At age 85, he continues to work six days a week, nine hours a day. Walter opened his business with the motto: "Provide good service to the customer and they will come back." Though times have changed, Walter's motto has remained the same, and today, just as 56 years ago, customers continue to return to Schramm Furniture for its reliable customer service.

Walter's tremendous contributions to the community, and civic/business leadership have set him apart from other outstanding senior workers. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and Rotary International, Trinity Lutheran Church, the SD Retailers Association, the Winner Athletic Association, and a lifetime member of the American Legion and VFW.

This prestigious honor is a reflection of his extraordinary service and commitment to the Winner community. Through his outstanding community involvement and dedication to service, the lives of countless South Dakotans have been enormously enhanced. His wonderful example serves as a model for other hard working and dedicated individuals throughout South Dakota to emulate.

Walter Schramm is an extraordinary person who richly deserves this distinguished recognition. I strongly commend his years of hard work and dedication, and I am very pleased that his substantial efforts are being publicly honored and celebrated. It is with great honor that I share his impressive accomplishments with my colleagues.●

HONORING RUSSELL WYATT THE OUTSTANDING OLDER WORKER OF SOUTH DAKOTA FOR 2002

● Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I wish to publicly commend Russell Wyatt, a resident of Hot Springs, on his selection as this year's Outstanding Older Worker of South Dakota.

The Outstanding Older Worker award is sponsored by Experience Works, a national, nonprofit organization that provides training and employment services for mature workers. Russell will be honored in Washington, D.C.,

September 17–21, at the annual Experience Works Prime Time Awards Program. He will join 51 other outstanding older workers representing each State, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico.

At age 76, Russell Wyatt continues to own and operate Wyatt's Real Estate and Appraisal Service in Hot Springs. Russell's hard work and dedication over the years has helped him succeed and grow as a small business owner. His entrepreneurial spirit has led to many tremendous accomplishments, and helped him adapt to a rapidly changing workplace.

However, it is Russell's tremendous contributions to the community, civic leadership, and volunteer work that set him apart from other outstanding senior workers. He helped organize the Oral Volunteer Fire Department and Southern Hill's Real Estate Board, promote the Miss South Dakota Pagaent, and bring a Pamida Store and Civic Center to Hot Springs. Hot Springs residents have come to count on his hard work and dependability.

This prestigious honor is a reflection of his extraordinary service and commitment to the Hot Springs community. Through his outstanding community involvement and dedication to service, the lives of countless South Dakotans have been enormously enhanced. His wonderful example serves as a model for other hard working and dedicated individuals throughout South Dakota to emulate.

Russell Wyatt is an extraordinary person who richly deserves this distinguished recognition. I strongly commend his years of hard work and dedication, and I am very pleased that his substantial efforts are being publicly honored and celebrated. It is with great honor that I share his impressive accomplishments with my colleagues.●

IRA YELLIN: IN MEMORIAM

● Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I wish to pay tribute to Ira Yellin, who passed away on September 10. He was only 62 years old.

My heart goes out to his wife, Adele, to his daughter Jessica and his son Seth, to his mother Dorothy and his two brothers, Marc and Albert.

Ira was a true visionary, a man who championed the restoration of downtown Los Angeles long before it was popular.

His own restoration of the Grand Central Market, an enduring emblem of the ethnic diversity that is Los Angeles, is perhaps the greatest of his many accomplishments as a real estate developer.

Yet Ira was involved in so much more than real estate. He was a civic and community leader, and served as a past president of the American Jewish Committee and a member of the board of the Skirball Cultural Center and the J. Paul Getty Trust.

The son of a Talmudic scholar, an ex-Marine, an urban pioneer, a political and social activist, Ira was an optimistic man of boundless energy. Not even the lung cancer that he battled so bravely over the last year could slow him down.

Up until the very end of his life he maintained his commitment to his work, to his community and, above all, to his loving family, in a way which has earned my highest admiration and my deepest affection.

Ira Yellin was a wonderful man who will be sorely missed, yet both his notable achievements and his engaging personality have made a lasting impact on all of us. He will not be soon forgotten.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. JOHNSON:

S. 2934. A bill to amend title 36, United States Code, to clarify the requirements for eligibility in the American Legion; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the American Legion Amendment Act to make technical changes to the membership qualifications in the Federal charter of the American Legion.

Under the American Legion's current charter, a veteran who leaves the Armed Services may become a member of the American Legion if he or she served since "August 2, 1990 through the date of cessation of hostilities, as decided by the United States Government" and "was honorably discharged or separated from that service or continues to serve honorably after that period." At this point, the United States Government has not issued a cessation of hostilities decision for U.S. military operations during this period. For those military men and women who are no longer serving, they have discharge papers stating they served honorably during that period which makes them qualified for American Legion membership. Yet, servicemembers who served since August 2, 1990, and are still on active duty, have no discharge papers for the period, and are not officially serving after the cessation of hostilities. Therefore, they are not eligible for membership in the American Legion despite their dedicated service in our nation's Armed Forces.

The bill that I am introducing today would change the standard for a veteran to qualify for membership in the American Legion to “continues to serve during or after that period.” This change would make it clear that membership is open to the thousands of active duty personnel who served during operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, in addition to the operations that followed in Iraq, Bosnia, Kosovo, and Afghanistan.

As my colleagues in the Senate know, the American Legion continues to be one of our Nation’s most effective advocates on behalf of America’s veterans, as well as a pre-eminent service organization. The American Legion has grown to nearly 3 million members whose efforts are truly making a difference in communities throughout our country. As the father of a son who served in Bosnia, Kosovo, and Afghanistan, I am pleased to offer the American Legion Amendment Act that will offer him and his military colleagues the opportunity and the honor to join the American Legion.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2934

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CLARIFICATION OF REQUIREMENTS FOR ELIGIBILITY IN THE AMERICAN LEGION.

Section 21703(2) of title 36, United States Code, is amended by inserting “during or” after “continues to serve honorably”.

By Ms. LANDRIEU:

S. 2935. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide grants for the operation of mosquito control programs to prevent and control mosquito-borne diseases; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, as you know, the State of Louisiana, along with many other States, has for the past several months been under siege. The enemy is small, but powerful, and great in number. Hard to detect, they sneak up on you and with one attack, they can change your life forever. To date, 10 Louisianans have lost their lives in our war against mosquitos and the West Nile virus that they carry and 222 more have been injured. In Baton Rouge, our State capital, 42 people have been reported to have been infected with the disease and three have died. Only Illinois, with 292 human cases and 11 deaths, has experienced more casualties from the virus than Louisiana.

I am here this morning to introduce legislation that asks for Federal assistance for States to “M.A.S.H.” out this predator and stop the spread of this disease. Throughout the history of Louisiana, spraying for mosquitos and dredging the water they breed in has been a common occurrence. Until now, however, it was done because mosquitos were pests and they could carry deadly germs. Now, our State and local officials are spraying around the clock in a desperate race to control the worst outbreak of West Nile the Western hemisphere has ever seen. There is no specific treatment for West Nile, nor a vaccine. The most effective way to protect our citizens against this deadly virus is to stop it before it happens.

I think that is clear that there is an urgent need for this bill to become law. If passed, it can have an immediate effect in saving on the lives of people in my State and throughout the nation. I want to be clear, however, that this is not an effort to supplant state’s responsibility in this area, but to supplement it. Our State has and will continue to dedicate a great deal of State and local resources toward “Fighting the Bite.” On September 5, 2002, the State of Louisiana began distributing $3.4 million in state funds to support the local governments in their efforts to combat West Nile. The Department of Health and Hospitals is spending over $200,000 on a public education campaign asking people to do their share to avoid leaving standing water and other mosquito havens. Two-thirds of Louisiana’s population is covered by an active mosquito control program and those without mosquito control programs are using spray trucks provided by the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry.

One might think that given the national public health threat imposed by the spread of West Nile that there would already be Federal funding of this type available. Natural disasters such as this require the Federal, State and local governments to work together in a coordinated fashion to bring immediate relief to affected citizens, to educate the public, and to prevent the disease from inflicting further harm. Our Nation’s first experience with the West Nile Virus taught us that effective treatment and prevention of this deadly disease also requires coordination among the many Federal agencies with expertise and jurisdiction. The formation of a West Nile Virus Coordinating Committee, chaired by CDC and composed of representatives from USDA, the United States Geological Survey’s National Wildlife Health Center, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Defense Department was the first step in this direction.

Louisiana’s experience, thus far, has proven the necessity of this coordinated approach. However, Federal leadership must continue to be strengthened, and coordination must continue to be improved between Federal agencies involved in West Nile. One of the shortfalls, and perhaps the easiest to address, is the lack of an effective funding source for mosquito control. In August of this year, the CDC endowed the state of Louisiana with $3.4 million to use in the fight against West Nile. The CDC money, though, cannot be spent on chemicals or spraying, rather it must be spent on surveillance, education and testing. It is for this reason that our Governor, and the Governor of Mississippi appealed to FEMA for their help in increasing much needed abatement activities. This request was denied.

West Nile is one of many vector borne diseases spread from birds to humans by mosquitos. If our Nation’s public health system is to respond accordingly, then they must have the aid of effective mosquito abatement programs. This bill puts that system in place. I am pleased to be joined by my senior Senator from Louisiana, as well as Senators GREGG and HUTCHISON. I am hopeful that before long this bill will be supported by the majority of the Senate. I ask the majority leader for his help in seeing to it that this bill is passed as soon as possible.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2935

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Mosquito Abatement for Safety and Health Act”.

SEC. 2. GRANTS REGARDING PREVENTION OF MOSQUITO-BORNE DISEASES.

Part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 243 et seq.), as amended by section 4 of Public Law 107-84 and section 312 of Public Law 107-188, is amended—

(1) by transferring section 317R so as to appear after section 317Q; and

(2) by inserting after section 317R (as so transferred) the following:

“SEC. 317S. MOSQUITO-BORNE DISEASES; ASSESSMENT AND CONTROL GRANTS TO POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS; COORDINATION GRANTS TO STATES.

“(a) PREVENTION AND CONTROL GRANTS TO POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, may make grants to political subdivisions of States for the operation of mosquito control programs to prevent and control mosquito-borne diseases (referred to in this section as ‘control programs’).

“(2) PREFERENCE IN MAKING GRANTS.—In making grants under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall give preference to political subdivisions that—

“(A) have an incidence or prevalence of mosquito-borne disease, or a population of infected mosquitoes, that is substantial relative to other political subdivisions;

“(B) demonstrate to the Secretary that the political subdivisions will, if appropriate to the mosquito circumstances involved, effectively coordinate the activities of the control programs with contiguous political subdivisions; and

“(C) demonstrate to the Secretary (directly or through State officials) that the State in which the political subdivision is located has identified or will identify geographic areas in the State that have a significant need for control programs and will effectively coordinate such programs in such areas.

“(3) REQUIREMENT OF ASSESSMENT AND PLAN.—A grant may be made under paragraph (1) only if the political subdivision involved—

“(A) has conducted an assessment to determine the immediate needs in such subdivision for a control program, including an entomological survey of potential mosquito breeding areas; and

“(B) has, on the basis of such assessment, developed a plan for carrying out such a program.

“(4) REQUIREMENT OF MATCHING FUNDS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—With respect to the costs of a control program to be carried out under paragraph (1) by a political subdivision, a grant under such paragraph may be made only if the subdivision agrees to make available (directly or through donations from public or private entities) non-Federal contributions toward such costs in an amount that is not less than  $\frac{1}{3}$  of such costs (\$1 for each \$2 of Federal funds provided in the grant).

“(B) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT CONTRIBUTED.—Non-Federal contributions required in subparagraph (A) may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services. Amounts provided by the Federal Government, or services assisted or subsidized to any significant extent by the Federal Government, may not be included in determining the amount of such non-Federal contributions.

“(C) WAIVER.—The Secretary may waive the requirement established in subparagraph (A) if the Secretary determines that extraordinary economic conditions in the political subdivision involved justify the waiver.

“(5) REPORTS TO SECRETARY.—A grant may be made under paragraph (1) only if the political subdivision involved agrees that, promptly after the end of the fiscal year for which the grant is made, the subdivision will submit to the Secretary, and to the State within which the subdivision is located, a report that describes the control program and contains an evaluation of whether the program was effective.

“(6) AMOUNT OF GRANT; NUMBER OF GRANTS.—A grant under paragraph (1) for a fiscal year may not exceed $100,000. A political subdivision may not receive more than one grant under such paragraph.

“(b) ASSESSMENT GRANTS TO POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, may make grants to political subdivisions of States to conduct the assessments and to develop the plans that are required in paragraph (3) of subsection (a) as a condition of receiving a grant under paragraph (1) of such subsection.

“(2) AMOUNT OF GRANT; NUMBER OF GRANTS.—A grant under paragraph (1) for a fiscal year may not exceed $10,000. A political subdivision may not receive more than one grant under such paragraph.

“(c) COORDINATION GRANTS TO STATES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, may make grants to States for the purpose of coordinating control programs in the State.

“(2) PREFERENCE IN MAKING GRANTS.—In making grants under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall give preference to States that have one or more political subdivisions with an incidence or prevalence of mosquito-borne disease, or a population of infected mosquitoes, that is substantial relative to political subdivisions in other States.

“(3) CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS.—A grant may be made under paragraph (1) only if—

“(A) the State involved has developed, or agrees to develop, a plan for coordinating control programs in the State, and the plan takes into account any assessments or plans described in subsection (a)(3) that have been conducted or developed, respectively, by political subdivisions in the State;

“(B) in developing such plan, the State consulted or will consult (as the case may be under subparagraph (A)) with political subdivisions in the State that are carrying out or planning to carry out control programs; and

“(C) the State agrees to monitor control programs in the State in order to ensure that the programs are carried out in accordance with such plan, with priority given to coordination of control programs in political subdivisions described in paragraph (2) that are contiguous.

“(4) REPORTS TO SECRETARY.—A grant may be made under paragraph (1) only if the State involved agrees that, promptly after the end of the fiscal year for which the grant is made, the State will submit to the Secretary a report that—

“(A) describes the activities of the State under the grant; and

“(B) contains an evaluation of whether the control programs of political subdivisions in the State were effectively coordinated with each other, which evaluation takes into account any reports that the State received under subsection (a)(5) from such subdivisions.

“(5) AMOUNT OF GRANT; NUMBER OF GRANTS.—A grant under paragraph (1) for a fiscal year may not exceed $10,000. A State may not receive more than one grant under such paragraph.

“(d) APPLICATIONS FOR GRANTS.—A grant may be made under subsection (a), (b), or (c) only if an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary and the application is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this section.

“(e) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary may provide training and technical assistance with respect to the planning, development, and operation of control programs under subsection (a) and assessments and plans under subsection (b). The Secretary may provide such technical assistance directly or through awards of grants or contracts to public and private entities.

“(f) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) CONTROL PROGRAM.—The term ‘control program’ has the meaning indicated for such term in subsection (a)(1).

“(2) POLITICAL SUBDIVISION.—The term ‘political subdivision’ means the local political jurisdiction immediately below the level of State government, including counties, parishes, and boroughs. If State law recognizes an entity of general government that functions in lieu of, and is not within, a county, parish, or borough, the Secretary may recognize an area under the jurisdiction of such other entities of general government as a political subdivision for purposes of this Act.

“(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2004 through 2007. In the case of control programs carried out in response to a mosquito-borne disease that constitutes a public health emergency, the authorization of appropriations under the preceding sentence is in addition to applicable authorizations of appropriations under the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002.”

SEC. 3. RESEARCH PROGRAM OF NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF ENVIRONMENTAL HEALTH SCIENCES.

Subpart 12 of part C of title IV of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 285 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“SEC. 463B. METHODS OF CONTROLLING CERTAIN INSECT POPULATIONS.

“The Director of the Institute shall conduct or support research to identify or develop methods of controlling the population of insects that transmit to humans diseases that have significant adverse health consequences.”

SEC. 4. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING THE WEST NILE VIRUS.

It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the West Nile virus raises concerns about the safety of the nation's blood supply and every effort should be made to protect blood and blood products recipients from infection with the virus;

(2) the Food and Drug Administration should comprehensively review its protocols and regulations for screening of blood and platelet donors and their donated specimens, and report to Congress on the ability of these protocols to protect the blood supply from West Nile virus;

(3) on the basis of a review conducted as provided for in paragraph (2), the Commissioner of Food and Drugs should revise protocols and regulations to protect the blood supply and blood products supply from West Nile virus to the maximum extent possible;

(4) the Commissioner of Food and Drugs should make recommendations on additional authorities that are needed to protect the blood supply and blood product supply from the West Nile virus; and

(5) the Commissioner of Food and Drugs, keeping with procedures to maximize the protection of the public health, should expedite review of appropriate blood screening tests for the West Nile virus.

Mr. BREAU. Mr. President, the West Nile virus has reached epidemic proportions. My home State of Louisiana has seen cases of the disease skyrocket in recent months, with 222 cases and 9 deaths reported to date. But this is not a problem isolated in one State or one region. The Centers for Disease Control, CDC, have reported cases of this mosquito-borne illness in humans in 30 States and the District of Columbia. It is clear, as we have seen in Louisiana, that State governments are overtaxed in money and man-power and simply cannot continue to fight the spread of this disease on their own. The Federal Government needs to work hard and fast to combat this potential public health crisis and assist the hardest hit areas in preventing the loss of even more lives.

Earlier this year, my colleagues in the House of Representatives, Congressmen BILLY TAUZIN and CHRIS JOHN, introduced legislation that would make grants available through the CDC to help States in establishing and maintaining mosquito control programs and prevent mosquito-borne illnesses. Today Senator LANDRIEU and I have introduced companion legislation to the House bill, The Mosquito Abatement for Health and Safety Act, H.R. 4793, of the same title in an effort to quickly make resources available to local governments in Louisiana and across the country that have been on the front lines fighting the spread of the West Nile outbreak.

Both bills would provide money to improve assessment tools, including surveys of potential mosquito breeding areas, and support research initiatives to develop methods of controlling insect populations that spread disease and pose a health threat to humans. In disbursing grant monies, the CDC would give priority to those areas with reported instances of mosquito-borne illnesses in humans or animals.

The country is experiencing an outbreak that is both unfortunate and alarming. Only through improved coordination of state and federal agencies can we begin to address this problem and spare further cases of this deadly disease.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 327— HONORING ERNIE HARWELL

Ms. STABENOW (for herself and Mr. LEVIN) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 327

Whereas Ernie Harwell worked as a Major League Baseball broadcaster for 55 years and as the signature voice of the Detroit Tigers for 42 of those years;

Whereas Ernie Harwell's voice brought the game of baseball to life for Tiger fans, and he was voted Michigan Sportscaster of the year 17 times;

Whereas Ernie Harwell had such a love of baseball that, upon meeting Babe Ruth as a child, he had "The Babe" autograph his shoe because he did not have paper;

Whereas Ernie Harwell called the 1968 and 1984 World Series that crowned the Tigers world champions;

Whereas in 1948, Ernie Harwell became the only broadcaster to be traded for a player when Branch Rickey, general manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, traded Cliff Dapper to the Atlanta Crackers for Harwell;

Whereas Ernie Harwell's memorable moments include broadcasting the debut of Willie Mays in 1951, Bobby Thomson's "shot heard 'round the world" that same year, and Hoyt Wilhelm's no-hitter against the New York Yankees in 1958;

Whereas on August 2, 1981, Ernie Harwell became the fifth broadcaster to be inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame;

Whereas Ernie Harwell brought to life, through the medium of radio, the performances of some of baseball's greats, such as Sparky Anderson, Kirk Gibson, Al Kaline, Denny McLain, Alan Trammell, and many others;

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED AND PROPOSED

SA 4536. Mr. INHOFE (for himself and Mr. NICKLES) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to amendment SA 4472 proposed by Mr. BYRD to the bill H.R. 5093, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

TEXT OF AMENDMENTS

SA 4536. Mr. INHOFE (for himself and Mr. NICKLES) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to amendment SA 4472 proposed by Mr. BYRD to the bill H.R. 5093, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2003, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 127, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

SEC. 1. RECONSTRUCTION OF INTERSTATE 40.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the condition described in subsection (b), notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, in addition to amounts that are otherwise available, $12,000,000 shall be made available, and shall remain available until expended, for reconstruction of the portion of Interstate Route 40 spanning the Arkansas River in the State of Oklahoma that was destroyed as a result of a large collision that occurred on May 26, 2002.

(b) CONDITION.—The condition described in this subsection is that the State of Oklahoma agree that the Federal Government shall—

(1) be subrogated to all claims of the State of Oklahoma for amounts necessary to reconstruct the destroyed portion of Interstate Route 40 against each entity determined to be responsible for the collision, not to exceed $12,000,000 in the aggregate; and

(2) have authority to pursue such claims as are necessary to recover any amounts up to $12,000,000 that are not paid to the State by those entities.

(c) REIMBURSEMENT AND REOBLIGATION OF FUNDS.—Federal funds obligated before the date of enactment of this Act for the reconstruction described in subsection (a)—

(1) may be reimbursed from funds available under this section; and

(2) if reimbursed under paragraph (1), shall be immediately available to the State of Oklahoma for reobligation.

(d) EMERGENCY REQUIREMENT.—The entire amount made available under this section is designated by Congress as an emergency requirement under sections 251(b)(2)(A) and 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 901(b)(2)(A), 902(e)).

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENT AND PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Environment and Public Works be authorized to meet on Friday, September 13, 2002, at 9:30 a.m., to conduct an oversight hearing to receive testimony on the implementation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan. The hearing will be held in SD-406.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HONORING ERNIE HARWELL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. Res. 327, submitted earlier today by Senators STABENOW and LEVIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 327) honoring Ernie Harwell.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I rise to submit a resolution, along with Senator LEVIN, to honor Ernie Harwell, the voice of the Detroit Tigers. As Tiger fans across the country know, Ernie Harwell is retiring this year after broadcasting major league baseball for 55 years, the last 42 of which were in Detroit.

Ernie Harwell has broadcast some of the great moments in baseball, including the debut of Willie Mays, Bobby Thompson's "shot heard round the world" and Hoyt Wilhelm's famous no-hitter against the Yankees in 1958.

In addition, he also called the Tigers' last two World Series victories in 1968 and 1984. He also brought to life the performances of some of baseball's greats, like Sparky Anderson, Kirk Gibson, Al Kaline, Denny McLain, Alan Trammell and many others.

Tigers fans have such fond memories of Ernie Harwell, it is hard to believe that he will not be in the broadcast booth next year. Since Sunday, September 15 is Ernie Harwell Day at Comerica Park in Detroit, Senator LEVIN and I wanted to take up and pass this resolution congratulating Ernie on his great career and wishing him the best of luck in retirement.

I hope my colleagues will support this resolution.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am pleased and honored to join my colleague from Michigan, Senator STABENOW, in offering a resolution commemorating the achievements and retirement of Ernie Harwell. Ernie, a Hall of Fame broadcaster, will conclude his remarkable 55-year career upon calling his last game for the Detroit Tigers this season. For most of the last 42 years, Ernie has served as the voice of the Tigers, and I know that Detroit fans, as well as baseball fans everywhere, will miss Ernie's distinctive voice and irreplaceable baseball wit. In a city rich with baseball tradition, Ernie is as much of a part of Tiger baseball as the Olde English D and Tiger Stadium.

For four decades, Ernie Harwell's unwaveringly calm voice has provided Tigers fans with an incomparable mixture of play-by-play description, baseball history, and sensible statistics. Much of Ernie's appeal grew out of the fact that he almost never lets emotion overtake him. He lets his words, his description of the game, paint a vivid picture of the events for the listeners at home.

Ernie Harwell was born on January 25, 1918, in Washington, GA. As a boy, he delivered newspapers on a route that included the famed author Margaret Mitchell's home. Before launching his sports career, Ernie served as a Marine in World War II. He also acted in several movies including "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." He began his baseball career as a sportswriter and copy editor for the Atlanta Constitution. Luckily for us, he did not stay in that position long; in 1943 he left to become an announcer for the Southern Association's Atlanta Crackers.

Ernie's skills were quickly recognized in Atlanta, and in 1948 he became the only announcer ever traded for a player! Branch Rickey, the General Manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, traded catcher Cliff Dapper to the Crackers to allow Ernie to break his contract. His tenure in Brooklyn was highlighted by calling Jackie Robinson's best season, 1949, when Robinson was awarded the Most Valuable Player award for the National League while leading the Dodgers to the pennant.

The next year, Ernie left Brooklyn to go across town and call New York Giants games on the burgeoning medium of television. While there, he called Willie Mays's debut game in 1951 and Bobby Thomson's "Shot Heard 'Round the World" at the end of that season when the Giants won the pennant. Unlike Russ Hodges' who shouted "The Giants win the pennant!", Ernie stuck to his style and simply said "it's gone" when the ball shot off Thomson's bat. That was all baseball fans needed.

After a short stint as the first broadcaster of the Baltimore Orioles, he was hired as the voice of the Detroit Tigers, where he has stayed for 42 of the last 43 years. Ernie quickly became a part of the Tigers family. "If you do this job for a while in one city and you're pretty good, you become part of the family," he once said. "They take you to the beaches and the mountains and the cottages, the workplace and the kitchen. That's gratifying, but it's sort of humbling, too, that people are that interested and they listen."

Ernie called the 1968 and 1984 World Series that crowned the Tigers world champions. He was in Detroit for the careers of many baseball greats, including the soon-to-retire Travis Fryman, now with the Cleveland Indians. Fryman, one of Ernie's favorite players in Detroit, presented him with an Indians hat and jersey during the Tigers' last trip to Cleveland. During that series, Indians officials named the visiting radio booth in the Jacobs Field press box the "Ernie Harwell Visiting Radio Booth."

The true devotion of Tigers fans to Ernie Harwell was made loud and clear when the Tigers' then-new management informed Ernie that 1991 would be his last season as the Tigers' broadcaster. They said they wanted to go with a younger and newer voice. Following a public outcry, the Motor City brought home its familiar voice in time for the 1993 season. He has been with Detroit ever since.

Ernie's achievements have been recognized on both the local and national stage. He has been voted Michigan Sportscaster of the Year 17 times and is a member of the Michigan Sports Hall of Fame. In 1981 he was just the fifth broadcaster to be elected to Baseball's Hall of Fame. In 1988 he became a member of the Radio Hall of Fame and the following year he was elected to the National Sportscasters Hall of Fame.

Ernie's talents extend beyond the microphone. He is an accomplished author and songwriter. He has authored such books as Tuned to Baseball, Diamond Gems and The Babe Signed My Shoe, and coauthored or contributed to several other books about the game of baseball. In addition to his literary works, Ernie has also had more than 50 of his songs professionally recorded.

Considering that he has announced games over an unprecedented seven decades, Ernie will always be remembered best as a broadcaster; however, his personality and earnestness have endeared him to generations of listeners as a friend. To say that Ernie Harwell is beloved by the citizens of Michigan would be an understatement, which is why it comes with great regret that we are marking his retirement.

Ernie Harwell once said that a successful play-by-play man "should have the enthusiasm of a fan, the background knowledge of a writer, the reflexes of a ballplayer, and the impartiality of an umpire." I think he has exemplified these qualities, and he brought so much more to the game. Ernie Harwell is a Detroit hero and a baseball legend. While some of the Tigers' recent years have been forgettable, Ernie Harwell will never be.

As much as we will miss Ernie, we wish him well as he begins his life away from the microphone. I join the citizens of Michigan in thanking Ernie Harwell for his decades of outstanding service to the Detroit Tigers and the broadcasting community. I know my colleagues in the Senate will join me in supporting this resolution in his honor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and the preamble be agreed to en bloc, that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 327) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 327

Whereas Ernie Harwell worked as a Major League Baseball broadcaster for 55 years and as the signature voice of the Detroit Tigers for 42 of those years;

Whereas Ernie Harwell's voice brought the game of baseball to life for Tiger fans, and he was voted Michigan Sportscaster of the year 17 times;

Whereas Ernie Harwell had such a love of baseball that, upon meeting Babe Ruth as a child, he had "The Babe" autograph his shoe because he did not have paper;

Whereas Ernie Harwell called the 1968 and 1984 World Series that crowned the Tigers world champions;

Whereas in 1948, Ernie Harwell became the only broadcaster to be traded for a player when Branch Rickey, general manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, traded Cliff Dapper to the Atlanta Crackers for Harwell;

Whereas Ernie Harwell's memorable moments include broadcasting the debut of Willie Mays in 1951, Bobby Thomson's "shot heard 'round the world" that same year, and Hoyt Wilhelm's no-hitter against the New York Yankees in 1958;

Whereas on August 2, 1981, Ernie Harwell became the fifth broadcaster to be inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame;

Whereas Ernie Harwell brought to life, through the medium of radio, the performances of some of baseball's greats, such as Sparky Anderson, Kirk Gibson, Al Kaline, Denny McLain, Alan Trammell, and many others;

Whereas Detroit Tiger fans all over the country have fond memories of Ernie Harwell, summer, and Tiger victories: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) honors and celebrates the achievements of Ernie Harwell;

(2) wishes Ernie Harwell good health and happiness in his retirement; and

(3) directs the Secretary of the Senate to transmit a copy of this resolution to Ernie Harwell.

AMENDING SECTION 5307 OF TITLE 49, UNITED STATES CODE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, by the authority of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of H.R. 5157 just received from the House and at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5157) to amend section 5307 of title 49, United States Code, to allow transit systems in urbanized areas that, for the first time, exceeded 200,000 in population according to the 2000 census to retain flexibility in the use of Federal transit formula grants in fiscal year 2003, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read three times, passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements be printed in the RECORD, without further intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 5157) was read the third time and passed.

INTERNATIONAL DISABILITY AND VICTIMS OF LANDMINES, CIVIL STRIFE AND WARFARE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 2001

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, at the request of the distinguished majority leader and the assistant leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 528, S. 1777.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1777) to authorize assistance for individuals with disabilities in foreign countries, including victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "International Disability and Victims of Landmines, Civil Strife and Warfare Assistance Act of [2001] 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following finding:

(1)(A) According to the International Committee of the Red Cross, there are tens of millions of landmines in over 60 countries around the world, and it has estimated that as many as 24,000 people are maimed or killed each year by landmines, mostly civilians, resulting in amputations and disabilities of various kinds.

(B) While the United States Government invests more than $100,000,000 in mine action programs annually, including funding for mine awareness and demining training programs, only about ten percent of these funds go to directly aid landmine victims.

(C) The Patrick Leahy War Victims Fund, administered by the United States Agency for International Development, has provided essential prosthetics and rehabilitation for landmine and other war victims in developing countries who are disabled and has provided long-term sustainable improvements in quality of life for victims of civil strife and warfare, addressing such issues as barrier-free accessibility, reduction of social stigmatization, and increasing economic opportunities.

(D) Enhanced coordination is needed among Federal agencies that carry out assistance programs in foreign countries for victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare to make better use of interagency expertise and resources.

(2) According to a review of Poverty and Disability commissioned by the World Bank, "disabled people have lower education and income levels than the rest of the population. They are more likely to have incomes below poverty level than the non-disabled population, and they are less likely to have savings and other assets . . . [t]he links between poverty and disability go two ways—not only does disability add to the risk of poverty, but conditions of poverty add to the risk of disability."

(3) Numerous international human rights conventions and declarations recognize the need to protect the rights of individuals regardless of their status, including those individuals with disabilities, through the principles of equality and non-discrimination.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this Act is to authorize assistance for individuals with disabilities, including victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare.

SEC. 3. INTERNATIONAL DISABILITIES AND WAR VICTIMS ASSISTANCE.

The Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 134 the following:

"SEC. 135. INTERNATIONAL DISABILITIES AND WAR VICTIMS ASSISTANCE.

"(a) AUTHORIZATION.—The President, [acting through the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development,] is authorized to furnish assistance to individuals with disabilities, including victims of civil strife and warfare, in foreign countries.

"(b) ACTIVITIES.—The programs established pursuant to subsection (a) may include programs, projects, and activities such as the following:

"(1) Development of local capacity to provide medical and rehabilitation services for individuals with disabilities, including victims of civil strife and warfare, in foreign countries, such as—

"(A) support for and training of medical professionals, including surgeons, nurses, and physical therapists, to provide effective emergency and other medical care and for the development of training manuals relating to first aid and other medical treatment;

"(B) support for sustainable prosthetic and orthotic services; and

"(C) psychological and social rehabilitation of such individuals, together with their families as appropriate, for the reintegration of such individuals into local communities.

"(2) Support for policy reform and [advocacy] educational efforts related to the needs and abilities of individuals with disabilities, including victims of civil strife and warfare.

"(3) Coordination of programs established pursuant to subsection (a) with existing programs for individuals with disabilities, including victims of civil strife and warfare, in foreign countries.

"(4) Support for establishment of appropriate entities in foreign countries to coordinate programs, projects, and activities related to assistance for individuals with disabilities, including victims of civil strife and warfare.

"(5) Support for primary, secondary, and vocational education, public awareness and training programs and other activities that help prevent war-related injuries and assist individuals with disabilities, including victims of civil strife and warfare, with their reintegration into society and their ability to make sustained social and economic contributions to society.

"(c) PRIORITY.—To the maximum extent feasible, assistance under this section shall be provided through nongovernmental organizations, and, as appropriate, through governments to establish appropriate norms, standards, and policies related to rehabilitation and issues affecting individuals with disabilities, including victims of civil strife and warfare.

"(d) FUNDING.—Amounts made available [for a fiscal year] to carry out the other provisions of this part (including chapter 4 of part II of this Act) and the Support for East European Democracy (SEED) Act of 1989 are authorized to be made available [for such fiscal year] to carry out this section and are authorized to be provided notwithstanding any other provision of law."

SEC. 4. RESEARCH, PREVENTION, AND ASSISTANCE RELATED TO INTERNATIONAL DISABILITIES AND LANDMINE AND OTHER WAR VICTIMS.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, is authorized—

(A) to conduct programs in foreign countries related to individuals with disabilities, including victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare;

(B) to provide grants to nongovernmental organizations for the purpose of carrying out research, prevention, public awareness and assistance programs in foreign countries related to individuals with disabilities, including victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare.

(2) APPROVAL OF SECRETARY OF STATE.—Activities under programs established pursuant to paragraph (1) may be carried out in foreign countries only [after consultation] in coordination with the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development, and upon approval for such activities in such countries by the Secretary of State.

(b) ACTIVITIES.—Programs established pursuant to subsection (a) may include the following activities:

(1) Research on trauma, physical, psychological, and social rehabilitation, and continuing medical care related to individuals with disabilities, including victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare, including—

(A) conducting research on psychological and social factors that lead to successful recovery;

(B) developing, testing, and evaluating model interventions that reduce post-traumatic stress and promote health and well-being;

(C) developing basic instruction tools for initial medical response to traumatic injuries; and

(D) developing basic instruction manuals for patients and healthcare providers, including for emergency and follow-up care, proper amputation procedures, and reconstructive surgery.

(2) Facilitation of peer support networks for individuals with disabilities, including victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare, in foreign countries, including—

(A) establishment of organizations at the local level, administered by such individuals, to assess and address the physical, psychological, economic and social rehabilitation and other needs of such individuals, together with their families as appropriate, for the purpose of economic and social reintegration into local communities; and

(B) training related to the implementation of such peer support networks, including training of outreach workers to assist in the establishment of organizations such as those described in subparagraph (A) and assistance to facilitate the use of the networks by such individuals.

(3) Sharing of expertise from limb-loss and disability research centers in the United States with similar centers and facilities in war-affected countries, including promoting increased health for individuals with limb loss and limb deficiency and epidemiological research on secondary medical conditions related to limb loss and limb deficiency.

(4) Developing a database of best practices to address the needs of the war-related disabled through comprehensive examination of support activities related to such disability and access to medical care and supplies.

(C) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Health and Human Services to carry out this section such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years [2002] 2003 through 2004.

SEC. 5. EXPERTISE OF THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.

The Secretary of Veterans Affairs is authorized—

(1) to provide advice and expertise on prosthetics, orthotics, physical and psychological rehabilitation and treatment, and disability assistance to other Federal departments and agencies, including providing for temporary assignment on a non-reimbursable basis of appropriate Department of Veterans Affairs personnel, with respect to the implementation of programs to provide assistance to victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare in foreign countries and landmine research and health-related programs, including programs established pursuant to section 135 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (as added by section 3 of this Act) and programs established pursuant to section 4 of this Act; and

(2) to provide technical assistance to private voluntary organizations on a reimbursable basis with respect to the planning, development, operation, and evaluation of such landmine assistance, research, and prevention programs.

[SEC. 6. INTERAGENCY GROUP.]

[(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of State shall establish and chair an interagency group to ensure coordination of all Federal programs that furnish assistance to victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare, and conduct landmine research, demining and prevention programs.

[(b) OTHER MEMBERS.—Members of the interagency group shall include, but not be limited to, representatives from—

[(1) the United States Agency for International Development;

[(2) the Department of Health and Human Services;

[(3) the Department of Education;

[(4) the Department of Defense; and

[(5) the Department of Veterans Affairs.

[(c) PUBLIC MEETINGS.—At least once each calendar year, the interagency group should hold a public meeting in order to afford an opportunity for any person to present views regarding the activities of the United States Government with respect to assistance to victims of landmines and other victims of civil strife and warfare and related programs. The Secretary of State shall maintain a record of each meeting and shall make the record available to the public.]

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the committee amendments be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, the bill, as amended, be read the third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD, without intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill (S. 1777), as amended, was read the third time and passed, as follows:

THANKING SENATE PERSONNEL

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, let me thank again our very dedicated staff and the officers of the Senate, the security personnel, the committee staff people, and in particular those Senators who have presided this afternoon.

And I should not forget the pages. I thank them too.

Let me also thank the people who work here at these desks. Many times they have to come to Senators to tell them what the situation is. It may not be a situation that the Senator likes. That is not because of the person who carries the message to the Senator. People who convey the message are told to carry the message.

If I have said anything today that would offend any person in the Senate family, I certainly want to apologize.

I don't see any other Senators seeking recognition.

I again thank the Senator from Minnesota for presiding at this hour, at 4:15 p.m.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY SEPTEMBER 17, 2002

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in adjournment until 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, September 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, by the way, that was the day in 1787 that the Constitutional Convention completed its work—September 17, 1787. What a day. What a great day for free peoples, for people who have the liberty and freedom to speak. It devised a system of government, a government of the people, by the people, and for the people—a government of separation of powers and checks and balances.

I thank those Framers for what they did on July 16, 1787, when they decided under a great compromise which provided for a Senate—a Senate where Members would represent the States with two Senators from each State so that a small State, or a large State, or medium-size State would have an equal voice in this Senate. Let us remember that as we go along.

Again, I say that day on September 17, 1787, there were 39 signers who put their names on this Constitution, including John Milton Niles, a Senator from Connecticut. And his relative sits in the chair today, Senator DAYTON from Minnesota.

Let me begin again so that the RECORD will show it as read in its completeness and without interruption.
